The commission's report points out that producers, in the interests of their businesses, are impelled to fix the best possible resale prices, and the unwritten laws of competition, where real competition prevails, assure the adoption of this policy, and such a scale of resale prices as shall assure fair profits to both wholesalers and retailers. It is asserted that the consuming public does not enjoy advantages through unfair price cutting great enough to compensate for the demoralization of production and distribution resulting therefrom.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has presented, from time to time, arguments used by both sides in this controversy.

Without price-cutting, it is obvious, a vital factor in competition in merchandising would be eliminated. Competition between merchants has always been considered an automatic safeguard for the consumer. The power to both fix and enforce a price on a necessary product, it has been contended, gives to a manufacturer the right to impose a tax on consumers. The position of the commission, therefore, that this power should not be vested, without restraint, in the producers of commodities, is a sound one. The assertion that it may be given to producers subject to review by a Government board—and this is the outstanding recommendation of the commission's report—is open to question.

The contention of the producers of widely advertised branded products that they should be protected from that species of price cutting which is merely a lure on the part of dishonest merchants—willing to take a loss on products well known and of established selling prices in order to carry the impression that they make similar price reductions on all other goods—appeals to all fair minded people. But to establish the principle that a merchant may not exercise his business judgment in fixing the resale prices of goods to which he has acquired full title would open the way leading toward the elimination of competition in selling prices for all merchandise. Under such a merchandising condition the manufacturers of the country would be able to dictate effectually prices to consumers, as well as to control the profits of merchants.

Would a Government Board of Review be a sufficient safeguard for the people against possible combinations of manufacturers for the maintenance of high profits? Would not competitions between manufacturers practically cease, in time, and prices become a matter of mutual agreement between them?

What effect would controlled resale prices have upon store advertising? The prospective economy of the city will tell you that the stores would confine their advertising of price-controlled products to the education of the people to their merits and the creation of a demand for them. The opponents of such a policy will assure you that it would result in a great decrease in the normal volume of advertising—a volume based as much upon competition in selling prices as upon the merits of the goods offered.

This last argument will be met, of course, by the statement that only such products are included in the controlled resale price schedules as are trademarked or branded, and already widely advertised; and that these articles will continue to be advertised in order that their comparative merits shall be steadily urged and that their fixed retail prices shall become and remain always established in the public mind. They will contend that the good-will enjoyed by such products has been created largely through advertising—and through advertising a standard retail price—and that it will have to be maintained by the same means.

The proposal for a Board of Review looks toward the creation of a check upon oppressive trade practices and unfair price-fixation. Will the manufacturers of branded products accept this as a solution of their difficulties? Will they relish the prospect of being haled to court upon the complaint of any retailer or consumer as to unjust prices? On the other hand, is it fair to manufacturers of unbranded goods that certain producers shall have the benefit of Government sanction of their prices? Such sanction would have great advertising value. It would eventually compel all manufacturers to trade-mark and brand and widely advertise their products. The time would come, perhaps, when a department store advertisement would contain few if any quotations of competitive prices—and some people will tell us that this would mean extracting all the salt and savour from such advertising, taking away from it the element of purse-appeal which it now holds for women.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER submits these observations upon some of the factors involved in the proposed legislation for the consideration of advertisers and publishers alike. The problem is one of the most far-reaching importance in our business life. Full and frank discussion should precede Federal legislation—and the people themselves, the ultimate consumers, should be participants in the discussion in order that no unwise steps should be taken. The newspapers of the country should not leave this problem to professional economists exclusively. It should be brought to the great open forum, and considered in the full light.

THE WAR DEPARTMENT'S CAMPAIGN OF ADVERTISING

THE fact that the War Department has made a distinct success of its first paid advertising campaign for recruits—at any rate the first campaign of the kind planned on adequate lines—is a matter for satisfaction to all good citizens.

The vision and courage of Secretary Baker, demonstrated by his splendid initiative in adopting a policy which other Government officials have opposed, have been completely vindicated by the results. The cost of securing recruits for the Army has been reduced by half.

Had ex-Secretary McAdoo shown equal understanding of the possibilities of Government advertising—conducted on a business basis—the cost of selling the great Liberty Loans might have been cut in two! But Mr. McAdoo was sure that the Government could not advertise unless every medium in the country should be used without discrimination. He visualized the possibilities of political pressure from the publishers who might have considered themselves slighted in the distribution of the appropriations.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER pointed out to Mr. McAdoo that the Government would find it possible to buy advertising on the same basis that other commodities are bought. The War Department has found that this is the fact. Newspapers were used in but fifty-six cities—and these were cities in which recruiting officers were located. There has come to EDITOR & PUBLISHER but one protest from any source. This was from a publisher of a newspaper in a city where a branch recruiting office is maintained. He believed that the advertising should be extended to cover the fields of these branch offices. It is said that this will be done in a future campaign.

Having been the pioneer advocate of a paid advertising policy by the Government, and believing who e-heartedly in the soundness of such a policy and in its value to the nation, EDITOR & PUBLISHER offers to Secretary Baker cordial congratulations on the success of the first broad-gauge campaign in the interests of Army recruiting. A big thing has been well done—and a precedent has been created which will have HISTORIC significance.

THE TREND TOWARD THE NEWSPAPERS

WITH the publication in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of January 11, 1919, of a complete list of the English-language daily newspapers of the United States, together with their authoritative circulation figures and agate line advertising rates, followed by exhaustive analysis of costs for sectional campaigns in the newspapers, there was inaugurated what may be called a new era of interest in the possibilities of daily newspaper advertising on the part of numerous national advertisers.

The information then published had never before been made available generally to advertisers. Indeed, with few exceptions, it had not been available to the advertising agencies of the country. To secure such facts and figures and to keep them up to date had always been a very expensive undertaking, and one not often attempted in a comprehensive way even by the big space buyers.

The information contained in the lists and tabulations presented in EDITOR & PUBLISHER in succeeding issues has covered six months, it served space buyers so well that the demands for extra copies and reprints became very large. The case of the newspapers was made, through this series of publication of actual facts and figures as to circulation and advertising rates, so convincing that many appropriations which would, in the old days, have been expended in all sorts of media have been concentrated upon newspaper campaigns.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER, through the valuable co-operation of Barbour's Rate Sheets, Inc., has completed a thorough revision of the circulation figures and advertising rates of all the English-language dailies of the country, and will present this up-to-date information in the issue for July 24. This feature will not only be of great interest to all publishers, but will serve national advertisers, advertising agencies and newspapers generally as a convenient guide in planning the extensive Fall campaigns now in preparation.

This service on the part of EDITOR & PUBLISHER has been pronounced the most valuable ever rendered to the cause of newspaper advertising. It has had much to do with the present strong trend toward localized national advertising campaigns. The issue of July 24 will have, consequently, a permanent value. It will remain the standard work of reference for space buyers for half a year. Copies will be at a premium, if we are to judge by the previous experience, long before the time shall have arrived for the next semi-annual revision.

WHEN President W. H. Johns, of the A. A. A. A., asked the southern publishers for "complete support, with no commission to advertisers direct, even to the refusal of business," he merely stated a business principle which already prevails among a vast majority of publishers of daily newspapers throughout the country. That this policy will become universal ere long is not to be doubted;

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Elbert H. Baker, president and general manager of the Cleveland Plain Dealer Publishing Company, and Mrs. Baker are spending the summer in Tacoma. Mr. Baker and his son, Frank S. Baker, are owners of the Tacoma News-Tribune and the Tacoma Daily and Sunday Ledger. During his stay in the Pacific Northwest Mr. Baker will visit Alaska.

James E. Doyle, recently appointed deputy state commissioner of public works for New York State, was tendered a watch and traveling bag by his associates on the Syracuse Herald staff, with which he had been associated for 15 years as reporter, city editor and managing editor, on accepting his new office.

James Thomas Williams, Jr., of the Boston Evening Transcript, has been presented by the Italian Government with the decoration of Commander of the Crown in appreciation of the writings during the war.

J. Stewart Woodhouse, who has worked in the editorial departments of newspapers in Cedar Rapids, Ottumwa and Des Moines, Ia., has become a scenario writer at Hollywood, Cal., for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Edgar R. Bean, for three years night editor of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman, is now on the copy desk of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Ashby Lovelace, of Little Rock, Ark., former managing editor of the Arkansas Democrat, has joined the editorial staff of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman.

T. F. Killian, city editor for the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman, has resigned to become director of publicity for the Oklahoma State Board of Health.

Walter M. Harrison, managing editor of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman and Times, has been chosen by Governor Robertson as chairman of a committee to come to New York to present a silver service to the battleship Oklahoma.

Henry Hazlitt, formerly on the financial staff of the New York Tribune, has become associated with the Mechanics and Metals National Bank, New York.

Charles B. Welch, editor and general manager of the Tacoma News-Tribune, and Mrs. Welch and two sons, have just returned from a month's trip along the Pacific Coast and Southern California.

NOW BACK WHERE HE STARTED, BUT IS BOSS

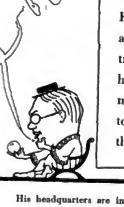
C. W. Jones, the New advertising manager of the Minneapolis Journal, is back where he started—not in rank, however, but in location, since he began his business career six years ago in the classified advertising department of that newspaper.

C. W. Jones.

He has done a lot of things and done them well, since. He was in the copy department of Lord & Thomas for two years, and was copy writer and plan man for the Erwin & Wasey Company for the same length of time, assisting on the Goodyear Rubber account.

"So expert have I become in the problems of the rubber business that every time I speak, a tire rolls out of my mouth," he assures Editor & Publisher.

He went into government service in 1918, being associated with the Committee on Classification of Personnel, and later with the Personnel Branch of the General Staff. After the armistice, he was associated for six months with O'Hara & Ormsbee, Inc., of New York City.



WORLD CHANGES AD STAFF

New Representatives Named in Chicago and Detroit—Cornell to N. Y.

Because of increased business and additions to territory, the New York World and Evening World has added James E. Middleton to the staff of its western office at Chicago. Mr. Middleton, formerly of New York, has for fifteen years been in charge of the Western office of the J. P. McKinney special agency. Mr. Middleton and A. Don Campbell of the World's Chicago office are well known in the western advertising field, and offices are maintained at 1603 Mallers building.

Neil D. McGinn, formerly of the Detroit Journal, has assumed charge of the Detroit office and the Michigan and Ohio territory of the New York World and Evening World, succeeding Robert H. Cornell, who has resumed connection with the advertising staff of the World at the Park Row publication offices. The World's Detroit office remains at 429 Ford building.

Iowa

The territory that responds best to newspaper advertising will always be the one where wealth is increasing faster than population.

Witness Iowa, best market of all, where the individual income from farm crops alone increased from $120 per capita in 1890 to $400 per capita for 1918!

Iowa's two millions can buy as much as some other four millions, because they have the resources—wealth—to make necessities of semi-luxuries.

They buy stocks, bonds, books, magazines, clothes, motors, Chippendales,—anything and everything good enough to be temptingly advertised in their daily newspapers.

A trial or a try-out in these papers will convert you to Iowa and its newspapers:

HE JUST CAN'T FORGET THE OLD GULF COAST

Although he has changed his title of "newspaper man," which he held for more than fourteen years, to that of "trade journalist," and has moved up to St. Louis, A. R. Kriechbaum keeps in close touch with many friends on the daily papers along the Gulf of Mexico. He is now officially known as "staff representative" of Lumber, a national lumber trade journal published at St. Louis, but he frequently is sent through the lumber-producing territory of Texas and Louisiana and on every trip he makes it a point to call upon old newspaper associates.

A. R. KRIECHBAUM.

Starting in the year 1904 as cub reporter on the Sherman (Tex.) Democrat, Mr. Kriechbaum traveled about the country, working on numerous papers. For four years, he conducted a correspondence bureau, covering the Southeast Texas field for a dozen newspapers and trade journals.

Three years ago he and a few other Texas newspaper men organized the Gulf Coast Press Association, the memlittle over a year ago he was elected bers of which are employed on daily and weekly publications throughout the Gulf coast of Texas and Louisiana. Alfred Patek Passes Away at Denver, Colorado

Was Widely Known as Newspaper Man—Stoked Reputation on Titanic Story and Won Out

DENVER, July 12—Alfred Patek, one of the most widely known newspaper men in the West, died July 7 in Denver. He was for a number of years connected with the New York World and the Hearst newspapers, coming to Colorado in 1900 as managing editor of the Denver Times. During intervals he was managing editor of the Denver Post, editor of Denver Municipal Facts, secretary to the governor, and State Immigration Commissioner.

Mr. Patek was a man of unusually aggressive personality and fairly exuded ideas. It is no exaggeration to say that he is regarded by those who were associated with him as the greatest Colorado newspaper man of the decade. One of the historic "scoops" which illustrates his uncanny news sense occurred in connection with the Titanic disaster, when he was managing editor of the Denver Times. The wire that the Titanic had struck an iceberg reached Denver at 2 a. m. and was later discounted by denials, which reported that the great ship had met with a narrow escape but was afloat.

In spite of opposition from his entire staff, Mr. Patek insisted that one of the great stories of the century had "broken," and he "played it up" as few stories have been played up before or since. When the Times went on the street, it contained eight solid pages of text and pictures relative to the disaster, while contemporaries carried a scant half-column report of the rumors. Despite the misgivings of his associates, Mr. Patek stuck to his reputation as a newspaper man that his intuitions had served him correctly—that the Times had "scooped" the West on a great story. Five minutes after the papers were on the streets, a flash came over the wires confirming the disaster.

Mr. Patek's daughter is Florence Patek, well known newspaper woman of Chicago.

FRANK McLAUGHLIN

Was Publisher of Old Philadelphia Times and Manager of N. Y. Recorder

Frank McLaughlin, of the New York Sun, died Saturday at Pelham, N. Y., after a short illness of a complication of diseases. He was widely and popularly known in newspaper circles through connections in executive positions with prominent daily newspapers.

Mr. McLaughlin was born in Philadelphia in 1859, the son of John McLaughlin, who, with a brother, Frank, established and controlled the Philadelphia Times. He succeeded his uncle as publisher of the Philadelphia Times. Later a readjustment of the estate of his uncle necessitated the sale of the newspaper, and Mr. McLaughlin came to New York and became connected with the Times, after which he was business manager of the Recorder.

Subsequently he became one of the business executives of the Sun, and for a number of years was its advertising manager. His service with the Sun was in two periods, the second of which was closed by his death on Saturday. In his last capacity he was a member of the advertising staff.

Mr. McLaughlin was a man of many warm friends. He was fond of music and painting, and was a linguist of talent, speaking French, Spanish and several other languages. He leaves a widow, one daughter and one son. His funeral was from St. Patrick's Cathedral Tuesday.

Obituary

FREDERICK EVANS, of Newark, N. J., newspaper man, officer in many large corporations and at one time secretary to the Vice-president of the United States, died July 11 at Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Evans was born in 1862 at Brecknockshire, Wales, and on being graduated from Princeton became a reporter on the Philadelphia Public Ledger. He came to New York and for a time was employed by the Times, later going to the Tribune, where he became assistant editor. In 1889 he went to Newark as managing editor of the Daily Advertiser, of which he later became editor in chief and one of the owners.

In the campaign which resulted in the election of President McKinley Mr. Evans served in the publicity department of the Republican national campaign, and after the election became secretary to Vice-president Hobart. Upon Mr. Hobart's death he entered business. For a period ending 1913 he was editor of Hampton's Magazine and an owner. Subsequently he was an editorial writer on the Wall Street Journal. Mr. Evans was a bachelor. He is survived by two brothers, one of whom, William H. Evans, of Philadelphia, was formerly a Newark newspaper man.

ARCHIBALD B. O. SULLIVAN, writer of short stories and a contributor to English magazines, died recently of heart disease in New York. He was 34 years old.

EDWARD S. ABELES, well known actor, who died in New York July 10, was early in life a newspaper man in St. Louis, where he was born. He was 49 years old.

FRANK G. COLTMAN, music critic and assistant dramatic critic of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Herald, died recently after a brief illness. Before engaging in newspaper work in Rochester, in 1911, he had been a portrayer of comedy characters on the stage.

GEORGE FOLSOM, a pioneer in field of pen and ink newspaper sketches and one of two artists on the New York World when Joseph Pulitzer acquired the newspaper in 1883, died recently at his home in New York, aged 69.

W. B. KIRKPATRICK, former owner of the Amonia (Conn.) Sentinel, who had been ill since January, died recently of apoplexy, at Philadelphia. He was 50 years old.

COL. JAMES SIMMONS, president of the Charleston News and Courier Company, died at his home in that city aged 80 years.

MISS ABIGAIL WHIPPLE COOKE, society editor of the Providence Journal for many years, died last week.

WILLIS GRANT MURRAY, formerly a San Francisco and South Bend newspaper man, but lately a mechanical engineer and designer, died in New York, July 13.

CHARLES J. CURRAN, for years a compositor on the Brooklyn Times and the New York Sun, died July 10 in Brooklyn, aged 73 years.

FRED R. JOHNSON of the New York Sun staff, a well known telegrapher, died suddenly, June 14.

JOHN C. EARLE, head of the printing department of the Sherwin-Williams Company, Cleveland, for 21 years, died a few days ago.

CLAYTON WOOD HOLMES, former owner and publisher of the Elmira (N. Y.) Daily Advertiser, a leading business man, writer, and public official, died July 14 at his home in Elmira, aged 71 years.

REV. F. W. BOYLE, formerly in the mailing department of the Dallas News, died recently at San Jose, Costa Rica, where he had been a missionary for several years. He is a brother-in-law of C. M. Seay, of the Dallas Evening Journal.

HAMILTON DONEY, a newsdealer for nearly fifty years in Saratoga, N. Y., died July 8.

HARRY A. DONNELLY, a newspaper man, was found dead in his bed at Trenton, N. J., a few days ago.

DR. ABRAHAM JACOBI, known as "the grand old man of American medicine," who died at Lake George July 11, was widely noted as a writer and editor of medical publications. He was in his ninetieth year. Dr. Jacobi was the father-in-law of George McAneny, executive manager of the New York Times.

JOSEPH DEMLING, 53 years old, city editor of the Chicago Abendpost since 1904, died suddenly a few days ago of kidney trouble. Mr. Demling came to the United States in 1884 and settled in Milwaukee. He joined the Milwaukee Herold as a reporter, subsequently rising to the position of managing editor. He moved to Chicago in 1896 as city editor of the Illinois Staats-Zeitung.

MARIE LOUISE CORTRIGHT, wife of Louis H. Cortright, assistant advertising manager of the Bridgeport Post Publishing Company, died July 4. Four children survive with the husband.

WILLIAM MORTON PAYNE, noted literary critic, died in Chicago July 11, aged 61 years.

REV. JOHN HERMAN HEUSER, D. D., editor of the Orphans' Friend, is dead at Carlstad, N. J., aged 79 years.

400 Editors Revel in Woods of Northern Minnesota

Hold Annual Outing, Contest for Athletic Supremacy and Pledge War Against Anarchy

BEMIDJI, Minn., July 13.—No Knights of the Quill or ticklers of the typewriter ever enjoyed such an outing as fell to the lot of 400 members of the Northern Minnesota Editorial Association. They were buried in the heart of the vast pine wilderness of the North Star State, entertained by a great lumber corporation and inducted into the mysteries of scientific forestry in Itasca Park.

There was also a large delegation of Southern Minnesota editors. The center of operations was at Birchmont, near Bemidji. There were athletic contests for men and women, of which the Southern Minnesotans won the largest portion, a logging camp dinner served by the Crookston Lumber Company, with 300 pounds of pike from Red Lake, and, of course, scores of speeches, all short.

H. Z. Mitchell of the Bemidji Sentinel won the contest for four-minute speeches.

Among the speakers at an evening meeting were Secretary of State Julius A. Schmahl, a newspaperman who is said to have the largest acquaintance in the state of any man in Minnesota, and T. C. Norris, premier of Manitoba. The general subject was "A Bigger Minnesota." Mr. Norris reviewed the Winnipeg strike and blamed the Bolshevik for all the trouble. He pleaded for closer unity between the United States and Great Britain; "and God help the enemy," he exclaimed, "when the English-speaking people are united!"

"Canadians will never again allow the red flag to fly within the Dominion," said another speaker, former Mayor R. G. Waugh of Winnipeg. "We are done with that element forever."

A memorial service was held for the late Frank J. Meyst of Minneapolis, so beloved of all Minnesota newspaper publishers, editors and printers. State Forester W. T. Cox and Carlos Avery, state game and fish commissioner and owner of the Henderson Independent, showed how the work of their respective departments is conducted and what has been accomplished.

Thierry Off to Africa

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 15.—Edward M. Thierry, reporter for the Cleveland Press and Newspaper Enterprise Association, accompanied an African exploration expedition, which sailed from New York last week under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institute. It is said to be the largest since the journey of Henry M. Stanley into Africa. Thierry is the only newspaper man to make the trip. He recently returned from Paris, where he reported the Peace Conference.

HEADS BUSY ROCHESTER ADVERTISING CLUB

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 17.—Newly elected officers of the Rochester Advertising Club are: Theodore F. Pevear, advertising manager of the Stein-Bloch Company; vice-president, Howard Palmer, Eastman Kodak Company; treasurer, Joe F. Swope, advertising and sales manager Mabbett-Bettys Motor Car Company; secretary, Jack Knabb; executive committee, Louis E. Groh, Charles G. Lyman, Miner H. Paddock, Jr., Louis P. Willsea.

THEODORE F. PEVEAR

Mr. Pevear will officially assume the presidency today. Mr. Pevear has always been in the advertising business. He originally came from Providence, R. I. He was an independent copy and advertising writer in that city in 1905. Later he was connected with the Providence Journal and the Pawtucket Times as advertising counsellor. As an independent writer he handled the advertising for twenty retail stores in that city.

In 1907 Mr. Pevear became advertising manager for the Shepard Company, large department store in Providence. From this company he came to Rochester, in 1908, to the McCurdy-Norwell Company, department store. Two years later he was associated with the Myers Advertising Agency, which became Pevear & Co. Leaving Rochester, he joined forces with Harper's Weekly as Eastern advertising manager. Since 1914 he has acted as advertising manager of the Stein-Bloch Company, clothing manufacturers.

Cleveland Newspaper Charges Bring Sweeping Grand Jury Report

CLEVELAND, O., July 16.—Criticism by Cleveland newspapers of lax police methods and laxity of prosecutors and judges in handling criminal business in the midst of an unprecented crime wave last winter have resulted in a sweeping report made by a special grand jury created by an act of the state legislature. The regular grand jury was ignored and the probe was directed by special attorneys appointed by Governor Cox.

The report condemns police methods, says the force is embarrassed by politics and religious differences, alleges the chief of police does not have a free hand and says the county prosecutor and city safety director should resign. The probe has furnished more police newspaper copy for daily papers than anything in the criminal line for many years.

NEW WRAPPING PLAN IS A SUCCESS

Ohioan Explains Method He Is Using to Prevent Rolling and Bending on Carrier Routes—Says a Clean Paper for Reader Is Now Possible

By Neil H. Hauker

Circulation Manager Middletown (O.) Journal

After the editorial staff and mechanical departments make every effort to have a clean, neat and readable newspaper, their efforts and hard work can all be annulled by the carrier boy who rolls and bends his papers when making his deliveries.

After experimenting with different size wrappers we have come to the conclusion that a slip of paper three by ten inches makes the size best adapted for a remedy. These wrappers when taken in stacks of one inch each can easily flipped between the first finger and thumb of each hand and spread out so that three-eighths of an inch overlap, thereby giving enough space for liquid paste to be used.

Carrier newspapers are wrapped the same as our mail edition, except instead of rolling them on the table we simply start the first fold on the table and finish it by taking the paper and wrapper in our hands and twirling the newspaper with the right hand and making a cylinder form of the left hand. Then the job is complete.

The floor space is not a big problem, providing you give your carriers from twenty-five to fifty papers at a time and have them roll only those necessary to expedite delivery.

We believe this is the first time that this method of rolling has been used. The strings and rubber bands have had their inning (some publishers are still using the string in delivery), but we think our rolling is an improvement over both. We took great pains in explaining all of the advantages to our carriers, demonstrating to them that it would mean greater speed in making deliveries, and then putting a penalty of discharge on rolling and bending papers.

We consider the new method a complete success.

CIRCULATION NOTES

The Montgomery (Ala.) Journal questions EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S recent reference to F. R. Folks of Regina, Sask., as the biggest man (in paunch) who attended the 21st annual convention of the I. C. M. A. in Buffalo. The journal claims its own Oscar Anderson is the "largest circulation manager in the United States, Canada and Cuba," saying: "Any doubting Thomas may consult the records to find out. Oscar Anderson, circulation manager of the journal, tips the scales at 285, just a few ounces more than F. R. Folks of Regina, Can.

The annual convention of circulation managers for the United States, Canada and Cuba, has just been held at Buffalo, N. Y., and Mr. Anderson and Mr. Folks were in attendance and it took the decision of the scales to tell the exact truth about who was the largest man among the many hundreds who attended the big affair. Mr. Anderson, by a close squeeze, held his title as heavyweight champion of the circulation forces which he has maintained for several years. He says that it was the greatest convention the circulation men ever held and was high in his praise of the way Buffalo took care of the delegates."

The Chicago Evening American has started a new Saturday feature page devoted to music, society, books and art, a rather unusual daily newspaper combination, under the respective editorships of Morgan Kingston, Senator D. Fletcher, Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout and Henry L. Mencken.

The Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer and News Journal made what it believes to be the first complete airplane delivery of newspapers ever attempted on June 27 and 28. The delivery, which covered all the suburban towns in Lancaster County and several adjoining counties, was made without a hitch the second day. The first day just a few towns were missed.

The Spokane (Wash.) Spokesman-Review is again arranging camping trips for carrier boys who have scored high in securing subscription orders. H. M. Grosse, city circulation manager, is planning four trips this summer, from June to September. On each of these 25 boys are entertained over the week end at some nearby lake, while substitutes carry the routes. The Spokesman-Review furnishes the automobiles, camp equipment, and grub, and the carriers work like Trojans for the privilege of going along.

H. H. Fris, circulation manager of the El Paso (Tex.) Herald, has been visiting the Des Moines (Ia.) Register and Tribune plant. His trip, the I. C. M. A. convention via Des Moines, he says, was because the Register and Tribune carriers' publication had attracted his attention as being the liveliest paper of its kind in existence and he wanted to get in touch with what else the organization behind it was doing. The paper, "Our Junior," is edited by J. L. Doolittle.

The Kansas City Post is holding a series of monthly picnics and parties for each division of its carriers. The purpose is to promote good fellowship among the carriers and to instill business principles and salesmanship.

The Kansas City Post has resumed publication of its "Pink" Edition, formerly called the "final." The "Pink" was among the first sports edition in the mid-West, but was suspended during the war.

The Pittsburgh Press will hold its annual modified Marathon race Saturday.

The Providence (R. I.) Sunday Journal is conducting an amateur photographers' contest during the vacation period.

One hundred Indianapolis News carriers were taken on an outing trip to Cincinnati on Sunday, June 29, the trip having been won by each as a prize in a subscription contest. Eighteen of the boys had won their trips in 30 days. They were brought to Indianapolis a day ahead of the excursion and were guests of the News at a hotel and a theater party.

George W. Brewster, 80 years old, is said to be the oldest active subscription solicitor for a Missouri newspaper. He works for the Dexter (Mo.) Messenger, a weekly half a day a week, and is said to have brought in from nine to 50 subscriptions each week during the past eight months.

The Rocky Mountain News conducted a swimming carnival at Berkeley Beach, Denver, July 4.

The Denver Times has arranged a Denver-to-Cheyenne automobile race to be held July 22.

The Des Moines Register has introduced a new full page of features of interest to all "members of the family."

The first arrest in a search by New York City police for persons who have been stealing Sunday newspapers resulted in Manual Silva being fined $10, with an alternative of five days in jail. Silva was caught taking copies of the New York Tribune from a carrier's bundle.

The Houston Post is making extensive preparations for a "Kiddies' Picnic" today. Judd Mortimer Lewis, the Post poet, is chairman of the committee on arrangements.

Members of the circulation department on the Des Moines Register and Tribune held a picnic July 2.

The Houston Chronicle has started a contest in photographic art which will last all month. It is open to both professionals and amateurs.

Richard Seeyle Jones, circulation manager of the Stars and Stripes and formerly on the editorial staff of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, has been released from the army and expects to be back in harness again in Seattle soon.

The St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press have arranged to take fifty newsies to the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool once a week.

N. E. A. MEMBERS MEET IN PORTLAND, AUG. 8

Oregon Association Will Meet on Same Day in Conjunction with National Body—Easterners to Be Treated to Special Crater Lake Trip.

OREGON CITY, Ore., July 16.—Oregon newspapermen are, more than ever before, directly interested in the annual convention of the National Editorial Association. The editorial party from the East, estimated at 300 people, is scheduled to arrive in Portland on Friday, August 8, at 5:05 p. m., and will leave Portland for Tacoma on the following Wednesday about 8 a. m. The details, as announced by E. E. Brodie of this city, member of the N. E. A. executive committee, follow:

It has been arranged to hold the annual convention of the State Editorial Association on Friday, August 8, convening at 9 a. m. at the Portland Press Club, for an all day business session. Luncheon will be served at the Press Club at noon, and the convention will adjourn not later than 5 o'clock, when the delegates and their wives will be merged into the N. E. A. convention and will share in the entertainments and programs at Portland.

Every member of the Oregon State Editorial Association in good standing is a member of the N. E. A., under a resolution adopted at the Coos Bay convention last year, by which the state association joined the national association as a body, paying 50 cents a member out of the treasury of the state association.

Convention Fees

The N. E. A. has a convention fee of $5 for each delegate attending and $2 for his wife or any other member of his family who may accompany him.

The convention party will be met at the Union Station by automobiles and taken to hotels, room assignments having been made before the arrival of the train, to obviate delays. The Imperial Hotel is the convention headquarters hotel at Portland. The travellers will be given an hour to remove the traces of the city, and freshen up a bit and will then be taken in automobiles to the Waverly Country Club, where dinner will be served on the lawn by the Portland Caterers Association.

There will be music by Portland's crack municipal band, address of welcome by Mayor Baker, responses, and the usual program incident to welcoming a convention, after which the party will be taken back to Portland.

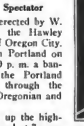
On Saturday, August 9, a business session of the convention will be held, convening at 9:30 at Elks Hall. Luncheon will be served at noon at the Press Club, in the Elks building, by the Home Industry League of the Portland Chamber of Commerce, and at 2 o'clock the ladies of the party will be taken around the trip, and freshen up a bit and will tor Corps, under the direction of Mrs. Alice Benson Beach.

The convention will adjourn at 4 p. m., and will take interurban cars for Oregon City, where the officers of the N. E. A. will dedicate a monument to be erected to commemorate the establishment of the Oregon Spectator, the first newspaper on the Pacific Coast.

Monument to Oregon Spectator

The monument will be erected by W. P. Hawley, president of the Hawley Pulp & Paper Company, of Oregon City. The party will go back to Portland on the interurban and at 6:30 p. m. a banquet will be given at the Portland Chamber of Commerce, through the courtesy of the Portland Oregonian and the Portland Telegram.

The party will be taken up the highway Sunday, leaving Portland at 7 a. m. and a bear and fish breakfast will be served at Eagle Creek, through the courtesy of the State Fish and Game commission and the U. S. Forestry Service almost 11 a. m. Members of the party should have coffee before starting from Portland. It is planned to return to Portland about 3:30 p. m. and at 4:30 the Eastern people will board a special train for Medford, stopping at Salem for dinner at 6:15 p. m., and listening to an address of welcome from the Governor.



May Visit Eugene

It is hoped to have the party spend an hour in Eugene on the way south, arriving there about 9 p. m., though details for this stop have not been perfected. Breakfast will be served Monday at either Grants Pass or Medford, and the party will be taken, by courtesy of the Medford Commercial Club, to Crater Lake, and spend the night there, leaving the lake in time to reach Medford or Ashland to take a train to Portland on Tuesday, and arriving in Portland the next morning and leaving at once for Tacoma.

All courtesies extended to the members of the N. E. A. party will also be extended to the Oregon editors who are members of the state association and who pay the convention fee, except the trip to Crater Lake, which is limited to the Eastern people, because of lack of accommodations for more than 300 at the lake. The special train from Portland to Medford will be financed through the Portland Chamber of Commerce.

THREE BATTLE CITATIONS WON BY LIEUT-COL. BUXTON

LIEUT-COL. G. EDWARD BUXTON, JR., treasurer of the Providence (R. I.) Journal Company, was three cited for bravery and services in battle while on duty against the Huns overseas. The citations are from regimental, the divisional and the General Headquarters.

LT.-COL. G. E. BUXTON, JR.

The first one is dated April 1, 1919, and reads:

"This officer is commanding his battalion on the Toul sector and in the St. Mihiel offensive showed great bravery, coolness and discretion, and materially aided in the success of these operations."

It was signed by Col. Richard Wethcril, commanding the 328th Infantry.

The divisional etiation, dated April 16, 1919, awarded for services in the Meuse-Argonne offensive by Maj. Gen. George Duncan commanding the 82nd Division, reads:

"Col Buxton has not only rendered exceptional service when charged with the responsible duty of division inspector of a constat division during active operations, but by his energy, personal devotion in duty, thorough knowledge of military matters and ability far above the average, he contributed materially to the welfare and efficiency of the division."

The last citation, which is from General Headquarters, is signed by General Pershing, personally, under date of April 19, 1919. This is for "exceptionally meritorious and conspicuous service with the 82nd Division."

Lieut.-Col. Buxton was a Major of Infantry in the U. S. Reserve Corps at the outbreak of the war, and was ordered to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., commanding a battalion in the first Officers' Training Camp. When the 82nd Division was formed in August, 1917, at Camp Gordon, he was assigned to the 328th Infantry of that division. He commanded the 2nd Battalion in the Toul sector, the Marbache sector and in the St. Mihiel drive, after which he was assigned to the Division Staff as Inspector General.

On February 28, 1919, he was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel of the 328th Infantry. He returned to this country in May with the 82nd Division and was discharged at Camp Upton.

Lutheran Editors Favor Cartoons

MINNEAPOLIS, July 15.—The Lutheran Editors' Association of America, at its annual convention here favored the use of more cartoons in religious publications so long as they are not "pictorial satires used to make persons or principles appear ridiculous." It appointed a committee including the Rev. H. Melhorn of Philadelphia, N. M. Sundheim, manager of the Augsburg Publishing House of Minneapolis, and the Rev. Emil H. Rausch of Waverly, Iowa, to study the matter and report.

TIME SAVING CABINET PATENT ASKED

Binghamton Composing Room Superintendent Is the Inventor of Ad Men's Step Eliminator—Two Compositors Can Work at It

Philip W. Fawley, superintendent of the composing room of the Binghamton (N. Y.) Press, has applied for United States and foreign patents upon an adman's working cabinet, which he claims is a time-saving and economy-producing invention of great merit. The cabinet is to be called "The Binghamton Press Cabinet."

As Mr. Fawley demonstrates his new type cabinet, the first one of which is now in actual operation in the composing room of the Press, it wholly eliminates the "walking time" of ad compositors.

All Within Easy Reach

Mr. Fawley's cabinet makes it possible for a compositor to set all of the hand composition of a display advertisement and to assemble the advertisement ready for the proof press practically without moving out of his tracks. The cabinet is seven feet, five inches long, by four feet, ten inches wide, forty-two inches from floor to working surface.

Two compositors work on each end of the cabinet at the same time. Each one has his own individual layout of material, within easy reach, without bothering or reaching over each other.

The cases hang on each side of the cabinet afford a complete layout of all sizes and faces within easy reach of the compositor.

There are in the cabinet 178 compartments providing for every variety of material the printer will ever use; handy spaces to hold 13,500 feet of leads, cut to every needed length, or 1,230 pounds; spaces with room for 3,500 feet of all lengths of slugs, or 980 pounds; room for 900 feet (200 pounds) of linotype borders; spaces for 250 feet of cut-off rules, or 65 pounds.

Carry 1,000 Pounds of Quads

Drawers in the cabinet have a capacity of 1,000 pounds of quads and spaces. These drawers are arranged between the two tiers of cases in that a compositor, finding the quads and spaces in his case low, can replenish his case without taking a step out of his typesetting position. Likewise drawers are provided to hold corner pieces and borders and other type ornaments. Five steel slides in each end of the cabinet are provided to hold cases of border cut to pica measure.

An especially handy arrangement is provided for thin spaces. Five boxes are fitted on each side of the cabinet to hold thin spaces.

The Fawley cabinet is of neat, workman-like appearance and arrangements have been completed with the American Type Founders Company for its manufacture.

Strenuous Outing Held by Representatives Club

Bowling, Swimming, Golf and Field Events, Including Fat Men's Race Precede Banquet at Hotel

The twelfth annual outing of the Representatives Club of New York City was held at the Gedney Farm Hotel at White Plains. In spite of the bad weather there was an attendance of 125, about 40 of whom were ready for the golf tournament. The rest put in the afternoon in the bowling alley, the pool-room, swimming pool and on the polo field, where a baseball game was staged.

In the baseball game, the Representatives, under the leadership of Hal Kennedy of Good Housekeeping Magazine, mowed down the Advertising Agents' team, captained by Harry Le Quatte of Street & Finney. The final score was something like 21 to 6.

In the field events the star performer was Glenn E. Fontaine, of Popular Mechanics. He captured so many first, second and third places that he clinched the Black, Starr & Frost trophy for his publication, and will be the possessor of this trophy for the next year. The fat men's race was won by A. M. Dingwall, of Town and Country. Other heavy point winners were J. D. Spelfi, formerly of Photo Play; C. S. Bokelund, of Review of Reviews, and C. H. Fuller, of Christian Herald.

The big event of the outing was a dinner held in the hall room of the hotel in the evening. There was some excellent singing, and Steve Flynn, of Cosmopolitan, put on a good imitation of Georgie Cohan, impromptu.

Much interest devolved upon the winner of the blind boy golf tournament. George Sullins, of the Erie Railroad Company, drew the boys. John Maynard, of Christian Herald, and Todd Barton, of Scientific American, were tied for first prize, which was a big pneumatic tire. In the toss-up Maynard won.

The lowest gross score in the scratch golf tournament was captured by C. S. Durkee, of Leslie's. Special prizes were awarded to Lou Fernald, of Leslie's, and Herbert Strout for being the golfer to win the largest handicaps and the worst scores.

Award Legion of Honor Cross to Frank Dilnot

American Correspondent of London Daily Chronicle and President of Foreign Correspondents

Frank Dilnot, American correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle and president of the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents in the United States, was presented with the Cross of the Legion of Honor by E. Casenave, Minister Plenipotentiary of the French Government, July 14. The presentation was made at a dinner of the association in New York City in honor of Bastile Day.

FRANK DILNOT

In awarding the medal, M. Casenave said he acknowledged in behalf of France the services rendered by the representatives of foreign newspapers in the United States during the war, and especially at the time America entered the war, when the encouraging reports from this country did much to sustain the public morale in France and England.

Among the speakers were Melville E. Stone of the Associated Press, who said the future good will of the world depended on the friendly relations of the English speaking races and France; Percy Bollen of the London Daily Telegraph, Louis Tracy of the British Publicity Bureau here and P. Whitwell Wilson.

Guests included Baron de Neuflive, representative of the Bank of France; F. Cunliffe-Owen, president of the France-American Association; W. F. Bullock of the London Times, A. Plotnier of Le Matin, Paris, and many other well known foreign journalists.

Mrs. Alma Clayborough sang the "Marseillaise."

Jewelers Will Advertise

St. Louis, Mo., July 16.—A fund of $300,000 has been advanced to carry on an advertising campaign in the newspapers and magazines for the benefit of the jewelry trade, H. E. Freund, manager of the National Jewelers' Publicity Association, told members of the Missouri Society of Retail Jewelers, in annual convention here.

Freund said that the purpose of the campaign is to instruct the public how to purchase jewelry. No particular brands or dealers will be mentioned in the advertisements, he said. "Jewels Make Permanent Gifts" is the slogan to be used in the advertising.

New Proprietors Reorganize Binghamton Paper

Johnson and Hill Head New Company—Lieut. Lyon Managing Editor—May Have Sunday Edition

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., July 14.—Following the purchase of the Republican-Herald by George F. Johnson, of the Endicott-Johnson Shoe Corporation, and Congressman William H. Hill, publishers of the Johnson City-Endicott Record, the stockholders have elected Mr. Johnson president to succeed William G. Phelps, and Mr. Hill vice-president to succeed Sigmund J. Hirschman.

Harry G. More will remain as treasurer and business manager for the present. R. Z. Spaulding, James M. McNamara and George A. Kent resigned as directors, but no selections were made to fill the vacancies.

Charles W. Baldwin, managing editor for the last eight years, has resigned, and his place will be taken temporarily by Lieut. George H. Lyon, who was for several years editor of the Johnson City Record. It is understood that Herman W. Southworth, formerly managing editor of the Press, and now Representative Hill's private secretary, will be connected with the paper in an editorial capacity.

The new owners have purchased the new Sharpe Building, and will have it remodeled as a modern newspaper plant, will buy nearly all new equipment, and, it is said, contemplate changing the Johnson City Record to a Sunday edition of the Republican.

A. Regnier is now circulation manager of the Concordia (Kan.) Blade-Empire.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

For a League of Newspapers

Columbus, Ohio, July 5, 1919.

Editor and Publisher:

I am very much interested in international good will, and I favor anything that will develop and maintain it. I am afraid there are many newspapers that are less interested in that than in printing a story that will startle and make people talk.

As a newspaper man I know that news should be made interesting, but that is not an excuse for an untruth or a half truth. Purely sensational treatment of international affairs, to the extent it is practiced in U. S. is the most pernicious means. The newspaper has tremendous power in the shaping of public opinion. It therefore has a tremendous responsibility, for the public opinion so made rules the world.

I wish we could do something to put the morons and other despondents out of the newspaper business and commit our journals to the hands of sane men with conscience and a determination to adhere in what they print to the truth.

"Truth in so far as it is fit to print" ought to be the slogan and rule of every newspaper, and the deliberate effort to misrepresent one country in the papers of another ought to be made a crime.

It seems to me that a League of Newspapers such as you contemplate might do much in this direction.

Problems of Copy Paper

Sacramento, Cal.

Editor and Publisher:

In a recent issue you ask trial of a copy sheet 8 inches long and 6½ inches broad—carrying 30 or 20 lines double spaced.

The one consideration above all others is economical handling in the work room, because inconvenience there means impeding high priced operators and slowing down expensive machinery.

The Hunt-type copy board, visible source in sheet 7 inches between the bottom ledge and the assembly carriage slide. The practical size of paper is less than 6 inches high. Any larger sheet must be folded.

Therefore the ordinary letter sheet, with lines written the 8½-inch way, folds once to 5½ x 4¼ inch size, or cuts in half sheets at the fold, giving the most convenient size and the most scientific, because the best adapted to its use.

The eye is 33 per cent less fatigued by changing ends in the 8½-inch wide paper than in the 6½-inch width. It is easier handled by copy holders and proof readers.

There is less time lost 2nd less wear on the typewriter by shifting the carriage on longer lines. .

In newspaper work, the long line copy will give nearly its own length in the column to print, thus facilitating space estimates. When there is a variation it is constant enough so setters can quickly judge how many inches the copy will fill in the paper.

The Hunt-type can drop it on his copy board with one motion and not rearrange it until he hangs the slide back when completed. Then his second sheet is in place ready for him. He can set up the sheets down with one motion. Printers all object strongly to copy written the short way on note paper. It slows them down about 17 per cent.

The only argument I can see for the narrow sheet is the quantity of 500 sheets to a pack being easier to calculate, and this is worthless because a page will hold as many words one way as the other. The extravagant writer will be taken care of by long copy reader. Every newspaper man will appreciate this statement.

Regarding the paper stationed the letter also is awkward for linotype operators. I ran one of the first machines on the New York Herald, before I became an advertising agent, and know from practical experience that the letter she is in common use not from theory, but because practice has proved it right. And science is merely refined practice.

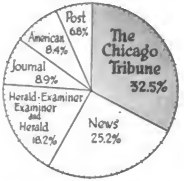
Chicago Tribune Advertising in Other Newspapers



The Chicago Tribune wishes to give credit to the thirty newspapers in which it has been running full page ads for their share in bringing about the splendid increases shown below:

Each of these charts shows the total advertising printed during a certain period in all Chicago newspapers. Note that The Chicago Tribune has carried a larger proportion of the total each year until now out of every three pages of advertising in Chicago, one is in The Tribune and the other two are divided among the remaining five newspapers.

1919—Jan. to June

We know that advertising pays newspapers as well as department stores and we intend to continue advertising The Chicago Market and The Chicago Tribune.

We know that the more every other newspaper advertises itself and its market, the better it will be for all newspapers, including The Chicago Tribune.

We wish Chicago Tribune advertising to run (as far as possible) in newspapers that believe in advertising, and that express that belief by advertising.

We are ready to discuss our fall campaign with progressive newspapers which both buy and sell advertising.

THESE TWENTY LEADING RETAIL STORES use a total of 407,110 lines of advertising space in New York morning (excluding Sunday) newspapers in the month of June.

OVER A QUARTER of this total lineage was used in the New York Tribune—more than in any other newspaper.

The reason THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE carries more daily advertising from these twenty leading department stores and retail shops is because THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE'S circulation is the highest grade—per thousand, possible to reach through any New York morning newspaper.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE reaches the class of people—the men and women who understand and appreciate the better class of things in life—those who live the better sort of lives: people who not only have standards to live up to, but have the means to live up to those standards.

SAYS WILSON CONCEDED RIGID WAR CENSORSHIP TO SAVE EUROPEAN ALLIES FROM DOWNFALL

Charles H. Grasty, Noted War Correspondent of New York Times, Tells EDITOR & PUBLISHER That While Restrictions on Publicity Were Paralyzing to English-Speaking Countries, They Were Necessary to Save Shell-Shocked Nations from Demoralization

[Mr Grasty, who is treasurer of the New York Times, returned from Europe recently with President Wilson's party, after having achieved an international reputation as a brilliant writer and interpreter of events during four years' service as a war correspondent, last acted by EDITOR & PUBLISHER *to relate some of his experiences in the war zone and at the Peace Conference, of particular interest to our readers. Here follows his reply, illuminating not only as regards the censorship, but the personalities of the leaders on whom depended the fate of the Allies' cause, the staunch support given the President's war policies by Viscount Northcliffe, social unrest in Great Britain, and other matters of keen, present interest to the press of the United States. —*EDITOR'S NOTE.]

By CHARLES H. GRASTY.

YOU ask me for my most interesting experiences.

At the top stands my experiences with American soldiers. I went over on the boat with General Pershing and saw him deliver to the almost exhausted French the American message of comradeship and hope.

I watched him develop step by step into a great force—perhaps the greatest single personal force in the war. He is a typical, fearless, aggressive, patriotic American.

It is no reflection on the other participants to say that the war couldn't have been won without North American élan which include the Canadians with the North Americans. They belong there, and Currie was one of the greatest generals in the war.

"Best Soldiers in Europe"

But even above my experiences with the generals whom I admired so much, I put my experiences with the soldiers. I saw the first of them land at St. Nazaire on June 26, 1917. They were ragamuffin then. I saw the 16th Infantry march through Paris on the following 4th of July. They were splendid fellows, but still raw material. I saw them in training around Gondrecourt and there was not much difference.

But they were coming. Their full hitting power was shown at Cantigny on May 28, 1918, just in time for the Marne, and from then on they were the best soldiers in Europe. Once some of them got good, they all responded to that spirit of competition characteristic of North Americans.

A few weeks ago, at the Pershing Stadium in Paris, I saw a picked battalion of American soldiers that outclassed any I had ever seen. And when I spoke to General Pershing about them, he said:

"I have just finished reviewing 1,800,000 American soldiers. No one ever doubted the high qualities of American youth as human beings; I want to speak of them as soldiers. I don't believe such soldiers ever existed before.

"Mind, I am speaking as a West Pointer. At the end of the war, the American army had so many corps d'elite that it was difficult to count them."

I had a chance to talk with Marshal Foch several times. He always said that soldiers from his already thin front and send them to Italy.

I went with them, and never was demoralization and consternation tranquillized by such a comparatively small force as by them after Caporetto.

It was Painlévé who put in that great general, Pétain, after the failure of the Nivelle offensive in April, 1917, when the army was almost in a state of mutiny and the French civilian morale at low water mark. Pétain brought the army back.

I was much at Versailles during the fight to put a generalissimo in command. The support of that fight by Lloyd George against natural, narrow, much difference in continental communities, but it was paralyzing to English-speaking countries. We depend on public opinion to shape public policy.

Our public lacked information before the armistice and never caught up afterward, though the censorship was relaxed. Then we were always afraid of giving Germany some kind of an edge by telling too much. It was a most difficult position.

The President himself was obliged largely to waive publicity which would have saved him much embarrassment in America. The shell-shocked countries of Europe couldn't have stood it under their fragile systems. Every government of Europe would have fallen. So the President had to grin and bear it.

the best that could be done was to hold for the Americans. He made good in that forecast.

The French Leaders

Marshal Joffre, whom I interviewed, impressed me as a great philosopher and thinker whose moral and intellectual leadership brought out the best qualities in the French. Clemenceau is a great character, made to order for the last quarter of an hour as Joffre was for the first.

I admired Paul Painlévé, who fell, partly at least, because he was a mathematician and not an orator. I happened to be with him at the War Office when he made the life-saving decision to take home opposition is a thing that must always be remembered in his favor; but Wilson's support, though easier to give, must be acknowledged as the chief factor.

How Wilson Aided

General Bliss co-operated with extraordinary ability, and perhaps he, too, was necessary to the success of the effort.

One doesn't know where to stop in talking of the war; after the armistice the unfolding of events was less interesting and a mighty hard job for representatives of the press.

The war censorship was overdone. The lack of information didn't make so

British Politics

I had the pleasure of meeting King George, an amiable and self-denying monarch who saved his monarchy by his service and energy, and who is now sending his heir among the masses to meet advancing Democracy half way.

I saw much of a still more powerful potentate, Alfred Harmsworth, Viscount Northcliffe, who is such a hustler that thousands of English think him American by birth.

He helped the President at every turn until a serious illness temporarily retired him.

Lloyd George is the greatest of all politicians in a political civilization in which public men are all statesmen and must be politicians.

British Social Unrest

People go to the House of Commons to see Lloyd George fall, but he always falls on his feet. It is a matter of fact, there is no one in sight to succeed him, and so a radical minister presides over a rather Toryish government—an inverted pyramid, but it will topple some day.

There is a lot of rebellion loose in Britain, but it will never come to Bolshevism. There will be a slow revolution that will change economic conditions and throw off the oppression of social autocracy in the freest of the free democracies. There won't be such really beautiful aristocrats or such pitiful lower classes, but the average will be higher.

In many ways, Americans and British are the same breed. We will get on together. But we mustn't sweetheart each other. Neither will stand it. In America we will best keep friends with the healthily selfish British by looking

HOLD PRICES OF BOOKS AS ADVERTISING

Publishers Protest, but Will Abide by Post Office's Ruling that Reviews Mentioning Costs Are Chargeable with Higher Postage Rates

In spite of written protests from publishers of the New York City newspapers, the Post Office Department has declined to recede from its recent order classifying all book reviews, in which prices of books are mentioned, as advertising and are chargeable as such with the second-class zone rates of postage prescribed for such matter.

It now seems that the department will be permitted to enforce its ruling without a contest in the courts, which at first was considered a possibility. Opinion of legal counsel is said to be that, while the ruling may be unsound and arbitrary and one that sets a dangerous precedent, the question immediately at issue is not important enough to warrant costly and long-drawn-out litigation.

All of the New York City newspapers that print book reviews, including the Times, the Tribune, the Sun, the Evening Post and the Brooklyn Eagle, have discontinued printing prices, and notice to this effect has been sent to all members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

The Post Office's Reasoning

The final ruling of the Post Office is contained in a letter addressed to Postmaster Patten, of New York, by A. M. Dockery, Third Assistant Postmaster General. It reads:

"Referring to your recent communication transmitting one from the publishers of 'The New York Times Book Review' with further reference to the classification under act of October 3, 1917, of reviews of books appearing in that publication, I have to say that while the entire question to the propriety of regarding as advertising matter, under the law cited, book reviews which include the prices of the books has been given very carefully in the light of the statements and information presented.

"The ruling with respect to the classification of reviews giving prices of books is in harmony with the course that has been followed for many years in the application of the postal laws and regulations governing second class mail matter.

"As pointed out in previous correspondence, it has always been the practice to regard as advertising, matter, both in the commendation of articles advertised for sale in a publication. When a publication contains reviews of such matter it came within the proviso of the law, Act of March 3, 1879, embodied in section 412, Postal Laws and Regulations, prohibiting the entry as second class matter of publications 'designed primarily for advertising purposes,' and was consequently denied entry as such.

"Where such descriptive notices of articles advertised in a publication formed only an incidental feature as connected with the publication in the entirety, the matter, although advertising, nevertheless, had the effect to give the publication, nor, prior to the act of October 3, 1917, became the duty of the Post Office Department, therefore, the same rate of postage applicable thereto, the same rate being chargeable on both the advertising and non-advertising portions.

"Under the act of October 3, 1917, which fixes a higher rate of postage on the advertising portions of publications, all advertising matter, as defined, regardless of whether it is usually considered free, and must be charged with postage at the zone rates applicable to the advertising portions.

Prices Only Affected

"In view of the foregoing, there would appear to be no reason for regarding as all book reviews as advertising matter chargeable with the second class zone rates of postage prescribed by the act of October 3, 1917, for such matter. Publications, for the reviews of which the books reviewed in a publication are selected by the publisher or editor thereof, and the reviews are inserted exclusively for the information of the readers and not in connection with any understanding or agreement with anyone interested in the sale of the books, the reviews will be regarded as matter other than advertising, for the purpose of determining the postage chargeable on the publication, provided the prices of the books are not given and the reviews are otherwise free from features tending to give them the appearance of being leveloped to promote the sale of the books.

"It is believed that after giving this matter further consideration in the light of the foregoing, the publishers will agree that the ruling regarding it is entirely reasonable, equitable and in harmony with the intent of the act of October 3, 1917, and that they will find it feasible without detracting from the news value of the book reviews appearing in 'The New York Times Book Review' to omit the prices of the books from the reviews. The publication of information in this respect will be helpful and greatly appreciated.

"A copy of this letter is inclosed for delivery to the publishers when bringing the foregoing to their attention."

Publishers' Ground of Protest

The particular letter of protest to which reference is made in the foregoing letter by the Third Assistant Postmaster General was addressed by Adolph S. Ochs, Publisher of the New York Times, to Edward H. Gavin, Acting Chief of the Bureau of Second Class Mail of the New York City Post Office, by Louis Wiley, business manager of The New York Times, which read as follows:

"Your suggestion that the price in reviews of books classifies them as advertising seems a misunderstanding of the postal regulations, since it could not have been the intention to inject a monetary value into a purely news feature and deprive readers of material information.

"The Book Review has nothing to do with advertising. Reviews are presented entirely for the benefit of readers. The price is necessary for proper judgment as to the relative value of a book from the point of subscriber who is a student of a particular science would scarcely be interested in a book on that subject if it were addressed to popular appeal, for it would have slight scientific value. The reviewer, in his review, the more the review would indicate that the book addressed itself to advanced seekers of knowledge.

Not Considered Advertising

"Neither book publishers nor readers consider prices quoted in reviews as advertising. Publishers frequently neglect to supply prices to editors, and the Review department is compelled to telephone publishing houses for such information. The public regards the book review as institution, practiced from the beginning of the history of journalism, and the publishing makes the space occupied is sold or paid for directly or indirectly. There is no consideration for such reviews for newspapers from book publishers.

"Reviews are written regardless of the good or bad influence on advertising. Only in the last issue of the Book Review, attached, there is a review advocating advertising documents, though the very books themselves are advertised on the same page in the specific column on the facing page.

"We suggest, therefore, that it is taken on the grounds of the elimination of prices from book reviews, that the Post Office Department reconsider its ruling and permit publishers to meet the post office officials for the purpose of covering to their satisfaction that the reviews in 'The New York Times Book Review' are not advertising matter."

The U. S. Railroad Administration proposes to spend approximately $135,000 this year in an advertising campaign to make known the agricultural, resort and industrial possibilities of Florida.

YANKEE SCRIBES DINE BRITISH AT PARIS

Speeches and Clever Cabaret Brighten Feast of Peace Conference Correspondents — Swope and Oulahan Preside at Festivities

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

PARIS, July 3.—The complimentary dinner by the American newspaper correspondents attending the Peace Conference, to the British newspaper men on the same mission, has been voted one of the particularly bright spots in the seven months' sojourn in Paris of the men serving the English-language newspapers of the world.

This particular dinner differed radically from the conventional banquet. There were few speeches, while the cabaret program was long and varied, and left never a dull moment during the whole evening.

Jazz by Doughboys

The toastmaster of the occasion was Herbert Bayard Swope, who presided happily and gracefully. On behalf of the American hosts, Richard V. Oulahan, well-known head of the New York Times Washington Bureau, made a speech that boosted his reputation for post-prandial oratory. From the English guests there were delightful talks from George Adam of the London Times, Sidney Dark of the London Daily Express, George Mair of the British Government Press Bureau, and Gordon Knox of the London Morning Post.

From this point onward and for some time previous and also in between a delightful vaudeville program enlivened the dinner.

The jazz feature stood out beyond others. It was the Scrap-Iron Jazz Band, affectionately dubbed the Scrap-Iron Jazzerinos, composed of seven American doughboys. Their playing took the meeting by storm at the outset and they finished strong in the shank of the evening.

Insistent demands from the guests brought forth Fred Ferguson of the United Press, who sang "Poor Boy," winning extended applause.

These Were Present

The complete list of American journalists who attended the dinner included:

Thos. F. Shepard, New York Evening Mail.
Lincoln Eyre, New York World.
Charles S. Thomas, The Times.
J. C. McDonald, New York Herald.
Arthur Bleveter, Three Continents Press Bureau.
William G. Shepherd, New York Evening Post.
Fred Ferguson, United Press.
Jos. E. Bucklin, Associated Enterprises Association.
Herbert Adams Gibbons, Harper's Magazine.
Richard V. Oulahan, New York Times.
Herbert Bayard Swope, New York World.
Lawrence Hills, New York Times.
Edwin Emil Kaufmann, New York Tribune Syndicate.
A. A. Mokerrel.
William P. McDonald.
Frederick Moore, New York Tribune.
L. B. Kirtland, Leslie's Weekly.
Burke Wilkinson, Associated Press.
Herman Bernstein, New York Herald.
Florence Guy Seabury, Associated Press.
Albert M. Bruce, New York Tribune.
Wilmot Lewis, New York Tribune.
Robert J. Frew, International News Service.
Edwin L. James, New York Times.
Walter Duranty, New York Times Bureau, Wadchanste.
Elmer Roberts, Associated Press.
W. L. Thompson, Universal News Service.
Lloyd Allen, Western Newspaper Union.
Paul Meserve, Chicago Daily News.
F. J. O'Brien, Philadelphia Public Ledger.
S. B. Cowgill, Associated Press.
Julius Hartin, New York Herald.
Dewitt Markenzie, Associated Press.

The following from the London Times shows the spirit that was promoted by the dinner:

"One of the most impressive manifestations of the extremely cordial relations which have existed throughout the Peace Conference between American and British Delegations was the dinner given on Sunday night in honor of British journalists accredited at the Peace Conference by American newspaper men in Paris.

"Nearly every newspaper of importance in the English-speaking world was represented, 1 gather with all the great news-gathering agencies. With this possible exception of the function given by Lord Northcliffe to the journalists of the British Empire in Printing House Square in London, we perhaps have never seen a gathering of the English-speaking press ever brought together.

"Not all the speeches were great ones, but all on the importance of the united efforts of the British and American press to bring about a permanent peace. The British and American peoples at the head, indeed the only, means of ensuring that they shall together wherever occasion arises. Hope was expressed that it would be possible to have Anglo-American Press dinner as annual event, so as to perpetuate the spirit of friendship which has existed in the American correspondents during the long peace negotiations."

WALTER C. JOHNSON WINS PROMOTION

Rewarded for Splendid Work as Business Manager of Chattanooga News—Kindel and Akers Head Business and Circulation Departments

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., July 23.—At a meeting of the directors of the Chattanooga News Company, Walter C. Johnson, who has been business manager of the News, was promoted to the office of general manager, and W. A.

WALTER C. JOHNSON

len Kindel, formerly business manager of the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, was elected business manager and a director.

Mr. Johnson for years has been secretary-treasurer of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association and was acclaimed by the recent Asheville convention of that body as "the best secretary-treasurer any association ever had." He is a tireless worker and has friends and admirers everywhere.

Mr. Kindel is a native of Tennessee and served his apprenticeship in newspaper work on the Nashville Banner and before going to Pensacola was with the Asheville Citizen and Columbia Record.

J. H. Akers, formerly of the Greensboro (N. C.) Record, is now circulation manager of the News and was also chosen a director.

Other officers elected were George F. Milton, Jr., secretary and news editor, a position he held previous to the war, and Gus S. Currier, treasurer.

The reportorial department of the News is now in charge of George H. Butler, who a short time since returned from the service.

Contracts for a $2,000,000 cotton warehouse at Dallas have been awarded.

WOMEN'S INVASION OF LARGER NEWSPAPER FIELD SHOWS WINNING RESULTS

Mrs. Helen Rogers Reid of New York Tribune Puts in a "Man's Day" at Her Desk Before Hurrying Home to Romp with Little Son and Daughter—Her Department Shows Unusual Business Gains

"The men are bright, but the women are brighter."—Frank Dilnot in the conclusions made by an Englishman on America.

WOMAN'S part in the journalism of America started with the work of the helping wife in the printshop of the country publisher, in an age that is not yet entirely "past" for all sections of the nation. Principally because she knew all about clothes—women's clothes—and the lighter things of life belonged in her sphere—women later found a place "doing society" for the big dailies.

Graduation from society to sobs was easy and natural on the bigger dailies, but as a general thing, especially in metropolitan journalism, that was the top niche of ambition. In the business office women's work was largely clerical.

It is true that in the smaller cities some women did attain higher executive positions, and some through long-time family ownership became directing heads, but on the New York dailies men managed to hold their own until November 1, 1918.

Then, along came Mrs. Helen Rogers Reid.

Directs Important Department

Mrs. Reid is now an important part of the New York Tribune. In fact, her responsibilities for the new and potent punch that has been put into the aggressive business activities of that traditionally great journal stand first when you consider a "greatest advertising gain," which is claimed for the first six months of 1919.

Now, there may be no connection between getting business for a great metropolitan daily and feeding a flock of white leghorn hens, but it gives a hint of the manner of woman who is advertising director and secretary of the Tribune, for it is an established fact that chickens of the variety mentioned are the world's leading experts in egg production and assure results.

Up in Westchester county there is a highly productive farm where white leghorns for eggs, Rhode Island reds for table, and pure-bred Guernsey and Holstein cows for butter and milk are the owner's pride. It is Mrs. Reid's playground and its management is her principal recreation, but it is run for results—on the theory that satisfaction with life comes from attainment.

Was Well Trained in Business

Early last September, Mrs. Reid took up seriously the work of learning something about the newspaper publishing business by becoming a daily student in the business office. Early in November she became advertising director, and at the annual meeting of directors in January, this year, was made secretary of the association.

The foregoing paragraph carries her own story of her business activities during the last ten months, and right from the start of this interview, which she was making every effort to dodge, it was very plain to be seen that it would not do to leave the telling entirely to her.

Mrs. Reid entered the offices of the Tribune well versed in the ways of earning a living—which was in no way necessary in the present incident—and with a pretty thorough knowledge of big business, gained as treasurer of the Suffrage Party in New York State. Her part of the "big business" was management of the financing.

"Which," she remarked, "was a pretty through education."

MRS. HELEN ROGERS REID.

Mrs. Reid was born at Appleton, Wis., and attended school there before coming East to enter Barnard College. While attending college she did some clerical work and tutoring. After graduation she took up secretarial work, which she continued until her marriage in 1911 to Ogden Mills Reid, editor of the Tribune and president of the Tribune Association—in all a training that should cause many women to give some consideration when she says:

"The newspaper field holds many wonderful opportunities for women, and this is especially true in the advertising branch, where modern development is only starting. We now have one woman on the soliciting staff of the Tribune who is making a success, and I believe it is a work that should receive the consideration of other women seeking a business career.

"I have found that the man or firm that is in the market—or should be in the market—for advertising space does not care whether he is transacting business with a man or a woman. It does not matter which. The buyer demands facts, and there is a place for the person who can present them in a proper and forcible manner."

Believes in Co-operation

Mrs. Reid says that she finds the advertising department of the Tribune "completely absorbing" and has no desire to enter into the activities of other branches of the work. She has very pronounced views, however, on understanding between all departments.

"Any business to succeed must function with complete understanding, and co-operation must prevail in every undertaking. This applies to the newspaper, as well as the steamship line, railroad or bank. For this reason I think there should be broad understanding between the editorial and advertising departments, as well as the circulation and advertising or editorial departments.

"I realize that the advertising and editorial departments of many newspapers have been separated and kept apart by mutual suspicion. That is wrong and is against the best interests of the newspaper as a whole, and prevents complete success.

Commissions Abolished

"News, of course, should be handled on the basis of news value, and advertising should be sold on merit, and merit only, but between the two departments I believe there can be co-operation that will bring about the success of the entire undertaking. While it is true that stories have been printed or suppressed because of business connections, it is also true that good news stories have been penalized because of their business connection."

"I" does not enter into Mrs. Reid's discussions of the activities of the Tribune in her department; "We" is the dominant note in her conversation on the attainment of results. One radical change has been made by her department in handling accounts since she took charge. Except in the classified branch, all commissions have been abolished, and no solicitor has what are commonly called "my accounts."

"By placing every person on a salary basis and abolishing all commissions we have a better spirit and better comradeship among the men and women in our department. Display of feeling over closing accounts does not exist.

"With this complete co-operation now for greater business, it is possible for all to assist in paving the way for one of our number to close a contract for the profit of all, for no contract belongs to any one man.

"The results show, I think, in our totals for the first six months of the year, when we made the second largest advertising gain of sixteen New York daily newspapers."

The New Reform

"The future in advertising holds wonderful things for the doer," continued Mrs. Reid, "for the great reforms have only started. This is especially true in financial advertising. We have already reached the era of clean advertising, and the new attainment must be human copy —copy that will have the same interest for the newspaper reader as the news story that makes him an irregular or regular subscriber. This is something that the advertiser must be brought to understand if we are going to make the space we sell worth the cost and a profit to him."

Not a bad start and rather high ideals for the only woman director of an advertising department of a great metropolitan daily, for it must be remembered that although Mrs. Reid, as she puts it herself, "works a regular man's day," has other interests. She is a trustee of

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF FORD ENDS

Plaintiff Says One Purpose of Suit Is to Make Newspapers Stick to Headlines in Stories That Follow—Memory Often Fails

Mr. Clemens, Mich., July 23.—Cross-examination of Henry Ford prosecutor in the million dollar libel suit against the Chicago Tribune, on trial here, was completed at noon yesterday after seven days of rapid-fire questioning. The wealthy automobile manufacturer was recalled to the stand by his own counsel today.

Before leaving the stand Mr. Ford was given an opportunity to explain a number of things for which Elliott G. Stevenson, counsel for the Tribune, had put him on the gridiron, and he also explained his war work for the American and British Governments.

Tires of Argument

Early in his cross-examination Mr. Ford said, to stop argument, he would admit he was an "ignorant idealist." He asserted that statements contained in the "flivver patriotism" despatch that he would not retain jobs for soldier employes going to the Mexican border or care for their dependents were not authorized by him.

He denied having opposed enlistments in the National Guard and said that he approved of Lincoln's expression that a man who discouraged others enlisting was worse than the enemy who killed a soldier in battle, but added that Lincoln spoke in the midst of war and the same thing did not apply to a country only preparing for war.

Mr. Ford testified that one of his reasons for bringing the peace ship was to make newspapers stick to their headlines. He said that he seldom read more than the headlines and that it was principally the headline "Ford Is An Anarchist" which caused the present suit, admitting there was no further mention of the word "Anarchist" in the body of the editorial.

Wants Correct Headlines

Mr. Ford expressed as his belief that the bankers and newspapers got us into war. He said that the voyage of the peace ship was arranged by peace advocates and his only part was the financing. He admitted that he no doubt told New York newspaper men that there was no sense in building dreadnaughts that were only good to bottle up in Kiel Canal or the Orkney Islands. He said that he had talked over the question of rewriting the Bible, to make it clearer of understanding, with C. A. Brownwell at the latter's suggestion.

The plaintiff said he had never been affiliated with any anarchist society and had never been in conflict with City, State or National Government. He denied having personally received a letter from the Tribune in reply to his final demand to retract the editorial complained of, in which it was set forth that Mr. Ford had not been accused of "throwing bombs or overthrowing Government," which was his definition of an anarchist.

"Can't Remember" Many Points

Mr. Ford refused to read while on the witness stand to dispel the impression that he could not read. He testified that he could read but that he is a slow reader and at present is suffering from hay fever which would probably cause him to make a botch of the attempt, he said.

Mr. Ford testified that, outside of his immediate family, his best friends are Thomas A. Edison and John Burroughs, and it was intimated that one subject that the plaintiff knows a great deal about is birds.

In answer to a great number of questions asked him, as regards statements and interviews, he replied that he could not remember. He credited many of them to his "peace secretary," Delavigne, whom he said he had authorized to "get the facts" and present them as coming from Mr. Ford.

Editor-Generals May Be Seated in Canadian Parliament

Ottawa, Ont., July 24.—Two of Canada's distinguished editor-generals are reported to be in line for Parliamentary honors. Major-General Sir David Watson, K. C. B., who in private life is editor of the Quebec Chronicle, is expected to go to the Senate, while Brigadier-General Victor W. Odlum, C. B., D. S. O., who before going overseas was engaged in newspaper work in Vancouver, B. C., is likely to be appointed to the Cabinet, representing British Columbia.

General Watson first went overseas in September, 1914, as lieutenant-colonel commanding the 2nd Canadian Infantry Battalion. In July, 1914, he organized the 4th Canadian Division, which he took to France and remained in command until the end of the war.

General Odlum is a "ranker," having advanced to his present rank from that of a private in the ranks. He began his allegiance to Mars in the South African war, when as a youth of eighteen he enlisted and went through the campaign. Afterwards, he entered newspaper work. When the Great War broke out, he gave up the managing editorship of the Vancouver (B. C.) World to enlist as a lieutenant, and from that time his rise has been meteoric. He went overseas as second in command of the 7th Canadian Infantry Battalion, of which he later became commander, with spectacular success. Early in 1916 he was made a brigadier-general, and given command of the 11th Canadian Infantry Brigade.

General Odlum was wounded three times, and for his notable services was honored by the C. B., C. M. G., and D. S. O. with bar.

Generals Watson and Odlum were honored on their return to the capital by a luncheon tendered by the Cabinet.

DETROIT NEWS IN LONDON

Opens British Office to Provide Better European News Service

The Detroit News has opened a London office to give Detroit a better service of European news. At present, Jay G. Hayden, formerly at Washington for the News, but more recently covering the peace conference, is in the London office. He is shortly coming home, however, and the London post will be held by William K. Kelsey, who is now at Washington for the News. Mr. Kelsey and his family sail on the Caronia on August 9 from New York.

QUALITY CIRCULATION CALLED MISNOMER

Mid-Westerner Denies There Are "Class Readers" in Local or Small City Field—Papers Must Go Into Homes—Defends Premiums

By J. K. Groom.
Manager National Advertising Aurora Beacon-News

During the recent meeting of the Andit Bureau of Circulation in Chicago, someone sprang the old gag about "quality of circulation."

J. K. Groom.

Men talk and write glibly about this or that evil, and they use the word "papers" without specifying what kind of papers, with the result that everybody gets the impression they mean "newspapers," and so the newspapers constantly get the worst of it. Even when specifically naming "newspapers," they talk or write with metropolitan newspapers in mind, but most folks think about "local" or so-called "country" papers.

There's no such thing as quality circulation in the local newspaper fields, and it always amuses me when I hear men talking about "quality," meaning or leaving open to insinuation that they mean, local newspapers.

Must Have Home Circulation

Now be it known that in small or medium sized cities there is no such thing as "class" among the readers of newspapers.

First, because such papers must be "family" newspapers, or they cannot "get by." A paper that is not decent enough to get into the homes of such a community as a welcome daily visitor cannot exist at all—such papers are not sold on the street to men and then thrown away.

Nearly everybody in this country can read and does read the local newspapers if they do not read anything else. Where there are more than one paper, they do not all read the one to the entire exclusion of the other. That is not because they divide themselves into "classes," but because one appeals to some and another to others.

About 88 per cent. of the people subscribe for one paper only. They do not need both, and it being necessary to conserve their financial resources buying two papers seems to them like a waste of money.

Small Per Cent Read Two Papers

The other 12 per cent. are what an advertiser would call "better class," because of its superior buying power. But these people desire to "stand in" with the papers and have the erroneous idea that they can do so by subscribing for them—so they take both.

Now, with your "better class" taking both papers and all the rest of the families about on a level, how under the sun can you figure any "quality circulation" for an advertiser?

Premiums were also mentioned in the J. K. Groom discussion.

I could mention off-hand a number of the best papers in the country that established themselves by the use of premiums. Advertisers just naturally fall over each other to get into some papers that have built up their splendid clientele by the use of premium offers.

If premiums do not win out the paper soon subsides. If they do win the paper ceases to use them because it has no longer any need for them. Neither the one or the other ever stops using them on account of having climbed to the vaunted high moral plane so often professed, nor because of fear of the critics, who threaten to not use papers that get circulation that way. The use or non-use of premiums is determined by the cold-blooded business proposition of "does it pay?"

Premiums as Business Builders

We used premiums for three or four years for the purpose of building up our circulation. The plan worked, and the same ten years ago we stopped using them because we did not need them any longer.

The main purpose of premiums is to get people who take a rival sheet to try the paper using the premiums in the hope that after reading it awhile they will like it well enough to continue it permanently. If the publisher makes a good enough paper he accomplishes his object, and in local fields that is exactly what they do.

JASON ROGERS WINS AT GOLF

Gets Smith Trophy at Asheville Convention Tournament

Asheville, N. C., July 22.—An impromptu golf competition was organized among the newspaper and advertising men attending the conventions here, for a trophy presented by Harry Dwigh Smith, of Fuller & Smith, Cleveland, over the links of the Asheville Country Club.

Eight players entered as follows: Stanley Clague, president of the J. Walter Thompson Company; Paul E. Faust Mallary, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago; Major Jesse S. Matteson, of the Gundlach Agency, Chicago; W. L. McLain, of the W. L. McLain Company, Philadelphia; Lincoln B. Palmer, manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association; Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe; Victor H. Hanson publisher of the Birmingham News, and G. Logan Payne, the Chicago special agent.

Aside from the fact that several of the players were handicapped through using hired clubs, and that one of the agents succeeded in hitting another with a golf ball through a hard sliced shot everything passed off happily.

The scores were:

Jason Rogers	45, 44 = 89	11 = 5
Major Matteson	45, 49 = 94	13 = 5
L. B. Hanson	50, 50 = 100	16 = 6
G. L. Payne	48, 50 = 98	13 = 5
L. B. Palmer	51, 54 = 105	16 = 6
Paul E. Faust	54, 47 = 101	13 = 5
Stanley Clague	50, 46 = 96	15 = 6
W. L. McLain	61, 60 = 121	16 = 11

Selling Newspaper Space Over the Hibachi

Story of the Curious Experiences of an Advertising Man in Dealing with Oriental Customs

By ALFONSO JOHNSON, Business Manager, The Japan Advertiser

TO be a successful salesman of newspaper space in Japan, one must have all the qualifications required in the United States, and in addition he must have more patience and more tenacity and a considerable daily capacity for tea.

Tea drinking is the national pastime in Japan, and he who would sell newspaper space must learn to drink tea while sitting on a cushion on the floor. Balancing one's self on one's legs while squatting on a cushion and holding a tea cup at the same time is quite a trick (for an American) but the trick must be acquired for it is one of the preliminaries to talking business. The advertising man must also remember to have his socks darned regularly, for he must remove his shoes before entering the Japanese-style office.

Chilly Business Office

In cold weather the business office, like the Japanese home, has only the hibachi to furnish heat. At best one can warm only his hands over a hibachi, which is a small box or brazier containing a few pieces of charcoal in a bed of ashes.

English is a popular language in Japan. American and British papers have many Japanese subscribers. The Japan Advertiser, the largest foreign daily in Japan, has thousands of Japanese readers; in fact, it would be impossible to publish a 10-page daily, with a 12- or 14-page Sunday edition, if the circulation was limited to foreign residents. Nearly all the high-class Japanese read English, and as they are the people who have the purchasing power in Japan, advertising in the foreign press is very profitable to Japanese merchants, especially those handling foreign goods. The better-class of Japanese are becoming modernized rapidly, and the demand for foreign goods is increasing by leaps and bounds.

The work of the American business manager of a foreign newspaper in Japan is highly interesting and strenuous. He must take care of all the foreign merchants, and he must also call on nearly all the Japanese firms even though such firms have no one who can speak English. The Japanese businessman feels that he is being complimented if he or his business is important enough to justify the foreign business manager in calling on him personally when there are four or five Japanese solicitors in the field.

Want Special Attention

Even if the manager of the store or firm cannot speak English he likes to have the foreigner along with the Japanese solicitor, who also interprets. The manager then feels that he is getting special attention and the lowest price. Many Japanese who will not attempt to speak English understand much of it. If the merchant can speak English he will insist on dealing directly with the American—it is only human nature to want your intellectual attainments recognized. A number of high-speaking Japanese merchants who advertise extensively but will not talk business with a Japanese salesman of space even though that salesman has been trained in America and speaks excellent English. They will deal only with a foreigner.

I have four Japanese solicitors, all of whom speak English and wear foreign clothes at work. Three of them learned their salesmanship in actual practice in the United States. The fourth has never been out of Japan; and though he is a poor salesman, from an American viewpoint, he is the best man to handle Japanese firms who still cling to all the old Japanese customs and refuse to be modern in business dealings. Many managers of even large progressive firms like to sit and talk about the weather and drink tea before getting down to business. Firms which a seller of magazine space would call on, however, or firms upon which representatives of the papers in the United States call are very progressive and well-informed on advertising. Such firms have modern offices, and one must deal with them as he would with big business firms in America. I am speaking here only of the small merchant or small importer who still does business in the Japanese way; and the salesman of newspaper space finds hundreds of such firms on his daily rounds.

Mr. Johnson and his assistant in conference with T. Okuda, managing director of a great, modern department store at Tokyo.

Daily Routine

Leaving the office in the morning with one of my Japanese solicitors, I call rikishas, the "Pull-man" cars of the Orient, and my assistant outlines our route. Arriving at a retail store, the front of which is entirely open, we step inside and the proprietor greets us with the Japanese salutation, which is really a low bow, and asks us to sit down on the low stools. The stools are on a cement floor somewhat lower than the rest of the floor, which is covered with tatami,—thick, soft mats of straw. If we are invited to follow the merchant to his private office we must remove our shoes before stepping up onto the tatami. The tatami serves as carpet, chairs, sofa, bed and table and must not be soiled by dirty shoes.

The private office has for walls sliding lattice frames covered with translucent white paper. There is no stove or radiator, only the hibachi; there are no chairs or sofas, only cushions on the floor; there are no pictures on the wall, only a kakemono (a scroll picture) and perhaps a vase of flowers. A Japanese girl comes in, bows and arranges the cushions near the hibachi. We sit down on our feet on the cushions, and if we have not already done so, we then present our cards and receive the merchant's in return. Quite often the merchant's card will have Japanese on one side and the English translation on the other. The merchant, in Japanese, welcomes us, hopes we are well, remarks about the weather or the cherry blossoms and indicates whether or not he can speak English. If he can I get the signal and I join in at the first opportunity and change the conversation to English. If he cannot speak English, my Japanese assistant must carry on the conversation and interpret for me. For some time we talk along, and I am asked about the length of time I have been in Japan, how long I expect to stay, what I think of the Japanese houses, who I think will be the next President of the United States, what my opinion of the Premier of Japan is, and numberless other questions.

By that time our hands have been warmed over the hibachi—and I am warmed up for business—over the hibachi—but first we must dispose of the tea which the girl has just brought in. I dispose of it without much effort on a cold day, for Japanese tea is warm, sometimes hot. In August, however, a little tea goes a long way.

Tea—Then To Business

The preliminaries being disposed of in fifteen or twenty minutes, we start talking business. The merchant will probably agree with us that we have the proper medium for reaching prospective customers and he wants to advertise and our prices are right—but "There's some question." Even if he is ready to advertise he will insist that we come again. There is no hurry, and he wants to think it over. We may fully convince him of the advisability of advertising, but we cannot convince him that now is the time—we must call again. We then talk some more on general topics and perhaps make a definite date for our next call. Being ready to depart, I shake hands with our prospect, for he knows that is foreign style and he expects me to be a true foreigner, but my Japanese assistant bows politely and after many words of thanks for his time and courtesy says "Sayonara"

We are then ready to put on our shoes and go to the next prospect. We must call many times before we can expect a contract. Regardless of how low or how high our rates may be the Japanese merchant expects a discount; he wants to buy advertising space as he buys and sells all his goods—by bargaining. It isn't a question of price but a matter of getting a less price than that first asked. This does not hold true with the large firms which deal internationally, but it is true of all small dealers whose business is local or confined to Japan.

Pay in Advance

If I have received a contract for one year, I suggest that we will give a 10 per cent. discount for cash in advance and quite often the cash is produced. I know of some newspapers in the United States that would be glad to collect their advertising revenue promptly at the expiration of a year's contract, not to mention a year in advance.

Working through an interpreter is slow at the best, but selling advertising space to a Japanese merchant who wants you to call many times is especially trying on an American accustomed to dealing with business firms who know that time is money.

Japan, as a country, is old but her commercial and industrial career is yet young and advertising has not reached the high plane of efficiency and honesty that it has in the United States.

Two Newspaper Men "Blimp" Victims

CHICAGO, July 23.—Earl H. Davenport, publicity agent for the White City Amusement Park and a former Chicago sport writer, was instantly killed, and E. H. Horton, a morning newspaper photographer, was seriously injured, when the great "blimp" of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company burst into flames here Monday and crashed through the skylight of the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank. It is believed Horton's injuries will prove fatal. Ten other persons were killed and 70 were injured.

LITTLE TRAGEDIES OF A NEWSPAPER OFFICE

"So Boss! Git over there."

If it should be your good fortune to be passing by a certain farm in Lincoln, R. I., around milkin' time and hear those more or less musical words of the farmyard just get out of your automobile and walk right up to the man behind the cow and introduce yourself.

One hundred chances to one the man who utters the words will be Vincent Bernasconi, who draws pictures for the sporting page of the Providence Evening Bulletin, and who also gets his name on the front page of the Journal now and then under a cartoon.

VINCENT BERNASCONI

The gentle reader knows him by the name of "Berni." When the correspondents of EDITOR & PUBLISHER sought him out for his picture he had to ask him his name, because all the newspaper men of Providence know him as Berni.

If there is anything Berni (we still insist on calling him that) likes above drawing pictures it's farming. When one visits his spacious grounds he need not ask if he is prosperous. The surroundings indicate that. Berni likes his pigs, he likes his hens and ducks and geese, he likes all his domesticated animals that go to make up his "farm zoo."

Does he like to dig in the dirt? Visit his cellar. There's the answer.

Berni first saw the light of day over in Birmingham, Eng., where he graduated from an art school. England either wasn't big enough nor were there the opportunities, Berni doesn't say, to hold him, so he came over to America.

Since seeing the high lights of this country he has painted, done advertising cartooning, program work and whatnot in addition to carrying on his farm, which he says he wouldn't give up for the world.

Berni joined the staff of the Bulletin about two years ago and made good from the start. While he is busy with his various enterprises he found time to embrace Masonry, takes a keen interest in his lodge and informs us he rarely misses a meeting. He is also a member of the Pen and Pencil Club of Rhode Island.

TO WELCOME FOREIGN CORRESPONDENTS

Rules Will Not Allow Their Membership in Congressional Press Gallery, but Chairman Karger Extends Invitation; Will Accord Privileges

WASHINGTON, July 23.—The rule of the Press Gallery of Congress which restricts membership to resident correspondents in Washington has necessitated the denial by the Standing Committee of the application of 50 correspondents of foreign papers, most of them having offices in New York.

Gus J. Karger, correspondent of the Cincinnati Times-Star, chairman of the Standing Committee, replying to the application submitted by Percy S. Bullen, secretary of the Association of Foreign Correspondents, has stated the inability of the committee to extend membership to the members of the association, but has assured Mr. Bullen that the foreign correspondents will be accorded every facility and courtesy of the Press Gallery whenever their work requires their presence in Washington.

Mr. Bullen stated in his letter to Chairman Karger that he was writing in behalf of about fifty foreign correspondents. He enclosed the formal applications of eight for membership and stated that others would file individual letters. A total of ten were received. They were from Arthur Plottier, of the Paris Daily Le Matin; Frank Dilnot, the London Courier Daily News; W. W. Davies, Buenos Aires La Nacion; Andrea Ferretti, L'Idea Nationale, Rome; Henri Collin Delavand, manager of the Paris correspondence branch of the Havas Agency; Edward Rascovar, the Central News, Ltd., of London; Percy C. Bullen, the London Daily Telegraph; Felice Ferrero, the Corriere Della Sera of Milan; F. W. Mordaunt Hall, the London Daily Sketch, and P. W. Wilson, the London Daily News.

Smith Made a Vice Consul

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 21.—Frederick N. Smith, war correspondent and well-known newspaperman, has been named vice-consul to Genoa, Italy. He covered the early Italian part of the war for American publications, returned and went to France with the 76th Division as a lieutenant. Since his army discharge he has been with the Middletown Press. Mr. Smith was editor of the Bridgeport Telegram at one time and later managing editor of the Lynn (Mass.) Telegram.

WISCONSIN DAILIES AT WAUKESHA

Meeting of League Well Attended—Publishers Urged to Advertise Their Papers—Editor & Publisher Service Warmly Praised

(BY STAFF CORRESPONDENCE)

WAUKESHA, Wis., July 19.—The Wisconsin Daily League, representing 29 daily papers published in 29 cities outside of Milwaukee, held their quarterly meeting here today at Fountain Inn. The meeting was promptly called to order by the president, J. L. Sturdevant, of the Wausau Record-Herald, and the opening address made by O. W. Hopkins of the State University. Mr. Hopkins pointed out the agricultural possibilities open to advertisers through daily newspaper advertising, emphasizing the fact that Wisconsin, among other things, is an excellent State for the development of the finer breed of swine and cattle. He urged that the publishers solicit the advertising of the various stock breeders' associations.

University Ready to Help

As an aid to the publishers, he told of the willingness of the university to at all times supply data showing the many implements and supplies continually needed by the business farmer.

The next speaker was Justin E. Barbour, president of Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Chicago, who made a short address on the value of standardization in all branches of newspaper publishing and who pointed to the statistical information appearing in EDITOR & PUBLISHER as an example of what standardization in the presentation of advertising rates and circulation had made possible. From these tables, Mr. Barbour said, it was instantly possible for manufacturers and national advertisers to determine the costs and circulations of our English Language Daily Press.

What Wisconsin Papers Offer

Citing Wisconsin as an example, Mr. Barbour pointed out that the 49 daily papers published there reached 462,876 people everyday, to say nothing of their families, and that a 5,000-line campaign could be run in each and every one of these papers at a cost of but $5,743.22.

Previous to the election of the Waukesha Herald to membership, upon its receiving second class mailing privileges, A. D. Campbell, the editor and general manager, told of establishing this paper but four months ago, and of its rapid progress. What he has done in Waukesha, can and should be done wherever daily newspapers are published, he declared.

Before the Herald was launched, Mr. Campbell and his associates secured contracts from enough local merchants to insure the success of his venture from the start. With few exceptions, all contracts were written on a basis whereby the advertiser must use a minimum amount of space each day, in addition to which one-twelfth of the space specified must be used each month.

He further said that the minimum rate was 25 cents per inch and that the paper now has a net paid circulation of 2,000, with subscription rates at 12 cents per week, 50 cents per month and $5 per year.

Editorial Organizations

In discussing the advisability of the League advertising in trade papers, Mr. Sturdevant remarked that there was no question but publishers, who derive their income from advertising, do not advertise their papers to the extent that they should.

A very important subject was brought up by Mr. Brandenburg, of the Madison Democrat, who read from a speech by the head of the State University of Journalism, in which the professor advocated the organization of editorial men.

In closing V. M. Hammett, Chicago, told of his success with the Newspaper Merchandising Service Company, under which 55 Illinois papers last year secured through his organization more than 11,300 inches of business never before in their papers. He told of his plans to extend his service to Wisconsin after which 18 of the publishers joined the Wisconsin service.

Editor Envies Tramp

"Uncle Bill" Schooler, editor and publisher of The Commonwealth, a weekly published at Somerset, Ky., frankly tells his readers in a recent issue that he is undecided whether to continue the harassed existence of a country publisher or take to the open road as a common tramp. His conclusions are set down in an editorial in which he tells an "unappreciative public" that he has never writes another line for his paper they can draw their own conclusions as to what happened. Regarding a tramp he met on the "open highway," he writes:

"The price of gasoline has no terrors for him. He doesn't have to take a bath unless he wants to. He can be hit with lazy, independent self while we must keep up the eternal bluff."

Journalists Touring Belgium Are Warmly Entertained

PARTY AT ZEEBRUGGE HEARING OF THE WAR OPERATIONS OF THE GERMANS AND BRITISH; INSETS SHOW PARTY ON RUINS OF A CHURCH AND WITH CARDINAL MERCIER

PARIS, July 8.—A party of 110 foreign journalists, representing nearly every allied and neutral country of the world accredited to the Peace Conference, have just returned to Paris after a week's journey through Belgium as the guests of the Belgian press.

A most comprehensive study was made of Belgium by the entire party, due to splendid arrangements by the Belgian press. As a result, Belgium's part in the war and the consequent suffering of her population and the damage to property are very thoroughly understood.

The party, while in Brussels, visited the Hotel de Ville (City Hall), where they were received by Burgomaster Marx, "the Fighting Mayor." At the Archbishopric there was a meeting with Cardinal Mercier, the prelate whose courage aroused the admiration of the world, and one of the valued souvenirs of the trip is a group photograph with the cardinal in the center.

At Zeebrugge the engineer of the port explained in detail the war operations of the Germans and the audacious attack by the British naval forces in April, 1918.

Visits were also made to Seraing, Dixmude, Dinant and many other points. Careful inspection was made of the ruined and pillaged factories.

R.R. MEN AUTHORIZE DAILY PAPER

Would Be Part of New Political Labor Party—Want Complete Plant

DENVER, July 23.—A resolution calling for erection and establishment of a brotherhood printing plant for printing the organization magazine and other union records was adopted yesterday at the convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen in session here. Cost of the plant was limited to $100,000. It probably will be located in Cleveland.

The convention adopted resolutions approving the order of Railway Conductors' plan to form a political labor party embracing the railway brotherhoods, with a rider providing for a daily paper to be owned by the party.

HOUSTON'S AD CLUB IS BUSY

Besides Getting Ready for New Orleans It Assumes More Work

HOUSTON, Tex., July 22.—"On to New Orleans" is the Houston Advertising Association's slogan and, together with the other civic organizations of the city, it is perfecting plans for the getting together a large delegation to attend the A. A. C. W. convention.

The Advertising Association is one of the big, live factors of this city. Always alert and ever ready to further anything known to be for the good of the community, the members have pledged themselves to aid in the campaign for new members for the Chamber of Commerce to make possible the creation of a highway department; to aid in raising funds for the establishment of a much needed charity hospital for Houston; and are also planning to take care of a delegation of at least 400 persons expected in this city en route to the A. A. C. W. J. B. Westover is president of the association.

Jack Barrows, recently of Denver Times, has become editor of "A. R. C. Rays," the Mountain States Red Cross magazine.

GAIN SPACE WITHOUT INCREASING PAPER'S SIZE, ADVISES EXPERT

News Print Conservation and Over 14% More Room on Each Page Assured by Column Change—Cost Trifling in Comparison to New Revenue Possibilities.

By Emil G. Myers.

THE war has been responsible for conservation in many lines of industry. The newspaper business along with other endeavors, has come in for its share of savings. Still there is a vast opportunity for cutting cost to a point which will mean increased profits to countless numbers of newspaper publishers all over the United States.

At this time, when display advertising is increasing in volume to such an extent that there is hardly a newspaper in the country which is not pressed for space to accommodate it, the vexacious question of how to secure more white space to accommodate this advertising becomes more perplexing.

Possible to Stop Losses on Extra Advertising

Often a publisher has sufficient advertising for one additional page, but not enough for two. Since he can only increase his paper by multiples of two pages at a time, he runs the additional page of advertising at a loss. Frequently also it means extra press work to put on two additional pages.

Change Easy on Weeklies

This article is directed at the country weekly newspapers, particularly those publishing the popular six-column quarto size. To them the problem of finding more space to accommodate a few more columns of advertising each week, as well as to give the reader a commensurate amount of news matter, is a most serious question. And yet they have the solution of it within their grasp. I refer to the 12-em column. By changing over to this measure, there is hardly a six-column quarto but what can accommodate an additional column, making their paper seven columns to the page. In an eight-page paper this would give them eight additional columns, or more than one full page additional space.

In most country weekly offices, the chases are large enough to accommodate two pages, with an inch and a half crossbar down the center. Paper size is 30 x 44. This leaves a generous margin on the outside edge as well as on the inside fold, which is practically wasted. By changing from 13 ems to 12 ems, and using 4-point column rules instead of the standard 6-point rules, 6½ picas in width are saved. By cutting the center crossbar of the chase down to 5 picas, and reducing the outside margins accordingly, the remaining 5½ ems are gained. Thus, seven columns are accommodated where only six columns could be handled formerly.

Readers Are Pleased

The question naturally arises: "What will we do with national advertising cuts?" As a matter of fact, most national advertising plates are on the basis of a 12-em column. In rare instances, it might be necessary to shave down a cut a trifle in order to accommodate it in a 12-em column, but the savings and increased space afforded under the 12-em measure are so vast as to more than offset any slight disadvantage occurring from oversize plates. Then, too, national advertising agencies are even now making provisions for 12-em columns, and besides, they are at all times ready and willing to cooperate with newspapers generally.

Naturally, country newspapers are slow to take up any radical change, fearing the effect it would have on their readers. As a matter of fact, the 12-em paper is in every way a big improvement over the 13-em measure. The narrower columns are easier to read, and the appearance of the paper generally is much more pleasing from a typographical standpoint. No publisher who is really progressive will overlook an opportunity such as this to increase his profits and to shave down his costs.

To date, only three or four weekly newspapers have had the temerity to change from a 13- to a 12-em measure, but all of them found the change very beneficial, and none of them has had a complaint from any of its readers.

One Publisher Notes Saving

John N. Stonebraker, publisher of the Carrollton (Missouri) Republican-Record, has this to say regarding the change he recently made from a 13- to a 12-em column:

"We cut our 13-em column to 12 ems; used 4-point column, head, and advertising rules; had the center bar at our quarto chases planed down to five picas wide; used mitered spacing on the long-up, and printed a seven-column paper on the same 30 x 44 sheet that we had been printing our six-column paper on. This gives a quarter inch margin all around, and makes what we believe to be a neater paper than the old; gives our readers the same amount of news the six-column paper would allow, and gives us 22.8 per cents more advertising capacity each week than the old paper permitted us. This space in a year will amount to $1,622.40 more gross revenue, figured at the rate of 13 cents per inch.

"In our office last year we printed twenty extra pages (over the 8-page minimum), which, figured at 15 cents per inch, amounts to $360. Deducting this from $1,622.40 capacity made possible by the change, it can be seen that we can handle $1,222.40 more advertising this year than last year, and at the same time save 3 per cent. of paper. All of which was done at a cost of $50 for new material."

To obtain $1,622 additional gross revenue at an outlay of $50 is surely one of the best investments any publisher can make. Another thing, the 12-em paper is bound to become a universal enterprise, especially where newspaper readers generally are favored with papers of this measure, and publishers appreciate its advantages.

Applies as Well to Dailies

There are also in the larger cities a number of newspapers published, which are still printing the seven-column size. To them the matter of increased speed has been even more of a bugaboo than to the country weeklies. Yet to change to an eight-column paper seemed out of the question, principally because rotary presses are not so flexible that one can jump at will from a seven- to an eight-column paper.

FACSIMILE OF A 12 EM COLUMN PAGE.

However, the course for this is just as simple as for the small town papers that use flatbed presses. They can cut their columns from 13 ems to 12 ems, and by cutting down their inside and outside margins secure enough space to add an additional column, which will give them eight columns in the space which formerly accommodated but seven columns. Thus, in a 16-page paper they would carry 16 additional columns, or the equivalent of two entire pages more space. A 12-page paper would give them 12 additional columns, or a page and one-half more space.

Of course, in the case of newspapers using rotary presses, a slight change will be necessary on the press, principally on the ink fountain, and some minor changes on the stereotyping machinery. At present, the entire expense will be negligible.

Only Small Changes Necessary

The matter of making the change in the composing room is of small moment. It will be necessary only to change mold liners on the Linotypes, and perhaps the brass sticks of the chases will have to be planed down a half inch or more to accommodate the additional column.

This is conservation of a kind that shows results immediately. It means dollars returned for every cent expended to make the change, and the writer believes that when 12-em newspapers become more universal that there will be even a larger newspaper reading public than at the present time.

DROP PINK WRAPPER POSTAL SCHEME

Many Newspaper Publishers Objected Because of Additional Cost, or Supplies of Regular Stock on Their Hands

The Post Office Department has withdrawn its recent suggestion to newspaper circulation managers that pink mailing wrappers be used on newspapers to readily identify them and facilitate their dispatch by mail handlers.

Word of this is conveyed in a circular letter sent by the Second Assistant Postmaster General to superintendents of Railway Mail Service, reading as follows:

"Referring to circular letter relative to pink wrappers on daily papers, please advise all publishers in your division that the request to use pink wrappers on daily papers was intended solely as a suggestion, in order that daily papers might be readily identified where there were large quantities to be handled in post offices situated at long distances from railway lines. Thus they would continue to receive, as in the past, prompt and better mail service treatment through to delivery to addressee.

"Because of the objection by a number of publishers to the use of pink wrappers, you will advise them that the suggestion is withdrawn."

James McKernan, circulation manager of the New York World and president of the International Circulation Managers' Association, said that many publishers had opposed the proposed innovation; some because of the greater cost of the pink paper, as compared with the kraft paper in present general use; and others either because they had a large supply of the kraft on hand, or had made contracts for its delivery.

"I also pointed out to members of the I. C. M. A. that we were not about the Post Office Department's suggestion," said Mr. McKernan, "that it was merely a suggestion and not an order and that therefore there was nothing to prevent other users of the mails from expediting the handling of their own mail by the same means."

HAS 50 YEARS' SERVICE

Major Fitzmaurice Has Worked from Compositor to Newspaper Owner

Providence, R. I., July 20.—Major Fitzmaurice has just celebrated his 55th anniversary in newspaper work. At present he is the westerly correspondent for the Norwich Bulletin. He is 67 years of age.

The major first entered the business when 11 years old in the composing room of the New London Evening Star. With other men he established the New London Telegraph, of which he acted as managing editor, business manager and eventually sole proprietor. About 14 years ago he sold the newspaper and has since been employed by the Norwich Bulletin.

URGES HOME-TOWN ADVERTISING IN LOCAL NEWSPAPERS

Expert Outlines Paid Campaign for Towns with Something Good to Sell—Says They Should Strive to Become Nationally Known

By Chalmers Lowell Pancoast.

NOW that there is a great movement for rebuilding destroyed French towns, the same kind of a movement should be extended to include American towns. For many, need to be reconstructed, aroused and advertised as well as those in foreign countries.

American towns have not suffered from destructive armed forces, as have French towns, but a worse fate has befallen thousands of good American towns. They have suffered from the indifference and negligence of their own citizens.

Every American Town Has Something to Advertise

Every American town, no matter how dead or alive, how large or small, should advertise in its own local newspaper, and in its neighboring newspapers. If a town really becomes wide-awake to its great opportunities for growth and development, it will quickly see this vision of advertising. How do I know it would be profitable for towns to advertise?

Well, here's the story:

While on a train in Connecticut recently I met a wide-awake manufacturer who was looking for a factory site. We both happened to be headed for the same town, and he wanted information on a great many points. He wanted facts which that town should have been advertising. He wanted to know what its advantages were. And these advantages should have been given publicity so that it would not have been necessary for this prospective factory-locator to go ont and hunt for facts.

One Town That Lost

When we reached a certain town the factory man bought a local newspaper, but there wasn't a word in the paper about the town's industrial and civic advantages. Here was a buyer, but the selling points about the merebandise were being concealed, or at least they were not to be easily found.

This town had a Chamber of Commerce, but no local office. The president of the organization was out of town, and the secretary was a bookkeeper in an office which required all his time. He didn't know much about the town, as he was a newcomer, and then, "it was best to see the president."

The man who was seeking a location for his factory—the man who could have brought into the town a thousand new residents—increased the revenue of every business concern in the city—caught the next train out of town. He could not find out what he wanted to know, and he was disgusted.

Only Local Advertising Needed

This town lost an opportunity for growth and development. Why?

Lack of advertising in its own local newspapers.

This town is a fair example of thousands of other towns in the United States.

They have something big to offer to the world—but they don't sell it—not even to the people in their own town. This little experience set me to thinking. If that town belonged to me, what would I do with it?

A town is no different from any other business that has some valuable commodity to sell.

Now, this town had a good newspaper, a commercial club, and 20,000 inhabitants. If I were president or secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of this town I would organize for action.

Every member of the club would be pumped full of enthusiasm for his town. It would be the duty of every business man to go out and sell this town to its own people. Make them come across with enough cold cash to secure a year's good advertising campaign in their local newspaper. They owe it to their town.

There is no more reason why a newspaper should support a town's advertising campaign, alone, than any other business should do it. Advertising a town is the business of every man getting his living out of that town. There are plenty of newspapers that do donate columns for free-town boosting material every year, but I've never yet known one whose efforts were appreciated as they should be. Another thing: free space is never worth more than it costs. Occasional puffs and nice flowery things said about a town is not advertising. It is not the kind that brings big results.

What any town needs is a regular day-in-and-day-out advertising campaign, built on an attractive presentation of the selling points of a town. When the Commercial Club has raised a town advertising fund the business-like thing to do is to contract for space in the local paper first, and use enough space to make the business story of the town register with the residents of the town first.

Every Day Work Counts

The campaign should begin in the local newspaper, because a town's own people need advertising to all the time to keep them continually boosting for their town. Then, when the campaign has started to secure results for the town, it should be extended to newspapers in other towns. A mighty attractive series of advertisements can be written about any town.

The town that the prospective factory locator left in disgust had more to offer than the average town. First, it had good factory sites—with a low cost in power and taxes. It had good retail stores, judging from the interesting window displays along the main street.

Picking a Live Town

One of the easiest ways of sizing up a town is to look for nationally advertised goods in the windows of local stores. If you find the merchants handle up-to-date, advertised merchandise, you can rest assured the town people are demanding the best quality of merchandise. Regardless of the fact that the Chamber of Commerce seemed to be taking a siesta, this town seemed alive and inclined to be progressive in its school buildings, public library, churches and homes. The town had a prosperous and well-to-do appearance. It had enough life, and attractive features, to appeal to the average factory-worker seeking a home where his children would have every advantage of education and culture.

Yet nobody knew this. And if they did they were keeping it quiet. Only a careful observer visiting the town would see all this valuable advertising material going to waste. There was enough "copy" running loose in that town to run a full page advertisement once a month, and a quarter-page advertisement every day, in the local paper for a long time.

If the average Commercial Club, Board of Trade, or Business Boosters' Association, would look at town advertising as a vital necessity in building up their town, they would get somewhere with greater ease. But instead of going at it as they would if it was their own private business, they hold a get-together meeting, talk loud and nice about their town and expect the local newspaper man to run a nice, big-type story about it on the front page—free—and that is just what it is worth. What the outsiders want are facts stated in a business-like way, not camouflaged with high school oratory.

Newspaper Is Voice of Town

The local newspaper is the voice of the town in which it is published. It is the daily representative or salesmen of that town. People in the outside world judge a town by what they read in its newspaper, and there is where any town campaign must start.

After the Chamber of Commerce has contracted for enough space to tell the town's advertising story so that it will get across big, they should also purchase enough copies to distribute them to passengers on all through trains, trollies or automobiles. If they haven't nerve enough to go that far, then provide for newsboys to offer the papers to all visitors or passers-through. A well presented newspaper always interests a stranger. But, most important of all, is the fact that the daily story in the local newspaper will soon have everybody in the town talking and boosting as they never did before.

Next, get the town people working in connection with the newspaper campaign. In other words, get every citizen interested in scattering the advertised story of the town.

Newspapers Will Help

The campaign can be called a "Pass-It-On" publicity movement. At the bottom of each advertisement a notice to all citizens to clip the advertisements from their newspaper, and send them in to every letter mailed to friends, with instructions to pass them on to some one who might be interested in what the town has to offer. If they don't write letters, then mail the clippings over to some friend. At the end of the year the newspaper can publish an honor roll of the names of people who have brought business to the town through their efforts along this line.

Any editor who happened to' be treated to a surprise like a real paid-for town advertising campaign would certainly respond with a series of snappy stories that would brighten up the entire campaign.

The advertising-town is always a live town. People want to live in a town that is growing—that is wide-awake, up-and-doing every minute.

There is no limit to the developments of a "Pass-It-On" campaign, once it gets in full swing. If the advertising copy appears every day in the local

PLANNING CLEVELAND A. A. C. W. REPRESENTATION

As befitting its close to 1,000 membership, the Cleveland Advertising Club is planning to send a record-breaking delegation to the coming New Orleans convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The accompanying picture shows L. G. Dickey, secretary, and C. W. Mears, president, at their desk in the club office, snapped while making arrangements for the Southern trip. President Mears, who is general advertising manager of the Winton Automobile Company, is on the left and Mr. Dickey is on the right of the picture.

As a factor in developing new ideas the Cleveland Ad Club membership is one of the most potential in the city. Many of the members are also Rotarians, or belong to the City Club, the Kiwanis Club, the Chamber of Commerce, Builders' Exchange, Real Estate Board, Gyro Club, Electrical League, and other similar civic or other organizations.

The headquarters, in the basement of the Hotel Statler, are among the most elaborate of any commercial organization in Cleveland. Spacious offices and a large assembly room, used Wednesdays and Fridays for noon luncheons, is a gathering place for several hundred of the liveliest advertising specialists in that section of the country.

The club makes it a point during the luncheon season to invite notable speakers, and some of the best known authors, editors and publicists of the country and Europe have addressed it during the past year. Noon luncheons are attended by from 200 to 400 members.

CO-OPERATIVE ADVERTISING PLAN HOLDS FINE POSSIBILITIES

Specialized Campaigns, Handled by Home Office Staff, Often Develop New Accounts Which Stick—Real Service Must be the Primary Aim.

By J. B. Keeney.

DURING the past two years co-operative advertising campaigns have been developed more thoroughly than before the American publisher began to feel the effects of war. Loss of advertising space due to the forced curtailment of the merchant's expenditures, prompted the publishers to seek new sources of advertising income.

The development of new territories, hitherto unadvertised lines of business and certain non-advertising professions, presented an opportunity for the use of co-operative publicity.

There Are Many Forms of Co-operative Advertising

Co-operative advertising campaigns are varied. Each effort has its own particular features, difficulties, opportunities for success and possibilities for failure. Solicitors and publishers are as much responsible for these successes and failures as the advertisers themselves.

Through careful consideration of local conditions it may be possible for some publishers to develop this class of advertising in his community without losses so frequently resulting from poorly conducted soliciting campaigns.

The "Special Edition" kind of co-operative advertising is perhaps the oldest variety. Unfortunately it has not improved with age. As most every publisher knows, the special "crews" which usually solicit these editions, work on a commission basis.

Speed and all other kinds of promises are their principal characteristics. The results are too frequently bad for the publisher who must remain in town and make good these wild promises of the solicitors who are soon "lost in the woods" gunning for new game.

Trade Pages Must Be Nursed

Special editions should be conducted by the regular advertising staffs of the publications contemplating such editions. This method may take longer but the fact that the solicitors are regular staff men, sure of their weekly salary (plus, perhaps, a commission on the extra business), prevents the men from making impossible promises to the advertisers.

When a publisher is forced to spend his profits making good promises of extra copies, reducing bills because of exaggerated rates and giving extra insertions because contracts were signed on promises of increased circulation figures and impossible positions, the Special Edition idea produces more enemies than dollars for the publisher.

"Co-operative Trade Pages" are good only when given careful attention throughout their entire run of six months or a year.

"Fillers" for Saturday

The writer recalls a grocery store campaign conducted by the neighborhood stores in a city of about 135,000 population. Ninety-four "corner grocers" united in an educational campaign to overcome the effect of the chain store growth which was expanding throughout that territory. The campaign was profitable for the publisher because it developed a source of income that had been previously considered barren of possibilities.

The advertisers felt the good effects of the effort and several of the stores, after a few months, developed into regular advertisers in other columns of the paper.

The newspaper that started the campaign did not renew it. A rivat publication secured the second contract.

In all such campaigns as these the publishers should figure on spending the greater part of the first year's profits to develop the advertisers associated with the plan. In most cases they are not "seasoned" advertisers and it requires close attention and service to hold them. They must be constantly reminded that the plan is a good one. Otherwise they lose interest and seldom renew their contracts.

"Manufasteurers" or "Industrial" pages are well known to all publishers. They act as fine "fillers" on Saturday or other days when the department store and general advertising is light.

They are composed of small "cards" or announcements, usually occupying five or six columns, and two or three columns of readers. The "Free Lance" solicitors who usually produce these pages get a liberal commission and find it a simple matter to renew contracts every six months or year.

If publishers only stopped to realize how simple it is to get this business and hold it after the first contract, they would assign this work to one of their regular staff and save the commission.

The fact that these pages are easy to renew is due to the character of the advertisers, usually the largest and most reliable manufacturing houses in the community. The firms are so large and the advertising costs are so small that long before the year is past, payment of the bill becomes an established part of advertiser's monthly business and receives very little attention.

The "Sub-dealer" pages are not as common as some forms of co-operative advertising campaigns. They usually put in their appearance around Automobile Show season. In localities where the car has several sub-agents in nearby towns, the automobile man of the newsrepresentative of some particular motor paper is able to sell $5, $10 or $15 space by phone or letter to each of these subdealers.

This extra space is clean profit and good new business. It helps the small subagent and gives the automobile distributor much more space through which he "swamps" his competitor who can not afford such large advertising when he is forced to pay for all of his publicity from his own pocket.

Localized Advertising for Manufacturers

"Anniversary" and "Grand Opening" co-operative editions are the least expensive to solicit and usually develop into entire sections of the paper. Every line is paid for.

Solicitation for this space is through a series of letters written on the stationery of the advertiser contemplating the special edition.

In the case of furniture house in Central New York which inserted a twelve-page section of this character during the opening of a new addition to its establishment, 18 of the 42 firms solicited by the dealer, responded with space contributions of sizes from ten inches to a half page.

Through this co-operation on the part of the retail merchant and the firms from which he purchased his stock, the readers of the paper were startled to see a twelve page section appear in one of the regular editions. The idea was a success from every point of view and the cost to the retailer was very small.

In the same city a few months later a stationery house which previously had never used larger than a sixty line advertisement in the local newspapers, inserted a six page announcement. In this case seventeen of the thirty-six manufacturers approached on the subject of co-operative publicity effort, contributed more than 70 per cent of the space.

Serving the Small Merchants

Big business was secured by this firm during the anniversary week and one order secured directly though the "edition" brought more profits than the entire cost of the edition to the retailer.

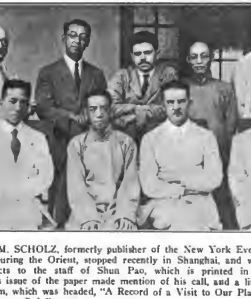
In such editions the entire space is charged directly to the retail advertiser. He in turn secures his money from the factories which either contribute their check or allow the cost of their space to be deducted from the next order of merchandise placed by the dealer.

The advertising man of the newspaper does all the work in connection with these editions.

"Neighborhood" co-operative advertising campaigns are becoming more profitable and popular than ever before. In one large New Jersey city where a few years ago such advertising was practically undeveloped even in a small way, at present one of the largest and most prosperous newspapers of the locality is spending much time and money in building up this class of publicity.

One section of the city, located some distance from the real shopping center contributes an entire one page to the advertising columns every Friday. During the holiday season two pages each week were quite common.

Regular Calls Necessary



This kind of co-operative advertising requires constant attention and careful solicitation. For weeks and months a representative of the newspaper must call regularly upon the merchants in the territory being developed. He must become familiar with the needs and desires of the members of that section. His work is more difficult than that of the man on the down town assignments.

The chief arguments presented by the merchants are the facts that this newspaper advertising is only good for the downtown department store. The solicitor who knows his business compares the proposition with the department store publicity. He compares the composite page of the neighborhood with the department store advertisement. The shoe dealer represents the shoe department of the department store. The druggist dealer is similar to the furniture department. The general effect is a department store advertisement of an entire neighborhood.

In time such co-operative advertising as this can be developed into a big factor in the columns of the progressive newspaper. It is profitable when properly developed and lasting when properly cared for by the right kind of a solicitor.

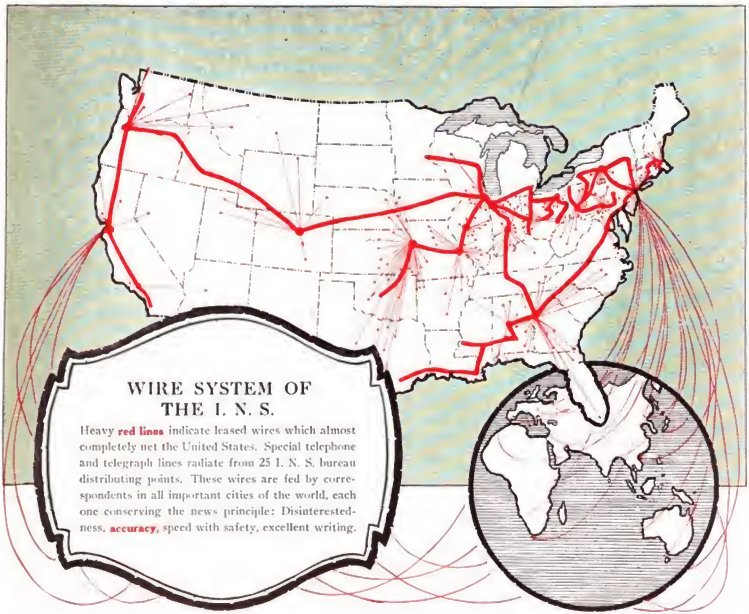
SHUN PAO ENTERTAINS EMIL SCHOLZ AT TEA



EMIL M. SCHOLZ, formerly publisher of the New York Evening Post, who is touring the Orient, stopped recently in Shanghai, and while there paid his respects to the staff of Shun Pao, which is printed in Chinese. The next day's issue of the paper made mention of his call, and a literal translation of the item, which was headed, "A Record of a Visit to Our Plant by American Newspaperman," follows:

"Yesterday afternoon at five o'clock, Mr. Emil M. Scholz, formerly publisher and one of the former proprietors of the New York Evening Post, paid a visit to our plant. He was soon welcomed with tea and refreshments by our manager, L. Z. Sze, and Messrs. P. K. Chu and Tong Ching Yuen and T. B. Chang acted as ushers.

"There were also J. B. Powell, chief editor of Millard's Review; J. E. Doyle, of the China Press; George Sokolsky, of the Shanghai Gazette; A. G. Loehr, American vice-consul; A. R. Hager, president of the Advertising Club of Shanghai; Y. S. Tsao, the former Chinese consul-general in London, and others, who all visited the different departments of the paper. As a token of a remembrance a picture was taken. It was until seven o'clock that the party began to dismiss with pleasure."

VAST WIRE SYSTEM OF THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

Publishers of evening and Sunday newspapers are respectfully requested to study this huge wire system with reference to their respective news problems.

The I. N. S. is growing rapidly both in numbers of subscribers and in the esteem of editors who handle its reports day by day.

The sound rules of good journalism are applied to I. N. S. reports. Editors trust the I. N. S. when it speaks, not because of any pretention but because of its enviable record for accuracy.

I. N. S. news matrices are unequalled both for selection and printability.

POLACHEK APPOINTED SUN PUBLISHER

Assumes Duty August 1—Ervin Wardman Retains Vice-Presidency and W. C. Reick Will Give Attention to News Department, as in Past

Victor Polachek, for more than twenty years in the service of Hearst newspapers and who a month ago resigned as publisher of the New York American, will become publisher of the New York Sun and the Evening Sun, August 1. Since leaving the American, Mr. Polachek has been on a fishing trip in Maine. A letter accepting an offer made him by the Sun and the Evening Sun was received Tuesday.

W. C. Reick, who was majority stockholder of the Sun publications when Frank Munsey bought them, and who has since been right-hand man to Mr. Munsey in their management, devoting his attention principally to the news departments of the two papers, will continue his activities along the same lines as before. Ervin Wardman, who is now vice-president and publisher, will relinquish the latter title, but it is understood that the scope of his authority also will remain unchanged.

Mr. Polachek was born in New York City and from the time he began as a copy reader on the old New York Morning Journal, rose steadily in the Hearst service. He became publisher of the New York American in 1918, having for three years previously been assistant general manager of the Hearst newspapers.

ALBERT ROMEIKE WINS

Court of Appeals Rules He Has Right to Use Name

The Court of Appeals of the State of New York has just affirmed, with costs, the judgment in favor of the defendant in the injunction suit brought by Henry Romeike, Inc., vs. Albert Romeike & Co., Inc. In dismissing the complaint for the injunction, Mr. Justice Dowling said:

"It would be difficult to find a case of alleged unfair trade competition where the record is as barren of any evidence of fraud, false representation or unfairness as the one now under consideration.

"Nor is there any effort made to show confusion as to these two corporations, save by evidence which is either valueless, incompetent or conjectural. If the defendant had been guilty of using any unfair trade devices, it should have been easy to prove it, in view of the ingenuity resorted to in the effort to create evidence."

The court sustained the contention of Albert Romeike that he had the absolute right to use his own name in his own business or in the name of a corporation in which he was a stockholder.

Kentucky Paper Burned Out

(BY TELEGRAPH)

MARION, Ky., July 22.—The plant of the Crittenden Press was destroyed by fire here early today with a loss of $6,000; insurance of $3,000 was carried by the owner, J. S. Hogard was recent purchaser of the paper. The fire spread quickly to other buildings of the business section and the flames were not checked until the damage amounted to $250,000.

Larke and Cornell to Europe

George H. Larke, assistant business manager, and Robert H. Cornell, of the national advertising department of the New York World, will sail Saturday on the "Aquitania" for London and Paris to arrange European advertising representation for the World. They will be gone about three weeks.

All American and British cable censorship was lifted last evening.

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

RICHARD J. FINNEGAN

THE cherished idea of the last generation of newspaper men that one must of necessity go from paper to paper over a period of years before he is a really seasoned news man is most beautifully exploded in the example of Richard J. Finnegan, managing editor of the Chicago Daily Journal, "Dick" Finnegan, as all the mid-western profession knows him best, is a one-job man. For years past he has filled that job completely.

His boyhood ambition was to be a good newspaperman, and he set about attaining it in thorough fashion. While still a youngster in school, he devoted his vacations working as office boy for the old Chicago Chronicle. There he learned that the library is the most important part of any newspaper office and he studied its utilization through three summer holidays. He handled a newspaper delivery route in the early mornings through the year, attended the old West Division high school until 2:30 each afternoon, and then reported at the Chronicle office for work. Frank Bowley was then managing editor of the paper. Lacking any sizeable volume of advertising, the Chronicle sought to fill much of its space with letters from subscribers and the handling of these became one of Mr. Finnegan's main duties.

Finally, one vacation time, he was given opportunity to write space copy. The afternoon of the terrible Iroquois Theatre fire he happened to be the only reporter in the local room. That was his grand chance for distinction and Dick Finnegan seized it. He managed to penetrate to the frightful top gallery of the theatre and the story he wrote of what he saw there won him a permanent place on the paper's reporting staff.

Later he transferred to the old Chicago Inter-Ocean and served as a reporter for two years. It was at this time that he began to study law nights, and in order to do this he again shifted to the reportorial staff of the Chicago Daily Journal which, as an afternoon paper, left his evenings free. He has remained with the Journal ever since, covering general assignments, labor and the city hall run as a news man; rising to automobile editor; then being sent to cover state legislative sessions as Springfield correspondent.

It was while covering labor that Mr Finnegan began the study of the convict labor system, especially as applied to road work in Colorado. This led to his appointment as chairman of the Good Roads Commission of the Chicago Motor Club, and while filling that office he called the first Good Roads state convention in Illinois, which drew an attendance of delegates from automobile clubs, civic chambers of commerce, women's organizations and members of legislature. From this was evolved Illinois Highway Improvement Association, whose first secretary was Mr. Finnegan, and which today has resulted in the campaign for the $6,000,000 bond issue now assured.

Later Mr. Finnegan was appointed a member of the Dixie Highway Commission by Governor Dunn, and reappointed by Governor Lowden. He was Democratic candidate for Congress from the 10th congressional district in 1910; was appointed a member of the Cook County Jury Commission by the judges of the county in 1911, serving three years. He became city editor of the Chicago Journal in 1914, and managing editor two years later.

Mr. Finnegan's birthplace was less than five blocks distant from his present offices in the Journal building. He is married and has three children; likes to work at his desk right out in the local room where he is surrounded by his "boys"; is an active member of both the Iroquois and the Chicago Motor clubs.

BOSTON PAPERS GRANT WRITERS INCREASE

Recognize Union and Give Minimum Wage Scale—Publishers' Control of News and Editorial Policy Guaranteed by Union—Lynn Next

(BY TELEGRAPH)

BOSTON, Mass., July 22.—The news writers of Boston, at a mass meeting this afternoon, ratified a new wage scale as drawn up by the Boston Publishers' Association.

The publishers drew up the agreement after they had been assured by the wage conference committee of the writers' union that that body was prepared to recommend for adoption any plan that might be devised which would give the publishers the continued undivided control of the editorial and news policies of the papers.

The question of the recognition of the union has been definitely settled and the publishers will meet the representatives of the union at any time on any question.

The Agreement

The Publishers' memorandum as ratified follows:

1.—Union affiliation and activities shall not constitute cause for discrimination or a change in the present friendly relations and customs of the profession. ("Present customs" is held to mean the continuance of vacations, time off, liberty to do other work on their own time as at present, etc.)

2.—District news men, members of the union, who devote their entire and exclusive time to one office, and who have had not less than three years' experience on a daily newspaper shall be paid not less than $30 per week.

3.—Reporters, news writers and staff photographers, members of the union, other than district men or correspondents, who have had three years or more practical experience as such on a daily newspaper and who devote their entire time to one office shall be paid not less than $38 per week.

4.—Desk men, editorial writers, and re-write members of the union, who devote their entire time to this class of work in one office, and who have had not less than three years' experience on a daily newspaper, shall be paid not less than $45 per week.

This agreement is to take effect as of June 6, that is, the wages called for date back to that date.

Two Papers Have No Agreement

The new scale gives a large majority of the Boston news writers a 25 per cent. increase over their present wages and represents an increase of approximately 40 per cent. over the wages paid last July.

The only daily newspapers in the city not directly concerned in the agreement are the Boston Transcript and Christian Science Monitor.

These two papers have no agreement with any labor organization, but have always met it a rule to meet or exceed the union scale in dealings with their employees. It is therefore expected that this policy will be carried out in the case of the news writers.

The Union committee is expected to direct its attention next to Lynn, where a 100 per cent. organization is reported to have been attained. The publishers in that city have already been presented with a proposed scale, which is the same as that in Boston with certain additional clauses inserted to meet local conditions.

FORTY NEWSPAPER MEN ELECTED TO SIXTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

Many of Them Are Still Active in Harness—List Includes Senators Hitchcock, Capper, Owen, McCormick, Warren, and Many Members of the House

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Forty members of the Sixty-Sixth Congress in preparing their autobiographies for the Congressional Directory have directed attention to the fact that they are entitled to the distinction of being or having been newspapermen, but several graduates of the profession failed to mention their service.

Many still are active publishers; others were publishers at one time or another in the past, but not a few boasted of having been active newsgatherers.

President of N. E. A. Holds Seat in Congress

From California, Representative Charles H. Randall, of Los Angeles, makes a brief but broad claim to fame by a simple reference to the fact that he is a "newspaper editor and publisher."

Representative Henry Z. Osborne, also of Los Angeles, goes to greater lengths to establish his connection with the profession. After describing his service in the Civil War, Mr. Osborne stated:

"After the war worked several years as printer in New York, Cincinnati, Memphis, New Orleans and Austin, Tex.; was New Orleans correspondent for Chicago Tribune from 1873 to 1878, and reporter and writer on New Orleans papers; in latter year (1878) moved to the five gold mining camp of Bodie, Cal., where for six years was editor of the Bodie Daily Free Press; was editor and publisher of the Los Angeles Evening Express for 13 years, 1884 to 1897."

Representative Guy U. Hardy, a new member from Colorado, wrote that in 1895 he purchased the Canon City Record and "has since been engaged in the publishing business, is at present editor and publisher of the Canon City Daily and Weekly Record and the Colorado Press." He is president of the National Editorial Association.

Delaware Represented

Delaware's single member of the House, Caleb R. Layton was editor of the Union Republican, of Georgetown, Del., from 1897 to 1905.

Senator Medill McCormick, of the famous Chicago Tribune family, dismisses his business career in three words, "writer and publisher," while Senator Harry S. New, of Indiana, son of the founder of the Indianapolis Journal and connected with that paper for many years, makes no reference to his journalistic career.

Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, describes his newspaper career in some detail. After obtaining an education in the common schools of Garnett, Kan., he said he learned the printing trade on the Garnett Journal, went to Topeka in 1884 and became a typesetter on the Topeka Daily Capital, "of which he is now owner and publisher." He shifted from the printer's ease to the reporter's beat and soon to the city editor's desk.

Former Reporters

"In 1891," the Senator continued, "he went to New York and was a reporter on the New York Tribune, and in 1892 was in Washington as special correspondent." Senator Capper, incidentally, is the only member of the Congressional Press Galleries to later find a seat on the floor of the Senate. He purchased the North Topeka Mail in 1893, a venture he describes as "starting in business for himself." The paper was a weekly which Capper later combined with the Kansas Breeze. A few years later he purchased the Topeka Daily Capital and other publications.

Representative Homer Hoch, of Marion, Kan., described himself as an editor and lawyer.

Riley J. Wilson, a member of the House from Louisiana, was editor of the Catahoula News from 1898 to 1904.

Willfred W. Lufkin, of Massachusetts, was a newspaper correspondent.

James A. Gallivan was a political reporter on Boston papers for many years.

Joseph Walsh, another former newspaperman in the Bay State delegation in the House, also was a reporter.

Representative Charles A. Nichols, of Michigan, graduated from the local room of the Detroit News to a seat in the House, while Louis C. Cramton, also of Michigan, still is an active newspaperman as publisher of the Lapeer County Clarion.

Frank E. Doremus, of Michigan, was a newspaperman at one time.

In the Minnesota delegation, Representative Harold Knuston, Republican "whip" in the House, said he is a newspaperman by profession, having published the Royalton Banner and the Foley Independent.

Former Speaker Champ Clark's experience as a country editor and William L. Nelson's long association with the Bunceton Weekly Eagle give the Missouri delegation two members of the craft.

Representative Carl W. Reddick, of Montana, failed to mention his service on the Winnemac (Ind.) Republican and the White Pigeon (Mich.) Journal.

A Big Trio

Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, establisher of the Omaha Evening World in 1885 and now is publisher of the Omaha Morning, Evening and Sunday World-Herald.

Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, was editor of the Concord Monitor for 19 years, and Senator Walter E. Edge, of New Jersey, who retired as governor of that State to enter the Senate, founded the Atlantic City Press and later purchased the Atlantic City Evening Union, both of which he published while conducting an advertising agency which attained an international status.

Edmund Platt, of Poughkeepsie, and William H. Hill, of Johnson City, are the newspapermen in the New York delegation. Mr. Platt began as an editorial writer on the Superior (Wis.) Evening Telegram. Since 1891, he has been engaged in publishing the Poughkeepsie Eagle, which had been owned by his family since 1828. He became editor of the paper in 1907, upon the death of his father. Through the purchase of the News-Press in 1915, the name of the paper was changed to Poughkeepsie Eagle-News. Mr. Hill is editor of the Johnson City Record.

The Non-Partisan member from North Dakota, John M. Baer, is a cartoonist and writer.

Senator Warren G. Harding, of Ohio, has been a publisher in Marion since 1884.

Three Ohio members of the House are newspapermen, Charles J. Thompson, of Defiance, was publisher of the Defiance Express for 13 years. He purchased it as a weekly in 1889 but made it a daily five years later. He was a printer on the Wapakoneta, O., Bee in 1876 and publisher of the Anderson, Ind., Herald in 1884.

Representative Simeon D. Fess, of Yellow Springs, Ohio, was editor of World Events from 1903 to 1907.

William A. Ashbrook, of Johnstown, Ohio, began the publication of the Johnstown Independent when he was 19 years old and he still is publisher of that paper.

Owen and Ashurst on List

Senator Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, like Senator Henry F. Ashurst, of Arizona, dismissed his newspaper associations with a brief reference to work as an editor.

Everette B. Howard, of Tulsa, Okla., who was born in Kentucky, stated that he began life as a printer and newspaperman.

Representative Charles N. McArthur, of Portland, Ore., was a reporter on the Morning Oregonian and in the Portland office of the Associated Press prior to 1903.

In the Pennsylvania delegation, Representative Anderson H. Walters, is editor and publisher of the Johnstown Tribune; Representative J. Hampton Moore, of Philadelphia, was court reporter on the Public Ledger and now writes a Washington letter to the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger, and Representative Ben K. Focht is editor of the Lewisburg Saturday News, a position he has held since he was 19 years old. Representative M. Clyde Kelly is the principal owner and editor of the Braddock Daily Herald.

James F. Byrnes, representating the Aiken, S. C., district was an editor for several years, while Harry L. Gandy, of Rapid City, S. D., who was engaged in newspaper work in northern Indiana for several years now is one of the publishers of the Wasta Gazette in South Dakota.

Representative Joseph Jefferson Mansfield, of Columbus, Tex., established the first newspaper ever published in Eagle Lake, Tex., and later was editor of the Colorado Citizen, of Columbus, Tex.

Sutherland and La Follette, Too

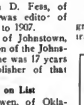
Representative Frank L. Greene, of Vermont, was a reporter on the St. Albans Daily Messenger in 1891 and became owner of the paper in 1899.

Representative Albert Johnson, of Washington, now publisher of the Daily Washingtonian, at Hoquiam, Wash., worked on the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Washington Post, New Haven Register, Tacoma Daily News and Seattle Daily Times.

Senator Howard Sutherland, of West Virginia, became a newspaperman after leaving college in 1889, editing a paper at Fulton, Mo.

Senator Robert L. LaFollette, of Wisconsin, continues as the directing force in the publication which bears his name.

Jaime C. De Veyra, one of the resident commissioners from the Philippine Islands, was one of the founders of El Nuevo Dia of Cebu, the first Filipino paper published advocating freedom for the islands.



Carpenter Off for the N. E. A.

CHICAGO, July 23.—The Inland Daily Press Association and the Illinois Daily Publishers' Association have appointed Willard E. Carpenter, publisher of the Lincoln (Ill.) Courier-Herald, to represent them at the coming meeting of the National Editorial Association in the Northwest.

SCENERY IS LURE IN SELLING NORTHWEST

In Its Advertising, Pacific Tourist Ass'n Uses Beauties of Nature as Attractive Packages in Which to "Wrap Up" Many Natural Resources

Have you ever considered wrapping a great, rich section of a nation in an attractive package and selling it by means of advertising?

HERBERT CUTHBERT.

"Countless manufactured products have thus been successfully commercialized and good will of untold value established for them, so why shouldn't it be applicable to our commodity?" argued the advertising experts of the Pacific Northwest Tourist Association back in the early part of 1917. It certainly sounded plausible, so an experimental advertising campaign was laid out and it has proved remarkably successful.

In speaking about it recently, Herbert Cuthbert, executive secretary of the tourist organization, said:

Describing Natural Resources

"During the past two and a half years we have been actually selling the Pacific Northwest in an attractive package. What do we mean by selling the Pacific Northwest? We mean that we offer those things that are in the Pacific Northwest.

"Because our association is known as the Pacific Northwest Tourist Association it does not follow that we cater only to the tourist, and that he is the ultimate object of our endeavors. Primarily we tend to interest the tourist, but underlying all our efforts is the one great object of selling the Pacific Northwest and all that it is to new settlers, new manufacturers, new residents, new investors.

"Our great object is to spread broadcast the fact that Oregon, Washington and British Columbia form a territory that is richer in natural resources than any other part of this continent. Our advertisements all contain attractive and alluring scenes of the Pacific Northwest. The only criticism that I know that has been made of our advertising came from a materialistic gentleman who thought that our advertisements were not descriptive, too scenic and were not chiefly composed of the facts in relation to our natural resources which I have just given you.

"But if we gave only such facts in our ads. the great bulk of the people would never read them. It is like the sugar coating on a pill. They have to be made palatable."

Birmingham-Glenn Wedding Tomorrow

Ernest F. Birmingham, editor of the Fourth Estate, and Miss Mae Catherine Glenn will be married tomorrow evening at 9 o'clock at Harperly Hall, 1 West 64th street, New York. Miss Glenn is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James Sheppard. Mr. Birmingham established the Fourth Estate twenty-five years ago and has been its directing head and principal owner ever since.

Jack Shields, of the Houston Chronicle, took a trip in an airplane in the interest of the publicity campaign for recruits for air service, and wrote an account of his trip for the newspaper.

CHICAGO AD AGENCIES BUY BIG SPACE

Liberal with Newspaper Copy in Telling Stories of Helping Clients to Success Through Advertising — Advocate Printed Word Protection

CHICAGO, July 22.—For five or six months past quite a number of Chicago advertising agencies have been using space liberally in local morning and afternoon newspapers, advertising to the business men the theories behind their respective businesses and the forms of service which the agencies respectively are prepared to render.

The Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Co., 39 South La Salle street, is using small single-column space, forcefully emphasizing the kinds of selling copy they create. The Erwin & Wasey Company, using larger two-column space, is conducting their personal campaign along similar lines, but the copy tends to the epigrammatic and always is couched in politely confidential phraseology. One recent advertisement, for example, says:

"We confess that we invite an unusual degree of co-operation from the advertiser in the belief that his experience is invaluable to our decisions to his problem." Both agencies utilize the single-thought, single-sentence copy idea.

Methods of Success Advertised

The William H. Rankin Company, 104 South Michigan avenue, is using full single-column space in the "Brass Tacks" copy series, which goes into striking details of their service, organization facilities and methods by which they have achieved success for various of their nationally-familiar clients. A single testimonial story of a client is told in each advertisement. The copy is given an nearly the typographical appearance of regular editorial copy as possible.

Possibly, however, the most unusual campaign of the kind now being conducted locally is that of the Mallory, Mitchell & Faust Agency, 189 West Madison street, which directs the attention of prospective advertisers at home entirely new phases of advertising and of the agency business, while at the same time, more or less directly benefiting the publishers of every paper used.

"There are today two missing links in advertising," states Paul Faust, secretary and treasurer of Mallory, Mitchell and Faust, Inc., in explaining the idea behind his company's campaign, "and neither of them are to be found in advertising itself. Neither can they be in the careful, scientific preparation of advertising copy. Neither in the painstaking analysis of a product to ascertain those points which lend themselves most suitably to advertising results.

The Missing Points

"The first and greatest of these two missing points is one quite generally recognized by sales executives in all lines of business the country over. This point is that every advertiser should himself take his entire sales organization and not only impress every member with the importance of its advertising, but should show every salesman how to utilize that advertising campaign personally to increase sales.

"Up to this time salesmen as a whole have continued functioning almost altogether upon the old-fashioned price, terms and dating basis. They may have been told and more or less impressed with the fact that their firm was spending a great deal of money on co-operative advertising, but their actual understanding of it went no further than that generality. Hence, whatever efforts the comparative few of them did make toward calling dealers' attention to the campaign was done in a haphazard, half-hearted way.

Now Beyond the Formative Stage

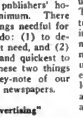
"Advertising today has got beyond the purely formative, experimental stages. The practical value of media to reach and influence the public no longer is questioned by anyone, so the old problem of "educating" is largely done away with. Business men nowadays know, as well as we agency men, that the consumer will see and read their published copy. The precise and economical and logical expenditure of their money has been made a comparatively simple and safe matter through reports of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

"Guesswork has been eliminated; the element of chance and publishers' bunk reduced to a minimum. There now remain just two things needful for the effective agency to do: (1) to define the advertiser's exact need, and (2) to show how the best and quickest to meet that need. It is these two things which constitute the key-note of our present campaign in the newspapers.

"Utilization of Advertising"

"Mallory, Mitchell & Faust devised the phrase 'utilization of advertising' to express the need of the public publishing affairs. We aim to meet the common complaint of manufacturers that they cannot persuade their salesmen to work in close co-operation with their advertising departments. We have divided our campaign in 'chapters,' running nine or ten pieces of copy to each.

"Our purpose is to demonstrate to shop advertisers how the value of their present advertising may be multiplied in assisting to reduce sales expense, if properly utilized by the salesmen themselves, pointing out the necessity of thoughtful advertising to protect their factory investments and to make business expansion safe and sane.



"The benefits of this policy to the publisher are obviously that it makes his paper far more effective to his advertisers than ever it was under the old system of buying a certain amount of space, preparing good copy and letting it go at that. If the utilization of advertising idea is in fact carried out, it will mean that complete results will be obtained from media, where hitherto surface results only have been obtained."

Must Give Up His "Throne"

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 23.—President George Finley, of the newly formed Press Club, must soon resign for he is also the managing editor of the Bridgeport Sunday Herald, succeeding Alfred S. O'Brien, resigned. The club's constitution prohibits those with executive authority in newspaper offices from holding office. Leo M. Pasquin, vice-president, will probably succeed to the chair. Mr. O'Brien is to ally himself with William R. Bull, bond salesman in the city.

"EDDIE" IS NOW SIR EDWARD MORRISON OF CANADA

THEY called him "Eddie" when he started; to Canada's fighting men he will always be "Dinky," but personal valor has caused King George to make him Major-General Sir Edward Whipple Bancroft Morrison, C. B., C. M. G., D. S. O., of all Canada.

MAJ.-GEN. SIR EDWARD MORRISON

Canadian newspapermen played their part full well during the four and a half years the Dominion was under arms—at the front and at home. They "carried on" in a way that contributed no mean part in the final crushing of the Central Powers, but of the many distinctions won by Canada's newspaper representatives that contributed by Major-General Morrison, as commander of the Canadian Corps Artillery, and one of the world's foremost authorities on guns and gunnery, is among the best.

General Morrison's military training began in his early days of newspaper work, in Hamilton, Ont., when he made soldiering his hobby. His confreres of those days recall that many a battle he fought alone in the countryside adjoining the city.

Then came the Boer War, and "Eddie" Morrison was into it heart and soul. After South Africa had become a part of the Empire the Major-General Morrison to be returned to Ottawa, as managing editor of the Citizen.

Just a matter of years before the Huns over-ran Belgium, Morrison visited Germany and perceived the enormity of the German war machine. He submitted to the War Office a report that made a good many of the heads "take notice," and on coming back to Canada he persistently warned the Dominion that conflict with Germany was inevitable. As a result he was dubbed "the war editor," by non-believers.

Meanwhile he gave up newspaper work to become director of Canada's artillery. When the war cloud broke, he went overseas in command of the First Brigade, Artillery, C. E. F.

At Ypres, with a limited number of men and guns, Morrison did what is now a matter of history. From that time on, each successive engagement in which the Canadian gunners figured was a repetition of the first action, and he climbed from a lieutenant-colonel in command of a brigade to major-general, commanding the entire artillery force of Canada.

Canada's "father of the guns" is a quiet, little, rather stern-looking man, with steel-grey eyes and a stubby, thick moustache. Absolutely fearless and efficient to the "—nth" degree.

Starting Agency in Rochester

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 20.—Augustus B. Hone and William McLoud are starting an advertising agency in this city, with more than a well known in the local field. Mr. Hone was secretary of the merchants' retail council of the Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. McLoud has been with the Kellogg Toasted Cornflake Company and the Bates Advertising Company.

Toledo Blade's Gain 1,953,355 Lines

A copy error in the recent advertisement of the Toledo Blade, in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, showed that newspaper's advertising gain for the first six months of 1919, over the same period of 1918, to have been 593,355 lines. In reality the increase was 1,593,355 lines.

SERVES ADVERTISERS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Unique Society Nearly 20 Years Old and of Small Membership Collects Data, Works for Higher Ethics and Exchanges Experiences

By Herbert C. Ridout.
London Editor, Editor & Publisher

BRITISH advertisers are in possession of a society that has done excellent work in the protection of their interests, but for some strange reason its membership, although it includes some of the largest advertisers in the country, amounts to only about 150 instead of ten times that number.

The society is the Advertisers' Protection Society Ltd., with offices at 35 New Broad street, London E. C. 2, and to my knowledge it has been in existence some twenty years. At a bazard, I am inclined to attribute the comparative non-success of the society to the fact that though its members are advertisers, they do not advertise. It is true that most commercial advertisers receive circulars from them during each year, but the "boosting" looked for in such a body seems lacking. As the current annual report shows, it is quite evident that the society is doing good work, but without an extended membership it has not the power to achieve its ideals.

Optimistic on Future

The report of the society for the past year affords an interesting review of the current situation, and indicates a complete optimism in the future. It holds that advertising is likely to increase greatly in volume.

Paper restrictions are practically abolished. Periodicals will be able to print as much advertising as they can get, and now, it is claimed, is the time for advertisers to criticize more closely than ever the prices and values of the spaces that are offered to them.

That is where the society should be indispensable to any advertiser who desires to spend his money judiciously. There is no item in the accounts of a firm in which a leakage is likely to be so large, and at the same time so difficult to detect, as the item of "advertising." The function of the society is to disseminate such information among its members as will enable them to discover and stop such leakages. War inflation of prices has been far too rife during the past three or four years, therefore it is highly necessary that advertisers should form themselves into a strong and active force and so protect their vital interests, which are constantly being threatened.

For example, advertisement rates were considerably put up during the war, principally on account of the paper shortage, and again rose owing to cost of labor and paper. Circulation figures were withheld, and undoubtedly sales in a large number of cases were reduced, so the advertiser was penalized in every way.

Very little information is forthcoming from publishers as to their sales at the present time, or as to any reduction in rates even though paper is now coming forward enabling more pages to be added, with consequent revenue.

No donbt publishers will hold on to all they can get, therefore it is more necessary than ever that advertisers should organize and discipline themselves into a power that can exact fair play and justice.

That the society has rendered valuable service to its members in the past is sufficiently proved by the fact that it has scores of over ten years standing, and a dozen or more who date back to the foundation of the society in the closing years of the nineteenth century. During the last twelve months some thirty-five more have been added to the list, while only one has resigned.

The work done by the society during the year under review has not been of a sensational order. The unsettled conditions that have prevailed have prevented that, but much useful work has been figures greater pressure still is necessary. That pressure could be exerted effectually if the society numbered about 300 or 400 members instead of about 150, as it does. Actually, in my view, the membership should be nearer 1,000.

One reason for the lack of extension in the Advertisers' Protection Society lies in the fact that in its earlier years it worked quietly with the object of es-

AN OUTPOST OF DEMOCRACY ON TOP OF THE WORLD

ONE of the bright spots in life for the United States and British soldiers who are fighting the Bolshevik up near the top of the world has been a little four-column American newspaper that has overcome many seemingly unsurmountable obstacles and bolstered morale, even now and then causing a hearty laugh, along the snow banked fighting front of northern Russia.

The American Sentinel was born at Archangel on December 10, last, and has been issued weekly since. It is financed principally by the American Red Cross Mission. Capt. Roger Lewis, a former newspaper man who was attached to the mission and Reed Lewis, the Archangle representative of the American Committee of Public Information, decided that it was possible to establish the paper after the British had given the task up as impossible because they could not find the necessary type.

The Americans spent two months combing the Russian print shops of the Archangel district for English type and finally gathered enough to start publication. It was voted the worst "pied" bunch of type ever thrown under one roof.

Now, however, the American Sentinel is a going paper with a wide circulation and no advertising. It is true though it is not even now unusual to see Italic F, of 12-point G popping out more or less miscellaneously among the 10-point type, in which most of the columns are set.

The Sentinel features news of the army such as minstrel shows, dances and communications from soldiers in the field, but it also prints the news of the outside world and "from home" on far as it is able to secure it. The Sentinel has become a regular and necessary army ration and goes forward to the scattered units in the northern wilderness just like ammunition, bully beef and cootie powder.

The difficulties that the mechanical force, which was recruited from the convalescent hospital and is assisted by Russian girls, had to overcome were many. In the very beginning it was discovered that there were no printers' tweezers in Archangel. This handicap was only mastered when the American officer commanding the local hospital heard of the matter and sent over a pair of surgical forceps.

It has been related in the Sentinel that a day or two after one of the printers had set himself to work to "un-pie" a mess of type which they hoped to use in part to get out the first issue of the paper sent the following communication to the editor:

"You can't expect me to set up a plunny column without any ephs or quays or dgays. I quiecue right here. It's bad enought having to phish our kind oph type out oph this Russquie stuphph but iph it isn't there when you get it, I'm phinished. And that's no dgoque."

done and the foundations have been laid for much more.

A great improvement in the direction of cleaner advertising can be seen in many British periodicals. Undesirable advertisements, however, are still far too numerous and their banishment is one of the reforms the society is continually working for.

Circulations can be examined and criticised more justly now than during war time, and it must be remembered that the "net sale" is the one factor which must be kept in view in every case. If an advertiser does not know that, he does not know what real value any periodical is to him. To obtain these tablishing itself, but that reason exists no longer. With the membership it has it is already representative of British advertising interests, as may be seen from the list of its officers.

The president is Sir William P. Treloar, of Treloar's Carpets.

The vice-presidents are: Lord Leverhulme, Lever Bros., Ltd.; Sir Jesse Boot, Boots, Cash Chemists, Nottingham; Sir Woodman Burbidge, Harrods, Ltd.; Sir Thomas R. Dewar, Dewar's Whisky; Sir Thomas Lipton, Lipton, Ltd.; Sir Herbert J. F. Parsons, "Phosferine;" Sir Hedley F. Le Bas, Caxton Publishing Company, Ltd.; Cyril Haslam and H. Gordon Selfridge, Selfridge Store.

AD CLUB SHOWS HOW TO BOOM A CITY

Live Neosho (Mo.) Organization Proves That in These Days of Automobiles, Advertising Can Draw Business for Any Merchant

Already famous through the co-operative efforts of its business men to bring new trade to town, Neosho, Mo., has taken another stride in the same direction, recently having begun to buy fullpage advertising space in a newspaper of Joplin, Mo., which is a much larger city, to tell people what Neosho offers them as a trading center. The purpose was not to get trade out of Joplin, but from territory which might be served either by Neosho or Joplin.

Business men of Neosho, through the advertising club of that enterprising city, became aware of the fact, some time ago, that in these days when nearly every farmer has an automobile, trade can be drawn from a greater radius by any merchant, or any group of merchants who will go after it. At the last monthly "sales day" held by the Neosho Advertising Club, which followed the first of the advertisements in the Joplin newspaper, customers came as far as forty miles.

While using full pages in the Joplin newspaper, the merchants continue, of course, to employ similar space in Neosho papers, and they also reprint the advertisements appearing in Neosho, and mail them to a list of 6,000 prospective customers. The cost of all such advertising is equally distributed among the business houses directly participating. For example, the cost of the Joplin page was $62.50. The thirty advertisers, sharing the space paid $2 each, the advertising club paying the balance.

In the meantime, the members of the advertising club had been making a careful study of advertising at their club meetings, to make their advertisements more effective, and in the club, also, they have exchanged ideas relative to better merchandising methods, thus enabling themselves to "back up" their advertising to the fullest possible extent.

The plan has already been adopted by Webb City and other communities, both larger and smaller than Neosho, where adversetising clubs have been organized to handle its operation. Frequently, business men's committees or committees have gone to Neosho to investigate the plan at first hand. Business men of Clarksville, Tenn., under the leadership of a local civic community, recently decided to make a personal investigation of the Neosho plan with the purpose of adopting it, and merchants of Blair, Neb., are now contemplating similar action.

The honorary executive committee of the society consists of: W. B. Warren, Burge, Warren & Ridgeley, Ltd.; A. Bond Hickisson, John Bond's Crystal Palace Marking Ink; J. A. South, John Dickinson & Co.; E. Brunton & Sons, Liverpool, Manchester and Birmingham; W. E. Catesby, J. P. Catesbys, Ltd.; Dr. G. E. Dixon, Capsuloids, Ltd.; A. W. Fischer, J. Pullar & Sons, Ltd.; J. First in Its Unrivalled Field as a Producer of Business!

The Hartford Times.

is clearly first in its field because open minded space buyers have found it to be far and away the best business bringing proposition in the commonwealth.

Its 36,000 three-cent circulation is all home circulation—and the most sure-to-produce-circulation buyable.

Over a Million Gain in Lineage

The record for the first six months of 1919 shows The Times carried a total lineage of

A Gain Over 1918 of 1,065,067

The Times has no Sunday edition.

Compared with the lineage of the second Hartford paper, six days against six, the record shows The Times led by nearly 2,000,000 lines or over 57 per cent. Six days against seven it led the second paper by 588,174 lines. In foreign business, six days against seven, it led by over 200,000 lines or over 27 per cent.

Times rates are much higher than those of the second paper, otherwise these volume figures would carry little significance, for as every space buyer knows, volume alone is not difficult to secure.

Follow the example of over 100 national advertisers and concentrate on THE TIMES. You will get something for your money if you do.

Q.—The cost of operating a newspaper, as you know, has been increasing along with the cost of all kinds of service and commodities and I am anxious to know whether publishers generally are advancing their advertising rates. If they are, upon what grounds—increased cost of operating or increased circulation?

Are we justified in asking an advance? Our circulation is 80,000 daily and the minimum local rate where an advertiser guarantees to use one-quarter page daily is 8 cents daily and 8½ cents Sunday.

The minimum foreign rate for 5,000 lines is 10½ cents. Our rate has been raised one cent a line each year for the past three years. H. R.

A.—The tendency in the newspaper fields is all in the upward direction, as witness the following:

We have just finished summarizing the A. B. C. and Government circulation figures of 1,848 evening newspapers as of April 1, 1919, and we find that they have a combined circulation of 18,026,323 and a joint combined advertising rate of $44.29½ per line.

Contrasting these figures with the Government statement and A. B. C. figures as of October 1, 1918, we find that the 1,647 evening newspapers listed in that compilation had a combined circulation of 18,373,904 and a joint combined agate line rate of $42.42.

In other words, the April 1, 1919, figures show a decrease of 350,000 evening circulation and an increase in rate of something over $1.75 per line.

Our figures show that there are four evening newspapers in the state of Ohio having a circulation between 50,000 and 100,000. The total combined circulation of the four is 316,673 and the average per paper 79,168. The joint rate for the four is 46½ cents per agate line. The average rate per line per thousand for the Ohio newspapers is .0014684.

The average rate per line per thousand for evening newspapers in the central group of States—Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin, Iowa—having a circulation between 50,000 and 100,000—is .0013422.

Whereas the average rate per line per thousand for newspapers of that particular class—50,000 to 100,000 circulation—for all of the newspapers throughout the entire United States is .0015778.

In other words, in Ohio, four evening newspapers of this particular class have a little better rate than the Central group, but the average rate for Ohio, .0014684, is less—considerably less—than the average rate for newspapers of this class throughout the United States.

Our judgment is that you are entitled to a higher rate and we think you will agree with us if you will carefully study the list of English daily newspapers with circulations and minimum 5,000 agate line rate, that appear in this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. We have listed 503 morning newspapers; 1,648 evening and 505 Sunday newspapers, and have summarized the information by States with population and in classes.

We are inclined to think that the following information may be helpful to you:

A leading daily of Texas reports to us that the present advertising rate is 54 per cent higher than it was in 1914; while the circulation had grown 29 per cent and actual cost of production has increased since 1914 over 45 per cent.

A leading Iowa daily had circulation of 46,000 in 1914 and an advertising rate of 6 cents per line. The circulation now is 60,000 and the rate 8 cents, to be advanced soon to 10 cents. The cost of production has increased 6 per cent since 1914.

A leading Southern paper has increased rate only 1 cent per line since 1914; the circulation increase was from 53,000 to 61,000 in the same period of time.

A leading Washington daily reports its rate per line per thousand of circulation is now less than in 1914, explaining it by increased revenues from circulation and volume of advertising.

Your line of about ⅛ of 1 cent per thousand of circulation is low. Compare it with other papers whose rates we have noted.

Increased costs of production are sure to force advance in ad rate in due time. It is proper, we think, to justify such advances on both increased circulation and the increased publishing costs.

The subject of newspaper rates held the attention of the Southern publishers for an entire morning session at their recent Asheville convention. It was brought out that a year or two ago national advertisers were trying to buy newspaper circulation on the basis of 1/6 of a cent per line per thousand. Finally one of the members introduced a motion with the idea of getting some concrete results from the discussion to the effect that the association would go on record as favoring a rate of 1/5 of a cent per line per thousand of circulation. This was unanimously voted down. The consensus of opinion was that every publisher was a law unto himself in the matter of fixing rate, and that he, alone, should be the judge as to what was fair and equitable rate for his space. That was the prevailing view.

It seemed to be the unanimous opinion that there was absolutely no likelihood of reduced costs. The trend and the tendency is all in the other direction with numerous indications of higher for editorial and other unorganized employes of the newspaper business.

It is our belief that under present conditions it is possible for you to get a higher rate—and we say this in the knowledge that your Government statement for October 1, 1918, showed a paid circulation of 78,222, whereas your April 1 Government statement for 1919 shows a paid circulation of about 76,605.

The Times-Picayune Building New Home Made Necessary by Increased Business

THAT New Orleans is forging ahead; its business men wide awake to their opportunities, and the people of this section appreciate a clean, fearless newspaper, is shown by the ever increasing business of The Times-Picayune, in both circulation and advertising.

Its circulation is larger now than last year at this time, when war was raging and interest in the outcome was at white heat. New presses have been ordered to relieve the overload, and take care of a still greater circulation that lies within its grasp.

Its advertising patronage is 50 per cent greater than last year. Notwithstanding the fact that nothing but clean advertising is accepted, more than 42 per cent of the total advertising carried by the three New Orleans newspapers this year was placed in The Times-Picayune.

To take care of the business that is being offered, both circulation and advertising, The Times-Picayune is building a new home for the exclusive use of the newspaper. High prices of building materials and operations have not been permitted to stand in its way.

Co-ordinating the newspaper with the home life of the people, as well as with the commercial interests of this section, through service that has taught them all to believe what it prints, brings to The Times-Picayune the largest and best clientele of readers and the greatest advertising patronage any newspaper here enjoys.

No national advertiser can reach the purchasing power of this section without using The Times-Picayune.

If any national advertiser wants additional service through trade investigations or otherwise, write to The Times-Picayune.

Round Table Discussion Covering Three Half-Days Arranged for New Orleans Convention — Aim to Increase Space Value

The better and more profitable use of the newspaper as an advertising medium, both for local and for national advertising, will be considered in a round-table discussion, covering three half days, at the annual A. A. C. W. convention, to be held in New Orleans September 21 to 25.

At the sessions of the Newspaper Department of the advertising convention, publishers of newspapers and users of newspaper advertising space will seek methods for making the space of the newspapers of still greater value.

"The increase in the use of newspaper space by national advertisers," says a statement issued from the Association headquarters, "is one of the most striking developments of the times. Many national advertisers who used no newspaper space only a few years ago, are now placing most of their advertising appropriations through newspapers, and they have believed that this was especially valuable by way of co-operating with local retailers handling their goods.

"Newspaper men and others attending the Newspaper Department at the September convention are interested not only in ways for letting the advertiser know the advantages of using newspaper space, but are equally concerned with any plan which will make this advertising space of greater value."

Walter G. Bryan, publisher of the Atlanta Georgian-American, as chairman of the Newspaper Department, has general charge of the building of the newspaper advertising program for the convention.

BEAUMONT ENTERPRISE GAINED

Error Made in Transmitting 1919-1918 Advertising Figures

Transposition of figures in transmission made the Beaumont (Tex.) Enterprise show a loss in every classification, in the table of gains of Southern newspapers for the six months period ending June 30, 1919, printed on page 8 of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER for July 17, whereas the Enterprise gained in all but classified.

The Enterprise printed a total for first six months of 1919 of 2,920,078 in comparison with 2,487,744. In local display the figures were 1,585,562 for 1919, as compared with 1,438,612. The foreign advertising totaled 903,581 for 1919, against 606,610 in 1918. The classified record was 430,535 in 1919 in comparison with 442,522 in 1918.

—personal and printed salesmen

Mr. Advertiser—would you employ personal salesmen if they could not sell goods?

Would you permit your salesmen to create a demand that you could not supply?

Would you try to sell goods where freight rates are prohibitive?

Now consider the facts squarely.

Advertising is part of your sales force. Why let it run wild in a scattered endeavor to create a demand where your goods are not on sale?

Assign advertising to a specific territory just as you do men.

Localize your advertising in daily newspapers. Plan to do some dealers a lot of good rather than to do a lot of dealers little good.

Logical? It is irrefutable.

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

Covering thoroughly the rich and populous territory of Cincinnati's metropolitan district of more than 700,000 population, THE ENQUIRER has been tested and NOT found wanting by hundreds of Advertisers who sought commensurate RETURNS and RESULTS with a comparatively nominal outlay of expense.

The average retailing establishment of Cincinnati is a progressive and thorough-going organization. All its stores do a tremendous retail business and Cincinnatians are kept prosperous through the diversity of manufacturing interests and neighboring great agricultural capacity.

Evidence of this great prosperity has been reflected in THE ENQUIRER'S advertising columns by Local Merchants and National Advertisers during the past SIX MONTHS of 1919 and enabled THE ENQUIRER to outstrip its contemporaries in the volume of advertising space gained.

For the Six months ending June 30, 1919, THE ENQUIRER Gained over the corresponding period of 1918 the huge total of

1,306,802 Agate Lines

The Per Cent of increase in lines for the Six months ending June 30, 1919, over 1918, compared with other local papers, is further proof of THE ENQUIRER'S dominance:

Northern New Yorkers in Prosperous Period

But They Are Warned That Newspapers Must Be Conducted More Efficiently to Be Profitable

(BY TELEGRAPH)

MASSENA, N. Y., July 22.—Enthusiastic forecasts of excellent business and a congenial get-together marked the meeting of the Northern New York Press Association here last Friday and Saturday.

Interesting talks were given by G. F. Darrow, of the Ogdensburg Advance; Williston T. Manley, Canton Plain Dealer; Charles M. Redfield, Malone Evening Telegram; F. T. Swan, Potsdam-Herald Recorder; Fay C. Parsons, Cortland Standard, and F. D. Corse, Sandy Creek News.

C. A. Willard, of the Boonville Herald, described his conception of an efficient and practical newspaper plant layout. C. H. Skelton, president of the Central New York Press Association, was one of the guests of honor, and gave a talk from which optimism and cheerfulness emanated. He said that if the newspapers of the country are conducted efficiently, and an effort is made to cut out the parasitical growths, there should be bigger profits for the publishers this year than ever before.

F. D. Corse, president of the association, responded to an address of welcome on the part of Massena residents.

Aluminum in its application to the newspaper composing room was explained by Manley P. Northam in a trip of inspection to the Massena Aluminum Works.

A picnic was one of the features of the program.

IMPORTANT CIRCULATION AND RATE DATA COVERING DAILY NEWSPAPERS

Editor & Publisher and Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., Present Semi-Annual List Showing in the Most Concise Form, the English Language Daily Papers Published in the United States July 1, 1919; Their 5,000 Agate Line Space Rate and Their Net Paid Circulation for the Six Months Period Ending March 31, 1919

Of July 1, 1919, there were 2,151 English language daily newspapers published in the United States, with an average net paid circulation for the six months period ending March 31, 1919, of 27,975,127.

Five thousand agate lines of space could be run in each and every one of these papers, reaching undoubtedly the entire English-reading buying population of the United States for $335,173.36 —a cost of but 1½c. per person to reach, though either 5,000 lines in one insertion (more than two solid pages); through ten printed messages of 500 lines each, or through fifty such messages of 100 lines each, the men and women, and their families, who purchase these 27,975,127 papers daily.

All Can Profitably Use Papers

Regardless of the manner in which the space is used, it must be evident that every week-while product can profitably use or consumption can be profitably sold through daily newspaper advertising.

While this statement covers all of the morning and evening papers of the nation, the relative cost of territorial campaigns covering a number of States, a single state or a city with its trading radius varies little.

An analysis of the resume shows by states, and gives the total for the nation, of the population as estimated by the Government July 1, 1918; the number of morning, evening and the total number of daily papers; the morning, evening and total circulation; the morning, evening and total 5,000 agate line space rates; the number, circulation and 5,000 agate line space rates of daily papers with Sunday issues, and a complete analysis of A. B. C. morning, evening and Sunday net paid circulation.

The detailed analysis which follows gives clearer this information as well as indicating whether or not the rate is flat; whether the minimum space rate is based on less than 5,000 lines; on more than 5,000 lines or whether the minimum rate is based on insertions, instead of the total volume of space.

Fifteen Less Now

Comparing this resume with that appearing in the January 18 issue of Editor & Publisher, there are 2,151 daily papers now as against 2,166 then, a drop of 15. The entire net chance occurred in the morning papers where we have but 503 now, as against 519 on January 1. In the evening field, the net increase is one.

In circulation there was a total for the six months period ending March 31, 1919, of 27,975,127, as against 26,624,951 for the six months' period ending September 30, 1918—a loss of 669,914— 322,333 in the morning papers and 347,581 in the evening papers. The gain or loss in each state varies but a small percentage from the preceding figures that there was but one State that made a gain in excess of 50,000—New York, which gained 137,912. This slight drop in circulation, representing but 2½ per cent, is not in a sense a loss but a readjustment due to the ending of the war. During the last few months preceding the signing of the armistice, and especially in October and November, the Allied victories were so frequent that people naturally bought papers containing the latest favorable news. Considering this fact, the slight difference at this time is not as great as might be expected.

Cheapest Form of Publicity

It is not possible to make an accurate comparison of rates for the reason that the preceding figures were based on the minimum space rate, while these figures are based on the 5,000 agate line space rate. Though there is a drop of 669,914 in circulation, and an agate line in all papers for the 5,000 line basis, costs 50.40 more, the actual difference, were the comparison on the identical basis, would be very slight—certainly less than 5 per cent—considering the increases during the past six months in practically every line of business, and the increase in rates in other form of media, the increase in daily newspaper space is in keeping with its cost—the lowest of any form of printed publicity.

In the Sunday field, that is the Sunday editions of daily papers, the general conditions are somewhat the reverse, for there is a net increase of 2 papers; and a gain in circulation of 501,127. While it is true that the rate is $3.26 per line greater, the difference between the minimum space and the 5,000 agate line space rate must be taken into consideration as well as the increase of more than 500,000 in circulation.

In this resume we have not only shown the total daily A. B. C. circulation, but have shown the division in the morning and evening fields. While there is a slight drop in daily circulation, as there is in the circulation of the daily papers, the decrease in A. B. C. circulation is much less in proportion than on the daily as a whole, and is an indication of the continued confidence existing among publishers, agents and advertisers for A. B. C. figures. With the Sunday papers an increase is shown, though with increase of Sunday less in proportion than that of all the Sunday papers

Will Be Analyzed Weekly

From these figures, many other interesting facts and analysis will be made, and, in keeping with its policy, Editor & Publisher will present from week to week articles further analyzing and interpreting these figures.

Additional articles, and many of interest, according to population, will appear in the August 2 issue. This will be different than any analysis yet made and of great interest to every one interested in daily newspapers.

See additional tables on pages 30-36.

EXPLANATION OF KEY-LETTERS AND MARKINGS IN FOREGOING TABLES

The list of papers is corrected to July 1, 1919. The circulation figures are the average net paid for the 6 months' period ending March 31, 1919, as reported to the Audit Bureau of Circulations or to the Government under the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912. The agate line rates (14 agate lines equal 1 inch) are the 5,000 line space rates applying to general "foreign" advertising, in effect July 1, 1919, and include all changes in rates up to noon, Tuesday, July 1, 1919. Roman type, published mornings; italic type, published evenings. '(A)"—Every morning; "(B)"—Morning ex. Sunday; "(C)"—Morning ex. Monday; "(D)"—Morning ex. Sunday and Monday; "(E)"—Morning and evening weekdays; "(F)"—Morning and evening weekends and Sunday morning; "(G)"—Morning ex. Monday and evening Sunday; "(H)"—Morning ex. Monday and evening ex. Saturday and Sunday; "(I)"—Morning ex. Sunday and Monday and evening ex. Sunday; "(M)"—Sunday exclusively; "(Q)"—Every evening; "(R)"—Evening ex. Sunday; "(S)"—Evening ex. Sunday and Sunday morning; "(T)"—Evening ex. Saturday and Sunday; "(U)"—Evening ex. Saturday and Sunday morning; "(V)"—Saturday exclusively. The asterisk (), preceding the name of a paper indicates membership in the A. B. C.; following a rate, the asterisk indicates that the rate is flat and not subject to time or space discounts. The bold faced circulation figures represent AVERAGE NET PAID circulation for the 6 months' period ending March 31st; the light face figures represent the average NET PAID circulation for the 6 months' period ending September 30th preceding. As a further service four characters are used with the rate figures to indicate the rate basis. Where the minimum space rate is the 5,000 line rate no character is used; if the rate is flat, the asterisk () so indicates the fact; where the minimum rate is based on less than 5,000 lines the ditto (") indicates the fact; where the minimum rate is based on more than 5,000 lines, the number character (2) indicates the fact; where the publisher's card does not give space rates but does give insertion rates the open rate is used and the fact that lower insertion rates may be earned is indicated by the (‡). The light face rate figures indicate that the rate has been estimated. Because there is no question as to what the A. B. C. figures actually represent, A. B. C. figures are used in preference to Government figures whenever available. The dagger (†) indicates that the figures have been taken from A. B. C. statements.

This compilation of eight pages of Newspaper Circulations and Advertising Rates is part of an exclusive loose-leaf Statistical Service (fully protected by copyright) and made available semi-annually for the use of newspapers, advertisers and advertising agents by EDITOR & PUBLISHER Co., New York, and Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., Chicago.

THE MOST MOMENTOUS NEWSPAPER FEATURE IN THE HISTORY OF JOURNALISM

GENERAL LUDENDORFF'S INTIMATE AUTHENTIC CLOSE-UP HISTORY OF THE GERMAN EFFORT TO DOMINATE THE WORLD WRITTEN BY HIMSELF IS THE GREATEST CIRCULATION BUILDING NEWS-FEATURE BEAT EVER OBTAINED FOR THE NEWSPAPERS IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

The German side of the war has been shrouded in mystery, and up to the present time no one who knows has spoken. Now, Ludendorff—the man who conceived, planned and carried out the most colossal military campaigns and who directed the most stupendous military machine in the world's history—tells the whole story.

Shortly after the signing of the Armistice, General Ludendorff went to Sweden, taking with him a tremendous mass of records and a large staff of assistants. From these records and his own knowledge and experience, he, personally, has produced this amazing document—one for which the whole world is waiting.

We know so much about our own defeats. Germany was so silent about hers that it seemed at times as if the balance of victory was all on her side. But Ludendorff discloses the real condition of Germany just before the war, and gives credit and places blame where he—(and Germany)—believes it belongs. He tells also when and where the German plans miscarried and the military crises through which the Central Powers passed, all unknown to the allied world.

Ludendorff's story will be complete—the history of every great battle and campaign. It will not deal with disjointed events, but will lay bare, without fear or favor, the whole German side of the war. It will not be a justification, but a history for all time.

THE LARGEST CASH ADVANCE EVER PAID IN THE HISTORY OF THE PUBLISHING BUSINESS WAS MADE FOR THIS MANUSCRIPT. Some of the greatest expert judges of book and newspaper material were sent by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, Sir George Hutchison, the great English publisher, and Lord Northcliffe to Stockholm to read the manuscript. They unanimously reported that it was THE GREAT STORY OF THE GERMAN SIDE OF THE WAR for which the whole world has been waiting and that its appeal will be universal.

We have obtained the serial rights for the United States and Canada—Lord Northcliffe, for England and the British Empire. The book will be brought out simultaneously here, in Germany, France, Scandinavia, Great Britain and the British Empire, Spain, Italy, and practically every civilized country.

The German story of the First Battle of the Marne is sure to be a revelation. The German side of Ypres, Arras, the Aisne, Cambrai, Verdun, the Somme, the Russian, Italian and Rumanian campaigns will thrill the world as Ludendorff tells it.

No other great and compelling figure of the German military machine has survived. von Hindenburg, von Kluck, von Falkenhayn, Mackensen were favorites of the moment and passed out. Ludendorff's star rose constantly higher and never set till the whole German scheme was smashed. He is the one big, outstanding genius of all Germany's campaigns.

LUDENDORFF'S OWN STORY

NO MATTER WHAT OTHER PAPER THEY BUY, EVERY READER IS GOING TO BUY ALSO THE PAPER WHICH PRINTS LUDENDORFF'S STORY.

LUDENDORFF'S STORY WILL STIR UP MORE CONTROVERSY AND EDITORIAL COMMENT THAT ANYTHING CONNECTED WITH THE GREAT WAR THAT HAS YET BEEN, OR WILL BE, OR CAN BE PUBLISHED. The opposition papers are sure to advertise editorially several times each week the paper which carries this story.

This is the first time in the history of journalism that the first publication of so momentous a work has been obtained for the newspapers. No magazine will carry one word of Ludendorff's story. Book publication will not be made until the story is at least half completed in the newspapers.

The newspapers alone will tell the world first and exclusively what none but those in the innermost circles of the Central Empires have been permitted to know. Their's will be the opportunity to lay bare the German side of the conflict to all the world.

Only one paper in each territory can obtain this feature. Territories are already closing rapidly. New York, Boston, Pittsburg, Chicago, St. Louis, Toronto, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Cincinnati asked us our terms before our announcement was made, and closed immediately at our price. Numerous other territories are now negotiating.

There is not a moment to be lost. Quick action by wire for option and terms is the only sure way to be able to give your readers THE MOST MOMENTOUS NEWSPAPER FEATURE THAT HAS EVER BEEN PRODUCED IN THE HISTORY OF JOURNALISM.

LUDENDORFF'S BOOK IS EAGERLY AWAITED

Intimate Knowledge of Kaiser's Part in War, and Estimate of Allies Expected to Be Set Out.

Copyright, 1919, by The Press Publishing Co. (The New York World).

(Special Cable Despatch to The World.)

LONDON, July 22.—The approaching publication of Gen. Ludendorff's book on the great war, throughout the main part of which he was the dominating German military figure, is arousing tremendous interest here. For he alone can throw authoritative light on many obscure episodes of the highest importance in judging not only of the German military system at work, but of those of the different Allied countries to which he was opposed.

Nobody can speak with more intimate knowledge of the real part played by the former Kaiser both in triumph and adversity and on the relations between the German civil and military power in times of crisis, for Ludendorff virtually became dictator in the most crucial period of his country's fortunes. His estimate of the capabilities of the Allied military leaders as viewed from the enemy's experience of their work and achievements should be highly instructive when allowance is made for the critical hostility of their most formidable antagonist.

Above all, Gen. Ludendorff's book is expected to provoke a storm of controversy on many points; controversy which must be fruitful in startling revelations. In short, Ludendorff is in a position to write the book of the war, and, it is understood, he has done so.

CO-OPERATIVE ADVERTISING POSSIBILITIES

"Specialty House" pages are similar to the "Neighborhood" pages in many respects. The work of developing the contracts is quite the same and there have been instances where the newspaper retailed at least 50 per cent of the advertisers as regular patrons after the "Specialty House" page was discontinued.

As in all cases where co-operative advertising is used, the success of the plan will depend upon the sincerity of purpose, care in preparation and co-operation between publishers and contributors of space throughout the entire campaign.

Again First in America The Detroit News

The advertising records for the first six months of 1919 show that The Detroit News has again come into its own as the heaviest carrier of paid advertising in America.

This achievement is the best possible proof of the striking prosperity of "Detroit, the Dynamic," the thorough, concentrated circulation of The News in Detroit and its extraordinary lead over all competitors. The news has over double the city circulation of its nearest competitor, and practically treble that of the next paper. The Sunday News has over 40% greater city circulation than its only Sunday competitor.

So many advertisers appreciate the effectiveness and economy of placing all or the greater part of their campaigns in The Detroit News that it has completely outclassed all local competitors in advertising lineage and has also exceeded every other paper in America.

Note the following list. As far as it is known, each paper is the heaviest carrier of advertising space in its respective field. These figures have been secured either from the newspapers direct or from the July number of The Advertising Age.

SHOULD USE FULL POWER OF PRESS IN DEFENCE OF ITS RIGHTS

Concerted Campaign of Education to Maintain Fair Postal Rate Would Have Forced Just Legislation, T. F. McPherson Tells Inland Publishers.

NEWSPAPERS have not used the power and influence of their great circulations with any degree of consistency in self defense when occasion arose in the past, T. F. McPherson, business manager of the Wisconsin State Journal, declared at the recent meeting of the Inland Daily Press Association. Continuing his address, which was on "The Power and Influence of Newspapers," he said:

"If when we were fighting to maintain a fair postal rate, a campaign of education had been carried on through the columns of every newspaper, thoroughly informing the public as to the facts in the case, public opinion would have operated to force just legislation.

Co-operation as an Aid to Propaganda

"Publishers constantly confronted by local problems often find it difficult to concentrate upon questions that affect the industry generally. If the Inland Daily Press Association had a secretary whose remuneration was such as to make it profitable for him to devote all his time and energy to Inland interests the time of this officer could be directed when necessary to creating propaganda for release in the papers of all members.

Would this method of fighting for our rights enable the association to have such publicity prepared by a man who could by virtue of consultation with legal talent and close personal study of proposed legislation vital to publishers' interests swing public sentiment in our favor?

Would Set Good Example

One publisher expressed the opinion that the idea of newspapers employing a press agent would be considered ridiculous by the public. Personally, I can't agree with that viewpoint. On the contrary, I think it would indicate to intelligent space buyers that publishers placed such value and faith in the power of their organs as to warrant the additional expense of employing specialists to prepare the copy when important publicity campaigns are launched.

There is a firm conviction in my mind that were a system devised by the Inland Daily Press Association that would enable publisher members to adopt a standardized form of monthly analyzation of their business, copies of same to be filed with a designated authority of this association and available for reference, many of us would be amazed to find that we have a long, long way to travel to reduce our properties to a cost producing level with that under which many of our fellow publishers operate.

Passing up the detail let us focus our attention upon the big question: What is the earning capacity of a newspaper property with relation to its power and influence in its field?

Truth Now Essential

Do you agree with me that the greatest newspaper in a given field is that newspaper which wields the greatest educational force therein?

Do you believe as I do that the American people will no longer support a newspaper that leaves it to them to discover what is false and what is true and that the people want the newspaper that will ferret out the truth for them and give them the truth?

Do you agree with me that to publish false statements about trade commodities is to lose the confidence of the people and that to print the truth about trade commodities often leads to barren advertising columns and serious financial losses over varying periods of time?

If you do believe these things which my experience has taught me are true, you will also realize the tremendous business responsibility of the newspaper in this extremely commercial era.

Founded on Democracy

My conception of the building of a vast power and far reaching influence for a newspaper is to establish the policy of the newspaper on a profound belief in democracy.

The work of the newspaper then is to reach, educate and uplift the average man. To do this the newspaper must reach both the educated and the uneducated. It must cultivate a reading habit all the way from the primer stories to the highly important stories and the complex consideration of state affairs and fundamental problems of life.

The trend of the modern American newspaper is distinctly toward Service. The man is fit to go into the newspaper game today unless he is inspired with a patriot's purpose and a soldier's courage and determination, all others are unfit. If we are to have a better America, a cleaner America, a happier and more prosperous America it is to come through the service of the American newspaper.

BOOK ON SOUTH JUST OFF PRESS

Filled with Facts and Is Ready for Free Distribution

"The South of 1919" is the title of a book of facts and figures on the Dixieland of today that has just come from the press and is being distributed throughout the country by the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association. The book is filled with valuable information and ought to be on file in every advertising office. Under the title of "The Rejuvenated South" the opening chapter deals with comparisons of the bank deposits of Southern cities with cities of equal size in the East and West, greatly to the favor of the South.

Industry, agriculture, live stock raising, mineral production, manufacturing, lumbering and the various other activities of the South as well as the work of such organizations as "Pig Clubs" and "Girls Canning Clubs" are dealt with under separate heads. Following a general survey each State is taken up separately and the work concludes with a list of the membership of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association with a word about the advertising possibilities below the Mason-Dixon line.

Believes Pulp Paper Life Can Be Prolonged Indefinitely

ST. PAUL, July 23.—Dr. Warren Upham, the archaeologist of the Minnesota Historical Society and in his day a geologist of note, speaking as a scientist, says he will not believe the wood pulp is so perishable until he has positive evidence. He refers to insects, etc., that are found intact after burial millions of years in the rocks, and seems to think that if wood pulp paper is properly protected it may last indefinitely.

Dr. Upham expressed this view on the oft-expressed opinion of library experts that 50 years hence will see the ordinary newspaper files of today only a little pile of "paiheric dust." This is the maximum life lease given the wood pulp print paper now and for a generation past in use.

Wilmington Aims to Check Signboard Invasion

New Administration Plans to Draw Up Protective Ordinance, Therefore Lacking — Newspapers Prosper

WILMINGTON, Del., July 21.—War against unsightly billboards, which has been waged here for several years, is beginning to bear fruit. Because there are no municipal regulations, except those applying to the erection of buildings, the billboard mania has run wild here, with the result that large signs are stuck up all over town, some of them ornamental and in keeping with good taste, but many of them just the reverse. And, to make matters worse, some have been erected on the roofs of buildings in such a manner as to cause doubt as to their stability.

Now, however, the city has a new administration and it promises results. The new city solicitor is already making a study of the subject in other cities, with a view to drawing up a protective ordinance.

Notwithstanding this rush to billboard advertising the newspapers here are almost overtaxed with advertising, which is heavier now than ever before.

CYRUS CURTIS FETED BY LONDONERS

British "M. P." Declares American Newspaper Men Responsible for U. S. Entry Into European War—Pledge to New Friendship

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT,
London Editor EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

LONDON, July 3.—Cyrus H. K. Curtis, proprietor of the Philadelphia Ledger, Saturday Evening Post, etc., was feted July 1 in the old house of Dr. Samuel Johnson, in Gough Square, at a tiny thoroughfare off London's newspaper avenue, Fleet street. Banquet given by

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS

Cecil Harmsworth, M. P., and a number of eminent newspaper men, including John Walter, Wickham Steed, both of the London Times; Major-General E. D. Swinton, "eye-witness" and part inventor of the tanks.

Cecil Harmsworth (a brother of Lord Northcliffe) said that they welcomed Mr. Curtis because his newspapers were deservedly held in the highest respect and admiration throughout the world of journalism. They paid their tribute especially to him because of the very great influence he had in America and because he threw its whole weight of his influence to the support of the Allied cause from the day that the war began.

Bands Must Never Be Broken

It was unanimously agreed that there has been established a great friendship all must see that it is never broken again.

Among the wise maxims of Dr. Johnson was: "A man, Sir, should keep his friendships in constant repair. Mr. Curtis' hosts declared they must see to it that the friendship between this country and the United States is kept in constant repair.

It was pointed out that in looking through the press one could not fail to observe that already, since the date of the armistice, causes of difference had arisen between some sections of the people in this country and some sections of the people in the United States. There were honest misapprehensions on one side and the other, and there were dishonest misrepresentations. There were old sores that some eager spirits would unwisely open up afresh.

Those present agreed that it is for them to take care that they exercised influence on public opinion to obviate and defeat such misapprehensions to the largest extent in their power.

Mr. Curtis, whose reception was one that augurs well for the future relationships between British and American journalists, said that if there is any difference of feeling between the people of the United States and England, he did not know of it, but that it was a question which had been brought to his attention since he had been in England a number of times.

Henry Wickham Steed, editor of the Times, in his address said it had been his privilege to be brought into touch with the American Mission to promote Peace in Paris. He has come to feel strongly that the future peace of the world depends in the first degree upon the continual growth of the inter-comprehension which has sprung up between the two chief branches of the English-speaking race; upon the constant effort all must make to appreciate the point of view of one or the other; and to give each other the benefit of any doubt on question that may arise.

Closer Understanding Needed

Mr. Steed said:

"It is impossible for the majority of Englishmen ever to regard the American people as foreigners. We might, however, get nearer to understanding them if we extended to them the courtesy and took the same pains to comprehend them as we took with the people of France and of Italy.

"For many generations Americans had been regarded as poor and distant relations. Latterly they had been regarded as wealthy relations, animated by a spirit of enterprise we did not always share. But if we came to realize the place of the United States in the world, their number, resources and material wealth, we should come nearer to understanding them. The chief element in the American people is their great undifferentiated idealism."

Mr. Steed said he once had to explain to a French audience that the attitude of the Englishman in his moments of ordinary tranquility bore no relation to his attitude in a moment of crisis, and it was the latter action that counted most. It was this difference which had obtained for Englishmen, with people who did not understand them, the character of hypocrites; yet it was not hypocrisy, for hypocrisy presupposed conscious inconsistency.

So with Americans—their great fundamental characteristic of idealism is somewhat less prominent in ordinary circumstances than their great commercial attributes. And it was this which made some people say it was only the dollar that counted.

That was a fundamental fallacy, said Mr. Steed. When they approached the question of the war, there was no calculation of interest or canny reckoning of what was to their advantage, but only a great wave of idealism which Mr. Curtis had done so much to create.

Discuss Relations Between Printers and Publishers

Messrs. Southam and Ross Explain to Canadian I. T. U. What Higher Wages Mean

OTTAWA, Ont., July 23.—The relations between Canadian publishers and compositors were discussed at a meeting here of the Ontario and Quebec Typographical Unions' Conference, the delegates to which were welcomed by several prominent citizens, including F. D. Ross, proprietor of the Journal, and W. M. Southam, head of the Citizen.

They recounted how all disputes between Ottawa newspapers and compositors during thirty years had been settled by arbitration, to the satisfaction of both parties. Mr. Ross drew attention to what a wage increase actually meant to a newspaper, saying that a $2 or $3-a-week increase to compositors meant a great deal more than what it might appear to represent, necessitating, in fact, an upward revision of all salaries, as a matter of fairness to the whole staff. In the aggregate, it amounted to many thousands of dollars a year.

James Hogan, second vice-president of the International Typographical Union, said the union had found a solution for radicalism, Bolshevism and "I. W. W.ism." He urged the necessity of doing everything possible towards obtaining a greater measure of efficiency and also for still closer co-operation.

A daily newspaper campaign cooperative with local dealers in this territory will quickly popularize any meritorious line of merchandise and it is well known that New York approval means nation wide approval.

The percent cost of intense cultivation of New York state is lower than that of any other territory—first because of the preponderance of population, and second because of the unexcelled transportation facilities, enabling one to make better time.

Try New York State as a splendid field for intensive daily newspaper advertising and be quickly convinced that this is the logical, economical and satisfactory way for National Advertisers to link up with local merchants and get results.

Don't ask the retailer to do all the cooperating. Do the cooperating yourself. Play the game HIS way. Don't try to force him to play it YOUR way—for he will not do it.

Your local dealer gets HIS customers through using his own home town newspapers. Go to his people through the same channel, and you will forge a strong link in the chain that will bind your customers to you.

NEW YORK STATE

The total population of the cities represented in this list is 7,157,506 people—over 67 per cent of the population of New York State.

This, remember, is merely the urban population, the "town folks" reached every day by this list of daily newspapers.

There is no other place on earth having but 50,326 square miles, where any such market can be found—or a market anywhere equalling this one.

VIRGINIANS ENDORSE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

At Annual Convention in West Point, L. E. Pugh Elected President—Will Meet Again in November to Form a Daily Section

WEST POINT, Va., July 18.—Unanimous indorsement of the League of Nations was voted by the Virginia Press Association this afternoon. This action, with the election of the following officers, closed the annual convention:

L. E. Pugh, of the Newport News Press, president; James C. Latimer, of the Roanoke Times, secretary-treasurer; W. R. Kennedy, of the Lexington Gazette, chaplain; R. A. Anderson, of the Marion News, member of the executive committee of the National Editorial Association; R. A. James, of the Danville Register, chairman of the Daily Section.

The invitation of Newport News to hold a special session in that city at a date to be fixed in November was unanimously accepted.

At the next meeting it is hoped to complete the organization of the Daily Section as well as to attend to business of importance to the publishers of the State.

Executive Committee

President Pugh announced the following executive committee for the ensuing year: J. L. Hart, of Farmville; M. T. Harrison, of Bedford; George B. Keezell, of Harrisonburg; W. A. Land, of Blackstone; A. P. Rowe, of Fredericksburg.

Ashby Land, of the Wakefield Enterprise, and Carl Tomlinson, of the Southside Sentinel, Urbanna, were elected to membership.

At the morning session Attorney-General John R. Saunders delivered an address on "Tidewater Virginia." W. S. Copeland, C. J. Campbell and others urged the resumption of exchange lists, it being the consensus of opinion that the interests of the State could thus be drawn closer together.

Mrs. B. G. Robinson-Martin delivered the historian's address. In the future she will report her historical matter to the president who will include the same in his annual address.

After an interesting discussion the report of the finance committee increasing the weekly paper dues from $3 to $5 per year, and the daily paper dues to $8 per year, was adopted.

Resolutions were also adopted urging the re-creation of the print paper committee, and urging the establishment of departments for linotype instruction at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Blacksburg; the College of William and Mary, Williamsburg; and the Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind, at Staunton.

Chairmen of Districts

To take the place of the minutes of the association it was voted to issue a quarterly bulletin carrying information regarding the association and its activities.

Approval was also given to the organization of the newspapers of the congressional districts into district branches for the discussion of business interests.

Chairman for the various districts were elected as follows:

First, A. P. Rowe, Fredericksburg Star.
Second, Norman R. Hamilton, Portsmouth Star.
Third, A. W. Perkins, Richmond Virginian.
Fourth, W. A. Land, Blackstone Courier.
Fifth, R. A. James, Danville Register.
Sixth, M. T. Harrison, Bedford Democrat.
Seventh, George W. Berry, Harrisonburg News-Record.
Eighth, B. M. Bushong, Standardsville Record.
Ninth, J. A. Whitman, Wytheville Enterprise.
Tenth, Heirome L. Opie, Staunton Leader.

This afternoon the members of the association were taken on an automobile tour of the industries of West Point, and tonight they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Crosby Thompson, at "Overlook," where a fish fry was enjoyed.

URGES FINDING COST PER SUBSCRIBER

Chairman of S. N. P. A. Paper Committee Sees No Prospect of Pre-War News Print Price and Says Publishers Must Act Accordingly

In a report just made to the members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, Charles I. Stewart, chairman of its paper committee, says "while there is reason to look for a reduction in the price of news print, there is no hope that anything approximating pre-war prices will result," and suggests that "every publisher make a very close calculation of news print and postage cost per subscriber, compare this with his subscription rates" and be governed in his rates and paper consumption accordingly.

The Newsprint Situation

Mr. Stewart's report follows:

"The paper market is undoubtedly much softer than it was a few months ago. Every publisher is doubtless aware of this fact, since there have been frequent offerings on the open market at prices nearly as good as the best contract prices.

"In some cases publishers can buy paper now at less than the contract price. There is a general impression that paper will be lower when the time comes to make contracts for 1920. Coal is more abundant and cheaper and the labor conditions are very much better than they were a year ago.

"The price of chemicals entering into newsprint manufacture, advanced by war conditions, must soon return to normal pre-war prices. These things should result in a material reduction in the cost of production, which seems to foreshadow a lower price.

"The big demand for advertising space has not, perhaps, caused an increased demand for newsprint much more than absorbing the consumption lessened by the falling off in circulation following the cessation of hostilities, but the prospect that the demand for newsprint for the fall of 1919 and for 1920 will be greater than ever before.

"While there is reason to look for some reduction in price, there is no hope that anything approximating pre-war prices will result. The publishers, therefore, are confronted with reasonable certainty that the price of paper will continue high.

Greater Demand Coming

"There is no indication that any other element of newspaper cost will show a material decline. On the contrary, the tendency is for costs to increase. This makes it important for newspapers to maintain subscription rates, particularly for mail subscriptions. Unless Congress interferes, after July 1, the 1½ cent second class rate will be 1½ cents per pound on 50 per cent increase as compared to the rate in effect prior to July 1, 1918.

"The increased bulk of the average paper, due to increased advertising, makes certain a marked increase in the newsprint and postage cost to the individual subscriber. Newspapers which under the War Board rules were able to hold their paper within a size—making it possible to hold the newsprint consumption down to 75 pounds per subscriber—will probably find it necessary now to consume 100 pounds per subscriber.

"An increase of 25 pounds of white paper at 4 cents per pound, and increase of the postage rate to $1.50 on the first of July, will mean an increase, beginning July 1, of $1.75 per year per subscriber in the cost of newsprint and postage, with the same price for newsprint last year and this year. In other words, with a consumption of 100 pounds of paper per subscriber the newsprint and postage cost alone will be $5.50 per year.

100 Lbs. Per Subscriber

"While some of the Southern papers consume more, others consume less, and it will probably be found that the newsprint consumption of the membership of our association will average about 100 pounds per subscriber. The seven-day papers in the larger cities will, of course, run considerably above this. It follows, therefore, that very few newspapers at the prevailing subscription rates will be able to get out of their subscribers more than the cost of newsprint and postage. Many of them will fail unless there is a marked advance in subscription rates, to secure from the subscriber enough to pay the newsprint and postage bills.

"I suggest that every publisher make a very close calculation of the newsprint and postage cost per subscriber and compare this with his subscription rates.

"Notwithstanding these conditions, there is a tendency to return to the reckless methods prevailing prior to the War Board's regulations. The smaller newspapers are forced into policies they would prefer to avoid because this appears to be the only means by which to meet the competition of the cheap papers put out in the larger cities.

"This appears to be one of the big problems confronting Southern publishers and one to which I believe very serious attention should be given. If the Southern association should be able to establish and maintain a fair circulation price, if it accomplished nothing else, it would fully justify itself."

Sent $575,000 Worth of Tobacco to Soldiers in France

MONTREAL, Que., July 23.—During the war, the Montreal Gazette's tobacco fund for Canadian soldiers overseas became somewhat of an institution and a recently-issued booklet contains an interesting résumé of the work.

The fund operated continuously for 195 weeks, or nearly four years—the longest period of any similar newspaper fund in America—and during that time tobacco and cigarettes worth, at Montreal retail prices, approximately $575,000 were sent overseas. This supply consisted of 25,000,000 cigarettes, 500,000 packages of smoking tobacco, 6,674 pipes and 4,122 pouches and lighters. All of the shipments crossed the ocean safely.

The Gazette gave a weekly subscription to the fund and bore all costs of operating, while the Canadian tobacco companies supplied their product at a price little higher than actual cost. The Department of Militia and Defence cooperated to the extent of forwarding the tobacco as military stores, thus saving cost of transportation and permitting the entire amount collected to be devoted to the purchase of tobacco.

Starts Free Milk and Ice Fund

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., July 22.—A free milk and ice fund for the babies of needy families has been started by the Sentinel. More than $1,000 in contributions already has been received from readers.

THAT most insidious and palatable apple which opened the eyes and stimulated the industry of our remote ancestors, could not have been more tempting and luscious, nor grown amidst more romantic and beautiful surroundings than the apples of West Virginia! And this season promises a big crop.

In fact, the harvest here generally is excellent in prospect—and then—

There will be fine spending at all the trade centers, with something over for investment.

Down here a little timely advertising in the daily newspapers will bring big returns.

FOR SPACE BUYERS

EDITOR & PUBLISHER presents in this issue a list of the daily newspapers of the United States, published in the English language, with figures showing their average net paid circulation (according to A. B. C. reports and Government statements) for six-months period ending March 31, 1919, and their 5,000 agate line advertising rates as in effect July 1, 1919.

This feature may be advantageously compared with the list of English language dailies printed in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER for January 11, giving circulation figures as of October 1, 1918, and minimum advertising line space rates as of January 1, 1919.

This immensely valuable information is made easily available to the profession, by whole-hearted co-operation of EDITOR & PUBLISHER and Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc. It will afford an authoritative guide to space buyers, advertising agencies and national advertisers, generally in planning national and localized advertising campaigns for the Fall.

With these lists as a basis, the matter of computing costs of advertising by States and sections is simplified. Their publication serves the interests of buyers of advertising quite as effectually as the interests of publishers. In the last analysis, these interests, are entirely mutual.

The time was when many of the agencies contended that the placing of campaigns in the newspapers involved so much trouble and expense that usual commissions did not justify the service required. Dependable information about circulations and rates, covering all of the dailies of the country, was almost impossible to obtain. EDITOR & PUBLISHER and Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., have changed this situation through making such information available to all. This service to advertisers and publishers will be continued, with semi-annual revisions of the facts and figures.

THE NATIONAL GAME

MOST healthy-minded men like baseball. Yet even a confirmed "fan" will admit, if you pin him down to frankness, that the newspapers carry more baseball news and gossip than the fans time to read—and that much of it is trivial and foolish.

There is a tradition that newspapers must print a great volume of matter about baseball—and that tradition shows no signs of weakness on account of either old age or of its unsoundness.

The average reader of a newspaper does not fail to notice that, albeit, news values of "sport" interest and importance are treated inadequately, while a page is given over to baseball. He sees, too, a direct relation between these two facts. Space is limited—and some things must be minimized. He notes that the real news usually suffers in order that the baseball stuff may be padded out to make a "showing" with those who are interested in the game.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER likes to see baseball and in the wisdom of printing baseball news. But it is proper to urge that baseball gossip and piffle should not occupy space sorely needed for news and features of infinitely greater public interest and value.

Editors should analyze their papers for the express purpose of comparing the news value of the baseball gossip with matter which has had to be either cut to the bone or left out in order to accommodate such matter. A little cold-blooded consideration along this line will serve to bring about better balanced news policies.

THE space grafter urges upon the editor the "news value" of the advertising matter which he offers for free publication. The same argument will apply to almost every paid advertisement appearing in a daily newspaper. All good advertising has news value. Some advertising may even contain news which the editor might have been glad to use and pay for, if we assume that the advertiser had employed a press agent to bring it to his attention. No part of an editor's education is more important than a knowledge of where to draw the line —and he is generally safe if he draws it against the press agent.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING RATES

NATIONAL advertisers are to be congratulated on the fact that, despite the enormous increases in the costs of publishing, they are now paying—generally speaking—a lower rate per line per thousand of circulation for newspaper advertising space than in 1914.

This statement is based upon reports made to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by some of the leading big-city newspapers. The situation thus revealed, it may be safely said, does not apply to any other product or service. That leading newspapers should be able, notwithstanding steadily mounting costs, to sell advertising at a lower rate per thousand of circulation than five years ago must be classed among the economic miracles of the times.

The facts as to three representative American newspapers, the New York Times, Washington Star and Atlanta Journal, will illustrate prevailing conditions as to increased costs of production and circulation growth, and afford ground for wonder as to how it has been found possible by these newspapers to not merely maintain basic advertising rates, but to actually lower them.

In 1914 the circulation of the New York Times, daily and Sunday, averaged 246,118; for the six months ending March 31, 1919, the average was 393,178. The rate for run of paper in 1914 was 40 cents an agate line. The present rate is 50 cents an agate line for the daily and 55 cents an agate line for the Sunday issue. This increase covering an increased daily average circulation of 147,060.

The white paper bill of the Times, due both to the advanced cost of newsprint and to the larger amount necessary to take care of the circulation growth, has increased about 300 per cent since 1914. The payroll of the machanical department, including printers, pressmen and stereotypers, has increased more than 100 per cent in the same period. The advertising rate has advanced 25 per cent in five years, while the circulation has increased 55 per cent and the costs of publishing, as to two major items, have advanced 100 per cent and 300 per cent, respectively.

The Washington Star, in 1913, charged 15 cents an agate line daily and 10 cents an agate line Sunday. This rate was based on a daily average circulation at that time of 66,080. The present rates are 17 cents an agate line daily and 13 cents an agate line Sunday, and the circulation for the six months ending April 1, 1919, averaged 102,233.

Thus, an increase of 13 1/3 per cent in the daily rate covers a circulation gain of 54.7 per cent. The increase in the Sunday rate has been 30 per cent, covering an increased Sunday circulation of 65.6 per cent. In 1914 national advertisers received 4,405 circulation for each cent of daily line rate and 4,983 for each cent of Sunday line rate. At present they receive 6,014 circulation for each cent of daily line rate and 6,352 circulation for each cent of Sunday line rate.

The Star finds that, in five years, the cost of newsprint has almost doubled, and the total cost of newspaper production has increased approximately 50 per cent. In spite of these facts, the basic cost of space to advertisers has been actually reduced 36.5 per cent daily and 27.4 per cent Sunday. The Star accounts for this surprising situation by the increase in circulation revenue and the volume of advertising carried.

The Atlanta Journal's circulation in 1914 was 53,000, and the minimum advertising rate was 8 cents an agate line. The circulation under the last Post Office report was 61,575, and the rate is now 9 cents an agate line. The actual cost of publishing the Journal in May, 1919, was 66 2/3 per cent more than the cost of publishing in May, 1914.

Thus it will be seen that, while national advertisers themselves have been forced by economic conditions to increase the selling prices of their products to keep pace with mounting costs of manufacture and distribution, they are now profiting through a lower basic rate for advertising than they could secure five years ago.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER will not be accused of partisanship in the interests of newspapers when the assertion is made that no other commodity is now selling at so low a rate, considering cost of production, as do newspapers. The facts cited substantiate this claim. That present low rates are economically sound is open to serious question—but the fact that they have been generally maintained in the face of conditions to which all other manufacturers bow in submission is undeniable.

If labor costs continue to increase, as seems imminent, it requires but a minor gift of prophecy to foresee drastic advances in basic advertising rates by all newspapers. In fact, the trend is already upward, as evidenced in the figures shown in EDITOR & PUBLISHER rate lists as of July 1, 1919, compared with January 1, 1919. The increase in that period has been 8.6 per cent. That is significant. The moral for national advertisers is plain: When facing a rising market, buy early!

AMERICANIZATION THROUGH THE PRESS

THE Inter-Racial Council and its co-ordinated organization, the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers, are attempting in a big way to Americanize our foreign born residents through first Americanizing the foreign language press.

The supporters of this movement are men of dominance in the business world—such men as Gen. Coleman Du Pont and Col. William Boyce Thompson. The Inter-Racial Council hopes to strengthen the foreign language press in its fight against Bolshevism and anarchy. The national organization hopes to turn a large volume of national advertising to these newspapers, thus aiding in making them not only prosperous but vehicles for educating their readers to the value of National made products.

The people who are directing this allied work invite helpful suggestions. EDITOR & PUBLISHER begs to offer one.

It should be made possible, at the earliest moment, for the foreign language newspapers of the United States to receive the news service of one of the big press associations. The Associated Press, the United Press and the International News Service treat news in the American way. They are impartial, independent, progressive. By using such a news service, without alteration in translation, a foreign language newspaper would become, inevitably, a real force for Americanization, developing the American viewpoint and attitude toward events.

This would involve no attempt to control the editorial policies of such papers. Their editors should be wholly free, in the American way, to interpret and comment upon news and affairs. It would simply place them in line with the English language newspapers so far as the treatment of news is concerned —and this would be a great achievement.

"ADVERTISING is largely an American idea," says J. W. Sanger, a commissioner of the U. S. Bureau of Commerce. Nobody will quarrel with the statement. And most Americans will feel that this idea has been a pretty handsome contribution to the progress of the world.

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Major-General Sir David Watson, editor of the Quebec Chronicle, following his return from overseas after an absence of nearly five years, at a civic reception was officially welcomed by citizens and afterward presented to the city a flag given him by the Commune of Abscon, a French town which his troops liberated from German rule in October of last year. He was also honored by the Garrison Club, which presented him with a silver loving cup.

Charles H. Grasty, treasurer of the New York Times and formerly editor and publisher of the Baltimore Sun, addressed the Baltimore Rotary Club last week on experiences in Europe as war correspondent.

Victor Morgan, editor of the Cleveland Press, has declined a job. Following the recent two-day street car strike and a tentative settlement certain matters were to be arbitrated. The city council selected Mr. Morgan for the work, but he promptly turned down the honor.

Capt. F. W. Parker, of the 56th Pioneer Infantry, who returned to his home in Portland, Me., two weeks ago, after service with the Army of Occupation in Germany, has become superintendent of the U. S. Senate stationery department in Washington, D. C. Before entering the army Captain Parker was city editor of the Portland Daily Press.

Miss Edna N. Taylor has returned from France, where she did war work, and reclaimed the news desk of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening.

Lieut. Timothy A. O'Toole has resumed his duties as sports editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Sunday Star.

"Billy" Guard, formerly a Baltimore newspaper man, later with the New York Times and now with the Metropolitan Opera Company, has been visiting the scenes of his early labors in Baltimore.

Oscar Cesare, of the New York, cartoonist for the New York Evening Post, and Mrs. Cesare are spending the summer in Asheville, having bought a home there. Mrs. Cesare is the only child of the late O. Henry, the famous North Carolina writer. She has spent a great part of her life in Asheville.

Miss Mae Muller, of New York, a writer for the Hearst newspapers, and John Carter, wealthy medicine manufacturer of Anniston, Ala., were married recently.

Miss Fannie Rivers, of Houston, and J. C. Sanders, of the Tyler (Tex.) Morning Tribune, were married July 13.

Mrs. Kate Upton Clarke, a former member of the Brooklyn Eagle staff and Brooklyn Institute lecturer, is now an LL.D., by virtue of an honorary degree conferred by Wheaton College.

Edward Logan, formerly of Buffalo, has returned to the editorial staff of the St. Louis Republic.

Curtis Vinson of the Galveston (Tex.) News and Miss Clarice West Moore of Wallasey, Cheshire, England, were married in Houston last week. The marriage is the culmination of a romance begun in England in 1918, where Mr. Vinson was stationed on board the U. S. S. Stockton.

Edith Knight Holmes, editor of the women's clubs section of the Portland Oregonian, was married to Joseph Adams Hill on June 25.

John Kelly, well-known New York ship news reporter, and Miss Martine Brevier, of the Navy yeomanette force, have been married.

David J. Davies, city editor of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, was married to Miss Norma Maier, of the Dispatch circulation department, July 9.

Howard Underhill Archer, editor and manager of the Rye (N. Y.) Chronicle, and Miss Elsie A. Mason, of Hornell, N. Y., were married July 12.

Miss Betty Adler has gone to Europe as a special representative of the Jewish Syndicate of Newspapers. She is a sister of E. P. Adler, publisher of the Davenport (Ia.) Times.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

A. E. Braun, vice-president of the Pittsburgh Post and Sun Publishing Company, has been elected vice-president of the American Window Glass Machine, American Window Machine and Window Glass Machine Companies.

A. J. McFaul, advertising director of the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, was given a surprise dinner by his staff at the St. Paul Hotel.

George F. Goldsmith, Jr., of the New York office of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is at Atlantic City on his vacation.

Edward R. Ellis, of Boston, has been appointed New England representative of the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, of New York City.

Joseph J. Lane has been appointed New England manager of the Red Cross Magazine, with office in the Little building, Boston.

A. J. Putnam, of the Muskogee (Okla.) Phoenix advertising department, and Miss Margaret Thornton, of Dallas, Tex., were married June 28.

Thomas A. Barrett, for many years at the head of the advertising department of the National Farm Power papers in New York, is now managing the publishing work on the American Agriculturist and New England Homestead. J. W. Hastie takes the title of Eastern advertising manager of the National Farm Power.

Miss Marie Magee, for several years connected with the advertising force of the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, has resigned to take up work for the livestock department of the Minnesota state government.

Dert Dunlap, for years connected with the Twentieth Century Farmer at Omaha, Neb., is now with the Kansas City Journal Company in the management of the Missouri and Kansas Farmer.

David W. Howe, for two years a Scribner's Magazine representative in New York State and Southern territory and recently with the New York Tribune since his return from overseas duty in the air service, has joined the advertising department staff of the Syracuse Post-Standard.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

Al. L. Baumgartner, president of the Thompson-Koch Advertising Agency, Cincinnati, runner-up in the Ohio State Golf Championship in 1917, has just captured the championship of the Hyde Park Country Club, putting up a new club course record with 68. He also won the long distance driving contest with a drive of 330 yards straightaway and won the approaching contest.

George D. Briggs, formerly of Chicago Daily News Record, has been appointed publicity manager of Strong, Hewat & Co., New York.

William Ketnick has joined the staff of the Allardt Theatrical Advertising Company, Chicago.

Derby Brown has been appointed director of production for Wood, Putnam & Wood Company, Boston.

Charles F. McCahill has become a partner in the Tucker Advertising, New York, resigning as manager of the sales service department of the Boston Herald, Record & Traveler.

Dewey Booker is now on the Joseph Richards Company staff, New York.

A. L. Green has resigned as manager of advertising and promotion for the Burgess-Nash Company, Omaha, to become connected with the Modern Farm Utilities Company, in the same city.

Norton Mattocks is the new advertising manager of the Klearflax Linen Rug Company, Duluth.

George D. Wilcox has started an advertising service in Detroit after overseas air service. He was formerly advertising manager of the Republic Motor Truck Company, at Alma, Mich.

H. P. Fluhart of the Okmulgee (Okla.) Times has been made advertising manager of the John H. Moore Motor Agency of Okmulgee. Mr. Fluhart is said to be the first advertising man in Okmulgee to devote his full time to a commercial position.

Edward Lloyd Schoen of Chicago has been appointed advertising manager for Schloss Bros., clothiers, Indianapolis. He formerly was connected with the advertising departments of Chicago newspapers.

L. V. Schneider has resigned from the staff of the Indianapolis News to become Indiana publicity director for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

William F. Blaha of Chicago has become copy chief of the Coolidge Advertising Company, Des Moines.

Paul Ayers Rockwell, formerly of the Marsengale Agency staff, Atlanta, is on the high seas on his way home from France. A bullet in his shoulder put him out of the fighting and he took up newspaper correspondence.

Samuel M. Goldberg, New York City, publishers' special representative, will celebrate on August 11 the 25th anniversary of his entrance into the advertising business. He started with Henry C. Hall on the Christian Standard, Detroit.

Harris N. Pickett has become advertising manager of the Ohio Trailer Company, Cleveland. He was formerly advertising and assistant sales manager of the General Asbestos & Rubber Company, Charlestown, S. C.

Ralph Barstow has left Rochester, N. Y., for Greenfield, Mass., where he assumes the duties of sales promotion manager for the Greenfield Tap & Die Corporation.

Albert Warner has left the Albany Knickerbocker Press to do special work in the editorial department of the Troy Record.

David Tewksberry, editor of the Ketchikan Times, has returned to Seattle, and ifis now on the copy desk of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

John L. Travis, managing editor of the Seattle Times, is spending his vacation motoring about the highways of the State.

C. B. Blethen, editor, and Joseph Blethen, publisher of the Seattle Times, have returned from a short business trip to California.

PRICE HAS LIVED UP TO HIS OPPORTUNITIES

PROGRESS is measured by opportunity, and many a publisher of a small-town newspaper has done quite as well in his field as his brother in a larger city has done in his.

Take Thomas C. Price, for instance, he owns and publishes the Lincoln County News at Fayetteville, Tenn., which has a population of about 5,000. One ought to have practical experience in the mechanical department to run a newspaper in a town of that size, and Mr. Price is full equipped. He worked for ten years with the Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, in the composing room, beginning when he was fifteen years old. Then he ran a linotype machine for Marshall & Bruce Company for six years. After that he worked on the Nashville Banner for three years, when he bought the Lincoln County News and blossomed out as an editor and publisher.

THOMAS C. PRICE.

He has trebled the circulation of his paper since he took hold, and last year did a business of more than $15,000. Besides that, he has served as president of the Middle Tennessee Editors' League. That means he has lived up to his opportunities.

GROUP ADVERTISING EFFECTIVE ABROAD

American Manufacturers Should Use It Overseas to Establish Good Will and Overcome Prejudice, Motor Export Manager Suggests

By P. S. Stenstrup
General Manager, General Motors Export Company

The passing of the Creel bureau on July 1 marked the end of the official activities of our Government in promoting American publicity in foreign fields. Shall private enterprise continue the work which our Government found desirable and effective in giving our overseas friends a better conception of our ideals, purposes and activities during the war period, or shall we grant foreign competitors the exclusive use of the power of "group" or "pool" advertising in foreign fields?

The value of this and other forms of publicity in the United States is generally recognized. The growth of advertising of all kinds since the Armistice has been remarkable. One prominent American publisher is reported as having rejected millions of dollars' worth of advertising because his printing equipment was inadequate to handle the large volume of business offered.

Foreign Field Neglected

Never before in the history of American business has the power of publicity been so generally acknowledged or so liberally employed in the United States. Even the Government has shown its acknowledgment and appreciation of the excellent results accomplished by advertising during the war by recently expending with satisfactory results $184,352 in a campaign for recruits for our new army.

Unfortunately, the very general recognition by American business men of the power and effectiveness of advertising in this country has not brought a correspondingly greater appreciation of the possibilities of advertising in the overseas field. True, a few of our larger manufacturers are conducting rather extensive overseas campaigns, and the American export publications have recently enjoyed considerable increase in their advertising patronage, but few concerted efforts have been made by large advertisers or groups of advertisers to systematically and intensively develop the foreign field.

Prejudice to Be Overcome

The possibilities of "group" advertising, sometimes called "pool" advertising, a plan offering great possibilities for promoting the sale of, and building good will for, American products abroad, seem to have been entirely overlooked by American manufacturers, although this method of building good will and developing business for certain industries is already extensively and effectively employed by British advertisers. That other countries are awakening to the appreciation of the possibilities of this form of advertising is proved by the fact that Brazilian coffee growers recently started an advertising campaign in this country, backed by an appropriation of one million dollars, to increase the demand for and consumption of their product.

If "group" advertising can be effectively and profitably employed to increase the demand for and the use of certain products in this country, why should it not be even more effective in promoting the sale of American products abroad? American products will not only encounter world competition in the foreign markets, but in certain sections of the globe more or less well defined prejudices exist against American products and American methods. What more effective method could be used to overcome these sales impediments than good "group" advertising?

The motor car business overseas is in its infancy and the rapidity and extent of its development will depend largely on the employment abroad of those aggressive publicity and sales methods which have been so successful in building the business in the United States to its present huge proportions.

The possibilities of a "pool" advertising campaign abroad to increase the use of American motor cars are alluring. The field is the largest ever presented to an advertising man, and the purpose is to increase the usefulness, the wealth, and the happiness of the people of the entire world through rapid economical transportation.

A "pool" campaign could be supported by placing a uniform assessment on each car exported or by taking a percentage of the net value of each car exported for the advertising fund. The benefits from the campaign accruing to such manufacturer would be in proportion to the number of cars which he exported and to his share in the cost of the campaign, while the industry as a whole would be greatly benefited.

THIS COLLEGE PROFESSOR STARTED AS PRINTER

Prof. Robert W. Jones

From a country newspaper office printer's case to a university professorship has been the career traveled in 18 years by Robert W. Jones, who is now a member of the faculty at the University of South Dakota, at Vermillion, as director of the course in journalism.

Professor Jones holds three University degrees, A.B. and LL.B. from the University of Missouri, and A.M. from the University of South Dakota. He also has an honorable withdrawal card from the International Typographical Union dated August, 1905. He has been reporter, copy reader and city editor of various daily papers in Missouri, for eight years was a special correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and has been professor of journalism at the University of South Dakota the last three years.

ADVERTISING MEN ARE "APOSTLES OF TRUTH"

Present Demand of Public Is for Honesty in Print—Success of Profession in War Activities Proves Its Value in Reconstruction

SPOKANE, Wash., July 22.—The advertising man is a "regenerated apostle of truth," according to George A. Phillips, president of the Spokane Ad Club.

"History tells us that the book agent, the quack medicine man and the cure-all artist were among the first and most aggressive advertisers to take advantage of printed mediums." Mr. Phillips says. "The purchasers of advertising in those days were impelled for results. So the 'advertising man' resorted to high-pressure methods of appeal to bring quick results.

The Days of Old

"The most flagrant statements were made, the most unreasonable exaggerations were indulged in, to attract attention, without any regard for the truth. The public rebelled at these ridiculous methods, putting the 'advertising man' in the same category as the common liar and the quack.

"Then there came a demand for common sense, honesty, and truth in advertising, and sound principles were laid down for the guidance of ethical advertisers. Nowadays, the right type of advertising man carefully analyzes every statement before putting it into print.

"The results of the war activities of advertising men demonstrate their value to their flag and their country. Their ability in aiding the government during war proves that they can aid immensely in the activities of reconstruction.

Censoring Public "Schemes"

"The Spokane Ad Club has organized a 'Publicity Bureau' within the club, consisting of ten advertising men, all members of the club, served by a paid secretary. This bureau co-operates with other civic bodies and the newspapers in handling all publicity for public enterprises, carefully avoiding the giving of assistance to any publicity to private undertakings.

"For example, this bureau handled the publicity for all the Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, and United War Work funds. It conducts publicity for patriotic and community events, and for the promotion of community improvements, including good roads, public buildings, and hospitals. It is a central point from which is distributed reliable information concerning all these matters of common interest.

"The Bureau standardizes publicity and practically eliminates misstatements. It forms a governing body through which the talent of every advertising man in the community is made available.

A Serious Responsibility

"The advertising man who joins in reconstruction work is assuming a serious responsibility. He must bear in mind that reconstruction means that something of value has been broken down and that he is engaged in rebuilding for better ideals, not only in the business fabric of the country but the social, moral, and patriotic strength of the country.

"The almighty dollar has been reduced in rank and superseded by good citizenship. These are heroic days, and the value of the advertising man as an aid in reconstruction is no greater than the value of the man, personally.

"The late Theodore Roosevelt said that no nation could be great unless its sons and daughters have in them the quality to rise level to the needs of heroic days. He added that 'this heroic quality is but the apex of a pyramid, of which the broad foundations must solidly rest on the performance of duties so ordinary that to impatient minds they seem commonplace.'

"The moral is: Be truthful in advertising."

seca, Minn., about eighteen years ago. He left there to enter the publicity department of the Bell Telephone Company of Minneapolis, Minn., and was appointed advertising manager. After three years in that position, Mr. Callahan went to Grand Forks, N. D., as advertising manager of the Times, and when that paper was merged with the Evening Herald he became advertising manager of the Morning Herald & Evening Times.

Mr. Callahan's next step was his return to Minneapolis in 1912 to accept the position of assistant advertising manager of the Minneapolis Journal. He continued in that capacity until 1916, resigning to become advertising manager of the San Francisco Examiner, which position he held when Mr. Hearst appointed him to act also as business manager.

"Cal"—as he is familiarly known—although now weighted down with the well-known arduous and multifarious duties of business manager, continues to exercise direct supervision of the advertising department of the Examiner

C. A. McCulloch in Big Transaction

CHICAGO, July 22.—Charles A. McCulloch, a former newspaper man who has been connected at various times with the Tribune, Post and Journal, has, in association with J. Ogden Armour and John R. Thompson, purchased the Parmelee Transfer Company from John C. Shaffer, owner of the Evening Post and Indiana Star League Newspapers, and John J. Mitchell.

WISCONSIN!

"A STATE OF MIND"

PERHAPS it will be news to you that Wisconsin built a line of ocean ships for the war that would stretch out two miles stern to bow.

One Wisconsin yard alone delivered to the Emergency Fleet Corporation during 1918, twelve ocean carriers of 3,500 tons dead weight each.

Fifteen other vessels between 3,100 and 4,200 tons were also produced, in other yards, and tugs, patrol-boats, and submarine chasers galore.

Yes, Wisconsin is a manufacturing state as well as an agricultural state; above all, it is a "STATE OF MIND."

If you have something that deserves to be bought and will advertise it in the daily newspapers, of course, Wisconsin will buy it.

In Wisconsin the "word to the wise" can be best said in the dailies:

CIRCULATION NOTES

The ticket scalpers did not have a chance to do business with the happy newsboys who were the guests of the Portland (Me.) Express-Advertiser at the big Robinson Circus, for the medium of admission was an indelible stamp on the back of the right hand of each of the youngsters.

As the result of successfully greeting the R-34 British trans-Atlantic airship, in an airplane when it recently arrived at Mineola, L. I., the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Daily Eagle expects shortly to deliver newspapers by air to towns on Long Island, as an experiment to test the practicability of such a permanent service.

The Portland (Me.) chief of police is working on a plan to revive the effect of the old ordinance regulating the sale of newspapers on the streets by newsboys, charging that children from five to 10 years of age are being allowed to sell the papers without the slightest semblance of regulation of any kind.

"When the circulation manager's away the assistants will play." This parody on the old adage came particularly true in the office of the Phoenix (Ariz.) Republican recently while Oliver King, circulation manager was attending the I. C. W. A. meeting in Buffalo, and the assistants' playing took the form of a one-day drive for subscribers. The result was that the Republican's circulation climbed 135 in the one day. Ray Kane and Harry Orcutt carried out the drive all by themselves, with one solicitor and the paper's carrier boys as the drive workers.

An "Aerial Extra" of the Topeka State Journal was thrown from an airplane over the city July 10 by W. G. Clugston, a staff member. It was the first newspaper to be so circulated to Topekans.

C. E. Story, city district manager for the Des Moines Register and Tribune, is spending a two weeks' vacation on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Earl R. Foster, circulation manager of the Des Moines News, has been visiting the Scripps McRae papers in Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati.

Fifty carriers of the Indianapolis Star were taken for a week's outing to Webster Lake as a reward for excellent service throughout the past year. This was the sixth outing party of carriers.

L. C. O'Brien, formerly with the Indianapolis News, Cincinnati Times-Star, St. Louis Star and San Antonio Express, is now in charge of the reorganized circulation department of the Oklmulgee (Okla.) Times.

When the Providence (R. I.) street car men went on strike last week, the newspapers were set to handle the circulation situation. In place of sending bundles via the electric cars, automobiles were used. One paper used a motorcycle to carry papers, while another pressed a motorcycle into use for reporters.

Through a newly perfected plan the Baltimore morning newspapers are saving several hours in their deliveries on the Eastern Shore where they have a very large circulation, which heretofore was reached by trains up to Wilmington and thence back along the peninsula. Now the papers are bundled into auto trucks, which carry them to Annapolis, from which they are ferried across the Chesapeake Bay and distributed by the trucks.

To keep in touch with the newsboys the Des Moines Capital furnished Dave Fidler, street circulator, to the General Newsboys Club for one week as boxing instructor. Fidler is known as the leading newsboy boxer of the middle West. The annual outing of the Des Moines juniors was held recently at "The Ledges," near Boone, Ia., the State camp of the Boy Scouts. To show their appreciation of the outing the newsies dug a swimmer well for the camp grounds, which now furnishes the camp with fine drinking water.

The Des Moines Sunday Capital is now printing the two outside pages of its rotogravure in green ink. It also carries a peach colored sporting section each Sunday, which is in keeping with its "peach sports edition" on the daily Capital. Both have been very popular with the readers according to Messrs. Leggett and Ward, in charge of the country and city circulation departments, respectively.

The Houston Chronicle's picture gravure section last Sunday featured the local Boy Scouts organization and it proved a very popular edition. A full page was given to the local troops and showed them at their activities. The "Inquiring Reporter" column also continues to maintain high interest. Every day the reporter asks five persons chosen at random, on his rounds of the streets, a leading question, sometimes on a topic of the day, sometimes on rather personal matters, as for instance, what would you do if you were a boy again? The replies are published.

The "Daily Laugh Column" is a popular innovation on the Houston Chronicle. Contributions are accepted and, if of sufficient merit, the contributor is paid $1.

Fred M. Smith, formerly of the country circulation department of the Des Moines Capital, has become circulation manager of the Fargo (N. D.) Courier-News.

The Buffalo Times held a "Kids' Day" at Erie Beach, July 14. A coupon from the Times was good for a free round trip to the resort for any schoolboy or girl under 14 years. A prize baby show has also made a decided hit for the Times with Buffalo people.

The Portland (Ore.) Journal promoted an automobile excursion from Portland to Vancouver, B. C., for the annual convention to the Interstate Realty Association, July 18, 19 and 20. About 100 realty dealers and their families were guests.

In the Atlanta Sunday American of July 13 there appeared a new department which readers will see regularly in the future unless Atlanta Boy Scouts start things they can't finish and they have never done that yet. The youngsters will write their page, work for it and, with only the technical assistance of a newspaper man, will edit it themselves.

The Atlanta Georgian has published the Peace Treaty complete and distributed it in connection with all editions of Thursday.

The Metropolitan News Company entertained the circulation managers of Greater New York at dinner in honor of the opening of its new building at 47-53 Chrystie street.

Vernon S. Batty, circulation manager of the Gloversville (N. Y.) Leader-Republican, has succeeded F. Ernest Hinckley as circulation manager of the Gloversville Morning Herald.

The Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star is conducting a six weeks' circulation campaign, offering four automobiles and 48 other prizes. Ten per cent cash commissions are given all who fail to win a prize.

The Fall River (Mass.) Evening Herald issued a Welcome Home edition July 3, consisting of 36 pages of interesting text and advertising. The general manager, Edward Gans, formerly of Editor & Publisher, has been treating the people of Fall River to a succession of newspaper stunts of the up-and-going kind.

Louis Silverman, 15 years old, a St. Louis newsboy, won the Missouri University scholarship in competition with three other high school graduates. He will enter the department of engineering. The scholarship carries with it an allowance of $150, payable in installments, the first year.

Jane Marie Hall, of the circulation department of the Omaha-World-Herald, was married to Dan J. Harmon, Jr., July 1.

Bert Bowman has resigned as country circulator for the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press to handle western circulation of the Metropolitan Magazine. He and P. W. Blake, former city circulator of the Omaha Daily News, will establish an agency under the Rhoads-Warfield Company of Omaha and cover Minnesota, Wisconsin, northern Iowa and eastern South Dakota.

Ralph Pryne, formerly in temporary charge of circulation for the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, has been transferred to what is known as the New Business branch of the advertising department of those papers.

John A. McNeil, former circulation manager of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Evening Herald, and Mrs. McNeil will spend the summer in St. Louis and the winter in California.

The St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press offers a trophy to the playground winning the greatest number of points in a field meet to be held in August, and a medal to the boy or girl winning the highest number of points in each of ten classes. The papers co-operate with the city Department of Parks and Playgrounds. Four thousand youngsters will contest.

Stuart Carroll, circulation manager of the Stars & Stripes, will continue in Paris for some time, where he is engaged in the publishing business.

Simmons Heads Georgians

Monroe, Ga., July 17.—The Georgia Press Association closed its convention today by electing the following officers: President, J. Kelly Simmons, McRae; W. G. Sutlive, Savannah Press, first vice-president; C. D. Rountree, Wrightsville Headlight, second vice-president; Ernest Camp, Monroe Tribune, third vice-president; C. E. Benns, Butler Herald, secretary; J. J. Howell, Cuthbert, treasurer; and Hal M. Stanley, Dublin, corresponding secretary. It is the 17th term in office for Mr. Stanley, who is also state labor commissioner. Next year's meeting will be held at Carrollton.

MAKE MANY PROTESTS ON N. Y. STATE MAIL

Farmers, Business Men, Private Citizens and Post Office Employes Lay Complaints Against Service Before Department Investigators

SALEM, N. Y., July 23.—Hearings conducted here this week in the investigation of rural mail delivery conditions resulted in an avalanche of complaints by farmers and employes of the postal service. Farmers from several points in Washington county complained that they were without mail delivery for three or four days at a time.

Rural delivery carriers declared they were unable to cover the routes assigned them by the postal department.

Inspector Dow heard the complaints, and announced he will forward his report to Washington.

Hundreds of newspaper editors, civic leaders and private citizens attended the hearing at Hudson Falls, July 16, and heard of the woefully inefficient system in vogue in post offices in that vicinity. Mr. Dow listened to the complaints, making notations, and promised that all would be investigated and reported to the postal department.

Woeful Inefficiency

One of the most striking incidents of the hearing was the testimony of a resident of the Cambridge section, who said that often at 8 o'clock at night the carrier passed his house, bound for the post office at Cambridge after his day's delivery work was completed. The post office was 7 or 8 miles away from that point and the earrier still had the mail he picked up during the day. This was bad enough in the summer, with excellent weather conditions, but under the present plan the man will be obliged to go over the same route in the winter, with even greater delays.

Resignations of postmasters, carriers and other agents of the postal department were general throughout the section, witnesses testified. Since May 1, when the present working conditions were placed in operation, scores of carriers have quit, and in many cases "doubling up" has been practiced, with the result that conditions were even worse, with one man doing several men's work.

Maine Publishers Entertained

PORTLAND, Me., July 17.—Members of the Maine Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association held their quarterly meeting at Bath, yesterday, as guests of Frank B. Nichols, publisher of the Daily Times. The publishers were taken in automobiles to New Meadows Inn, where they enjoyed a shore dinner. Later, they made an automobile tour of the city.

THIRD WAR MEDAL AWARDED TO MAJ. ADLER FOR GALLANTRY

Major Julius O. Adler, 306th Infantry and of the New York Times management, was decorated again Monday for gallantry in action, when Col. A. Sapelli,

MAJOR JULIUS O. ADLER

Italian Colonial Troops, representing King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, pinned the coveted Italian War Cross upon his breast.

The citation shows that the King himself recommended the award of the cross to Major Adler, "although you did not fight on Italian soil, but distinguished yourself gallantly in action for the common cause."

Major Adler said he had no idea why he should be decorated, unless the King had reference to "that little affair outside of St. Juvin."

Major Adler also has the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre.

Col. Wilber E. Wilder, commandant of the New York Recruiting District, bade Major Adler farewell as a soldier and bade him take into civilian life the admirable qualities he had displayed as a soldier, of which the Colonel and the army, he said, are very proud.

Major Adler is a nephew of Adolph Ochs, publisher of the New York Times.

out for ourselves, just as they do, God bless 'em.

Preparedness for U. S.

Particularly, we must have just as big a navy as they or anybody else has. We owe that to our self-respect, as well as to our coast line. They must scale down or we scale up. Without naval equality this foolish old world won't pay much attention to our desire for justice and peace.

The kind of altruism which the old world singecats admire is altruism with a kick in it. Good advice without a navy is mere impudence. We mustn't offend our European friends in this way.

Then we must have universal military training and service, not only as a protective peace measure, but as a measure to promote American citizenship and preserve the spirit of American nationalism—the real victory won by us for ourselves in this war.

Favors League of Nations

I began last autumn by being for these things only, and against the League of Nations, but I have been drawn toward the broad view. I want to see America go out into the world and help, not so much for the others as for ourselves.

That's the way to keep ourselves alive. There have been nations almost as great as we. Most of them died from the ingrowing and down-breeding effects of narrow selfishness. Let's be game in this country to try the other plan under the enlightened and safe leadership of the man who is today everywhere recognized as the world's leader—Mr. Wilson.

Preacher Files Libel Suits

CONCORDIA, Kan., July 23.—Charges of criminal libel have been filed against Ray Gree, editor of the Concordia Blade-Empire, and Fred Cook, editor of the Jamestown (Kan.) Optimist, by Rev. F. R. Beers, pastor of the Baptist church here. The suit is the outcome of a "parable" printed in the two papers some time ago, relating how a certain pastor, unnamed, had asked the share of profits from a meeting for orphans.

MORGAN GOES TO BIRMINGHAM

Will Fill New Advertisers' Service Post on the News

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 26.—To render more efficient service to its advertisers the News has created the position of office and promotion manager and appointed Cole E. Morgan to fill this post.

COLE E. MORGAN

Mr. Morgan comes from the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, of which he was promotion manager, and for which he conducted successful publicity and promotion campaigns, immediately following the armistice last winter and through the spring and early summer of 1919.

Before going to Louisville, Mr. Morgan for eight years was connected with the editorial and later the advertising departments of the Atlanta Georgian until he entered the Army Y. M. C. A. service as director of publicity in Tennessee during the war. At other times he occupied important editorial positions on Knoxville, Chattanooga and Memphis papers.

LONDON TIMES ISSUES SPECIAL U. S. EDITION

Historic Effort in Cause of Anglo-American Friendship—Produced in 4th of July Special Edition—Editorial Exchange Endorsed

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT,
London Editor EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

LONDON, July 5.—That Anglo-American amity is in the course of becoming a living reality of tangible force and influence is quite apparent from the increasing attention being paid to American interests and news by the British newspapers, the latest evidence being the fine American number of the London Times issued on July 4.

The special edition must have been a thing of joy to Lord Northcliffe, who has made it almost his life work to formulate a spirit of understanding and community between the United States and Great Britain, for it typifies in print the great publisher's ideals and aspirations in creating a bond of union between the two English-speaking countries.

A 50-Page Edition

The publication took the form of a separate 22-page supplement, full Times size, presented with the day's ordinary issue, which by reason of the bulky American element therein had to be enlarged to 28 pages, making in all a 50-page number, this I believe to be a record in British daily newspaper production and well worthy of the historic occasion.

Notable contributions from men of light and leading in both countries went to make a unique review of American progress with a friendly touch that bespoke a delightful sympathy with the Anglo-Saxon cause.

An article of exceptional value and interest was one by James Keeley on "The Newspaper Press," in which he endorses the suggestion first printed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER for an exchange of staffs.

That the suggestion should be given this publicity under the aegis of the Times prompts the belief that Lord Northcliffe may be one of the first to give it concrete realization.

U. S. Advertisers

American advertisers loomed large in this Times edition, and for their contribution to the commercial interchange —no small part, indeed, of the successful establishment of international relations—their identities deserve recording. British advertisers were also well represented. American users of space included the financial houses of Brown Brothers & Co. (New York), First National Bank of Boston, Guaranty Trust Company of New York, American International Corporation (New York), Speyer & Co., Pritchitt & Co., Anglo-South American Bank, Bernhard, Scholle & Co., Harris Forbes & Co., J. H. Bache & Co., and Blair & Co., all of New York, the Philadelphia Fourth Street National Bank, Merchants-La Clede National Bank of St. Louis, West & Co. (Philadelphia), Washington Loan & Trust Co., and the Old Colony Trust Co., of Boston, Mass.

Idea for U. S. Newspapers

The whole edition was a stupendous triumph of which not merely the Times may be proud but British journalism as a whole is mightly proud, and as an effort on behalf of the cementing of Anglo-American friendship it is historic.

It only requires one or two of your American newspapers to return the compliment by issuing an All-British number, placing before the American people a record of British achievements and sentiments—events in a general way that EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S own International Number covered from a newspaper point of view. The fairway to an open understanding would be cleared and the nations brought closer together on our side of the Atlantic.

Will Concentrate on "Sports"

OTTAWA, Ont., July 21.—An innovation in Canadian newspaperdom has been inaugurated by the Journal newspapers, this city, in the appointment of Capt. E. B. Archibald as associate sporting editor and supervisor of amateur recreations and sports. It will be his aim to encourage sport purely for the purpose It serves in developing health and physical fitness. Captain Archibald is a noted Canadian athlete.

URGES HOME ADVERTISING IN LOCAL PAPERS

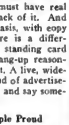
newspaper for a year, the chances are the campaign would arouse nation-wide interest because of its practical results.

A campaign of this kind to be a whirlwind of a success must have real energy and actual cash back of it. And it must be on a yearly basis, with copy changed regularly. There is a difference between running a standing card about the town and a bang-up reason-why talking advertisement. A live, wide-awake town wants the kind of advertisements that say something, and say something different every day.

Make the Home People Proud

Men who travel a great deal know very little about the towns they pass through. Impressions they receive from the car windows are not to be depended upon. Often a town does not sell well when viewed from the window of a passing train, yet it may have everything to offer a prospective citizen or factory-locator.



Men who travel talk a great deal about towns, and the advertising town is sure to receive the additional word-of-mouth advertising which would result from interest its local advertisements would arouse.

Every American town has an interesting story to tell. It should tell its story in detail, and keep repeating that story until it becomes as well known as any nationally advertised product. And, the place to begin telling that story is in the local newspaper, so that its people will learn why they should be proud of their own home town, and why the story should be sent into the outside world through the combined efforts of every citizen.

ALBERT WILLIAM STONE, LATE OF Pueblo Star-Journal, has joined Denver Post editorial staff.

HIS HOBBY IS STARTING ADVERTISING CLUBS

John H. Rennard, advertising manager of the Marietta Paint & Color Company, of Ohio, is also president of the Advertising Club of Marietta, which he organized. He always has been active in advertising club work and was founder and president of the Wheeling (W. Va.) Advertising Club. Before taking up advertising he was a reporter on the Wheeling News and later became news editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer. He has also served as chairman of the vigilance committee of the Pittsburgh Publicity Association.

$1,000,000 to Boom Chicago

CHICAGO, July 22.—The "Chicago Boosters" are perfecting plans, endorsed at a recent meeting, to spend $1,000,000 during the next four years in an advertising campaign for the city. The purpose of the campaign, as outlined by William D. McJunkin, with whom it originated, is to "remove the stigma falsely attached to the name of Chicago by other cities, largely through misrepresentations in their press."

Florida, Georgia and South Carolina are the principal producers of phosphates in the United States.

SOUTH'S FARM WEALTH MADE BY LOYALTY

Georgia Editor Says Government Plea for Food Crops Met With Response That Brought New Strength and Riches—A Buying Market

The State of Georgia, long regarded in a financial way only as a land of cotton, bought $40,000,000 worth of Western meat in 1915, reduced it to $25,000,000 in 1916, and this year will have meat to sell to the world, according to reliable authorities, and W. T. Anderson, president and editor of the Macon Telegraph, told Easton & Putnam at the S. N. P. A. convention at Asheville, that this more than anything else indicates why manufacturers of nationally advertised goods have entered the South, knowing it is now prepared to buy the best they have to offer.

Mr. Anderson, who is a recognized student and authority on the development and growth of the South during the preliminary period of coming back—for the South has only started—in discussing conditions this week, said:

True of South as a Whole

"I think the conditions prevailing in Georgia are generally true of the South as a whole. In 1865 the negroes of this country, constituting about 45 per cent. of the population, were dispersed, disorganized and demoralized by the preachments of the carpet-baggers following in the wake of Sherman's army.

"The owners of the large plantations who gave employment to this entire 45 per cent. population found it necessary to break up their farms into small tracts and to rent these lands to their former slaves, furnishing them with seed and food. In return the rent contracts without exception were made payable in cotton.

"The consequence of this system was that the South produced more cotton than the world needed, and our Agricultural Department is authority for the statement that we sold cotton at 9½ cents per pound, the average cost of producing it being 10½ cents per pound. The way we accomplished this miracle without going into bankruptcy was to use the labor of women and children, both whites and negroes, without paying a cent for it.

Profit by Government Urging

"As a result of this over-production our buying power was so curtailed that a great many manufacturers of nationally advertised and distributed goods kept out of the South, knowing that we were too poor to buy their fine wares.

"The great pressure by the Government put upon all farmers throughout the United States to raise food crops as an act of loyalty, and the profit which the farmers of the South have been able to get on their cotton during these two or three years has converted the Southern States from a poverty-ridden

ALWAYS A PIONEER

At a recent conference, the advertising staff of the New York Tribune was treated to a talk on the past history of the Tribune by Royal Cortissoz, who has been for many years its art critic. Mr. Cortissoz was at his best in recalling incidents of the days when Whitelaw Reid was putting the Tribune on the strong, permanent basis of "First of all—the News."

For instance, at the time of the great Chicago fire, Mr. Reid sent John Hay, the Tribune's leading editorial writer, from New York to cover the story. (Mr. Hay later became Secretary of State.) Another event in line with this policy was the sending of a leading staff man, John Hazzard, to report the opening of Wagner's "Nibelungenlied" at Bayreuth, Germany.

Mr. Cortissoz also recalled other ways in which the Tribune led in New York journalism. It erected the first office skyscraper in New York, with the most commodious and attractive newspaper offices in the world. It installed the first Hoe Press and aided materially in the development of the Linotype.

liability of the nation into an upstanding, self-determining, unbondaged people, who have the right to say what crops they will plant and to exercise some intelligence in the amount of each crop that should be produced.

"The new development of Georgia is reflected in the packing houses distributed over the State to take care of our cattle and hogs which are being grown for market. There are today six such plants.

"Cotton that was held is now selling for 33 cents per pound. The land is one of plenty and the manufacturers of nationally advertised articles are coming into our section with unprecedented celerity."

Bernard Douglas, formerly of the Cohoes Dispatch, has been named editorial writer for the Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

"KIDNAPPED" WRITER GETS DAMAGES

Wealthy Chicagoan Who Tied Webb Miller, Reporter Assigned to Interview Him, and Took Him to Jail, Settles for $500

A law suit begun against Mark Morton, the "salt king," of Chicago, by the Chicago American in 1914, in which Webb Miller, now acting London manager for the United Press Associations, had the role of a kidnapped reporter, has just been settled out of court, on a payment by Morton to Miller of $500. The damages originally asked were $25,000.

In June, 1914, Miss Helen Morton, the daughter of Mark Morton and prominent in Chicago society, figured in a sensational elopement. Finally, she was found in Virginia and brought back to her home. The Morton family went to great lengths to escape publicity and took the daughter to one of their country estates near Wheaton, Ill.

A Dangerous Assignment

Miller was assigned by the Chicago American to find and interview the illusive Helen. Later he was told that Morton had threatened to shoot the first reporter that set foot on his estate.

On arrival at the Morton country place by hired automobile, Miller sauntered up the driveway toward the house. In the backyard were three men tinkering with an automobile and one of them hailed him. He went over to the group and on being asked who he was, cheerfully admitted he was a reporter.

Then things began to happen. According to Miller's story, the three men grabbed him, dragged him into the barn, and began to choke his neck to strike with a long, heavy rope. Then the leader, who proved to be Morton, told the two farmhands to get some tar and feathers ready.

When they refused to participate in a tarring bee, Morton carried Miller on his back and threw him into the automobile, announcing his intention of taking the reporter to the Wheaton jail. This he did, but not without further adventure.

Motor Car Is Wrecked

About half way to Wheaton, Morton lost control of the automobile and it tore into a barbed wire fence at about thirty-five miles an hour. The machine was wrecked and both occupants severely cut by the barbed wire. Morton then commandeered the reporter's hired automobile, which had been trailing the other car, and took the reporter to jail. The next day Miller was acquitted of the only charge Morton could concoct—trespass.

Then the Chicago American brought suit against Morton for $25,000, charging false arrest, kidnaping and assault. When the case came up for trial, Miller was in Mexico for the United Press. When it next came up, he was in London, and later at the American front, for the U. P.

A few weeks ago, Morton evinced a desire to settle the suit out of court and as Miller thought it would be too much trouble to return to Chicago on the chance of a favorable verdict, he consented to settle. The other day he received a check for $500 and the case was dismissed.

London Advertising Man Here for Ideas

Charles Wiles, advertising manager of Harrods, London, has arrived in this country and will make a study tour of American methods of advertising that will take him as far West as the Pacific Coast. One of the purposes of his visit will be an interchange of ideas with American advertising men.

WANTED FOR SALE

New York Sun Will Move To Stewart Block

Change to Building Mr. Munsey Bought in 1917 Probably Will Take Place During the Fall

As soon as alterations now under way are completed, the New York Sun and the Evening Sun, owned by Frank A. Munsey, will give up their present quarters at 150 Nassau street and move to the Stewart building, on old landmark of New York City, occupying the block front on Broadway from Chambers to Reade street, which Mr. Munsey bought in October, 1917. It is not expected that the removal will take place until October and possibly not until December.

The basement and sub-basement of the Stewart building are being remodeled to accommodate the presses and the foundry of the two newspapers. The present mechanical equipment now includes five Hoe Setxuple "20th Century" presses and their number will be increased to twelve. A mezzanine floor in the basement will be used by the mailing department.

The business offices will be located on the ground floor at the northwest corner of the building, extending 40 feet along Broadway and about 225 feet along Reade street. The composing room of both papers will be on the second, and the news departments, the editorial writers' offices on the third, and the engraving department, which now is housed at 165 William street, will be on the seventh or top floor.

When Mr. Munsey bought the building, which was built nearly 72 years ago by the late A. T. Stewart, one of the pioneer New York merchants, he announced his intention, ultimately, of tearing it down and erecting on the site as a home for the Sun and the Evening Sun, a building better fitted architecturally to its surroundings.

He said at that time that the high price of steel and other building supplies made it impossible to say when construction work on the new building would begin and it is understood that while he still has this project in mind, its realization has been postponed indefinitely. One of his business representatives said that when the new building was erected the basement would remain as recently remodeled.

News Print Made in Philippines

The Philippines are in a position not only to supply news print for domestic needs but to export large quantities of this product, according to a report just made by the Director of the Bureau of Forestry. It is said that the raw materials available, such as the bamboo and two kinds of grasses, the cogon and the talahib, are of such good quality and can be so cheaply secured that if this industry is given careful study the islands will not need to import annually $2,000,000 worth of paper as heretofore.

Test wells for oil are now being drilled in Florida.

CHINESE PRESS SHOWS SIGNS OF PROGRESS

Emil M. Scholz Writes of Pioneer Work Being Done in Orient in Way of News Service to Papers—American Advertising Going to China

Emil M. Scholz, formerly publisher of the New York Evening Post, and who has specialized several months in the Orient, expects to return to the United States in September, but does not plan to return to New York before October.

In a letter to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, written from Shanghai, China, June 13, Mr. Scholz describes the general strike there in May, directed against the Government's action in the Shantung matter. Everything Japanese is being boycotted, he says. America stands very high with the Chinese. President Wilson's speeches having been translated into the language of the country and very widely circulated. These speeches, according to Mr. Scholz, constitute a sort of political Bible for the natives, who are looking more and more to America for guidance and for co-operation.

"The great task in China is to fit its swaddling clothes," writes Mr. Scholz. "There is no paper here that has over 30,000 daily circulation, and most of them are under 5,000. They are all ambitious to adopt modern methods, but they are not commercially profitable. Eighty per cent. of the people here do not read, while exactly the reverse is true in Japan.

"I have met Powell, who runs Millard's Review, and he is one of the progressive Americans here. Carl Crow, formerly of the Committee on Public Information, has embarked in a new venture that promises well. He is placing advertising in the vernacular press, and also conducts a news agency that furnishes news to the Chinese papers here and in Peking, where he is associated with Roger Ames Burr. The papers are taking to the service. It looks to me like the beginning of the Chinese United Press. They are placing business like the Ingersoll watch in the Chinese papers. American manufacturers who expect to open the Chinese market have got to advertise to the consumer."

Mr. Scholz has addressed the advertising club in Shanghai on "The Commercial Development of American Newspapers," and also talked at the Peking Press Club, on which occasion his address was translated to the Chinese editors present.

Gets Artificial Limbs for Poor Boy.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 22.—Two hundred dollars were needed to supply artificial limbs for a boy whose legs were amputated above the ankles. The Knickerbocker Press presented the case to the public, withholding the boy's name. It asked for aid from readers and three days later a table was printed showing the names of the readers who had given more than twice the amount desired.

The association now has five hundred members, and President McKernan in his inaugural speech requested that the membership be doubled, calling attention to the fact that this only requires each member to bring in one application during the coming year.

The membership committee is twice the usual size and it is expected that the organization will double its membership in the next year. The slogan is 'One Thousand Members for St. Louis.'

President McKernan, who is circulation manager of the New York World, said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"The I. C. M. A. is doing effective work in the circulation field and business managers and publishers who appreciate having their circulation managers keep up to date should see that they join this association.

"On the invitation of the Publishers' Association, the 1920 convention of the I. C. M. A. will be held in St. Louis June 15, 16 and 17."

Wales Agency Girls Win Ball Game

At the annual outing and field day of the Wales Advertising Company, New York, held at Bear Mountain July 12, the surprise of the day was the showing made by a team of young ladies from the art, detail and stenographic departments, who made the men's nine play their hardest to defeat them by the close score of 12-11. The young ladies' team has issued a challenge to any similar team in the New York Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

LAWYER-EDITOR HAS MADE HIS MARK

TEN years spent in the practice of law and another decade as owner, publisher and editor of a newspaper—that is the record of Edward Albright, publisher and owner of the Gallatin (Tenn.) News.

EDWARD ALBRIGHT.

Mr. Albright was graduated from the law department of Cumberland University in 1898, when he was twenty-five years old. He hung out his shingle in Gallatin, Tenn., near which town he was born. Just why he dropped the aspiration for the towel sack and every young lawyer has, he doesn't say, but he bought the Gallatin News at the end of the time specified above and has been running it ever since. The News has no competition, since it is the only newspaper in Gallatin, a county seat of 4,000 population and in a county of 30,000. All of the local business is for Mr. Albright. He loves the work of editorial associations and has devoted himself to it in large and generous measure. He has been president of the Middle Tennessee Editors' League and also of the Tennessee State Press Association and is vice-president of the National Editorial Association. He hasn't any political aspirations, however, as he showed when, in 1918, he declined to enter the race for Governor of his state, though two-thirds of the newspapers in Tennessee endorsed him for the Democratic nomination. He never has care for political office. He has a good paying newspaper property and is content to give his attention to that.

W. R. Robinson, formerly an editorial writer on the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is now doing similar work for the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

H. B. Lautman, city editor of the Pittsburgh Leader, is recovering from the effects of an auto accident.

D. C. HATCHER GOES TO ATLANTA

Becomes Circulation Manager of Georgian Before His 26th Year

DETROIT, July 23.—Douglas C. Hatcher, at present circulation manager of the Detroit Journal, has signed a year's contract with the Hearst organization as circulation manager of the Atlanta Georgian.

Mr. Hatcher goes to Atlanta on August 31. His has been a rather spectacular career. Starting in Lansing, Mich., as a newsboy, "Hatch" first got into the mail room of the Lansing State Journal. Soon after he was made circulation manager, in which post he so distinguished himself that, early in 1915, he was offered and took the circulation manager's post on the Detroit News. He went to the Detroit Journal on January 1, and now gets into the biggest newspaper organization in America—and all before he is 26 years old.

Buffalo Men Join New Agency

BUFFALO, July 23.—Besides Alex F. Osborn, other local advertising men who will became affiliated with the Barton, Durstine & Osborn Advertising Agency, are Clarence L. Davis, who will be general treasurer and local service manager; Donald B. Wheeler, director, and D. R. Davis, who will be production manager. He formerly was copy director of the Vanderhoef agency of Chicago.

Robert Egan, Pittsburgh newspaper man, has been appointed general director of the Knights of Columbus activities in Paris.

ENTIRE WORLD CALLS FOR STEEL

Orders in Broad Inquiry Now Exceed Shipments

GERMANY AND AUSTRIA BUY

Situation Indicates Sustained Activity Throughout Summer

Developments in the iron and steel trade this week have been of a very favorable nature. Producers report that new orders have exceeded shipments, coming both from foreign and domestic sources. In fact the week was marked by a broadening inquiry for steel and steel products from all parts of the globe, including Germany and Austria.

50,000,000

Gross Tons Of Steel For 1919 Estimated Production

has led in steel production in this country for many years—and still leads all other states in steel.

With the entire world calling for steel, Pennsylvania's continued prosperity is assured for a long time to come. Every industry benefits.

Business in every line is good in Pennsylvania. People are all working.

These daily newspapers, covering the state from the east to the west, and from the north to the south, will carry YOUR message, together with the name of your LOCAL DEALER to the buying public of this territory —a territory well worth the most intensive cultivation.

To Newspaper Publishers

Just one year ago, after careful investigation of conditions, I launched a campaign seeking to produce closer co-operation between the newspapers and advertising agents for the purpose of producing increased volume of general advertising.

I advocated the adoption of an increased commission allowance to 15 per cent. and 2 per cent. cash discount, to help meet the agents' increased cost of doing business. I am informed that 90 per cent. of the daily newspapers are now on that basis.

I advocated commission allowance to agents on national advertising linked to the names of local dealers — localized national advertising — and have definite assurance from hundreds of newspapers that they are now doing this.

Millions of dollars of new advertising for newspapers is now in preparation in the agencies, and I most earnestly urge publishers to do everything in their power to help make it easier for the agencies placing it.

The wonderful superiority of newspaper advertising is about to have its greatest demonstration. We need have no fear of the result.

In Chicago The Daily News

Six days a week, against all competitors, morning or evening

Leads in Automobile Advertising

There is no longer any question in well-ordered advertising offices and agencies as to what six-day medium is to be used in Chicago. The high efficiency of Daily News advertising as a selling influence for Passenger Cars and Trucks of all prices, and for Tires and other Accessories, has been so fully demonstrated that The Daily News is automatically selected as the right six-day medium for the Chicago market.

Lineage figures speak plainly. They cannot be disputed. There is no way to go behind them. For the month of June, 1919, they tell the following story of the automobile advertising situation in Chicago:

Total automobile lineage for all six-day newspapers, as prepared by an independent audit company

THE DAILY NEWS—FIRST	56,244 lines
Post	43,863 lines
Tribune	31,842 lines
Journal	20,501 lines
American	15,347 lines
Herald and Examiner	11,469 lines

AS TO THE COST OF THIS ADVERTISING

If cost is considered—and it is considered in every case—there is a wider difference between The Daily News and its nearest competitor than even these lineage figures show. The greater difference is disclosed in the following table showing the cost of the above advertising in dollars and cents:

	Lines	Cost
THE DAILY NEWS—FIRST	56,244	$20,247.84
Post	43,863	5,263.56
Tribune	31,842	12,736.80
Journal	20,501	3,582.68
American	15,347	5,064.51
Herald and Examiner	11,469	3,455.39

In words, the automobile advertisers who spent money in Chicago newspapers in June, spent nearly twice as much for Daily News advertising as they spent in the THREE OTHER EVENING NEWSPAPERS COMBINED.

They spent two-thirds as much money in The Daily News as they spent in ALL THE OTHER CHICAGO NEWSPAPERS COMBINED for six-day advertising.

Not a dollar of the lineage published in The Daily News was involved in trade deals or other considerations. It was cash paid for value received.

Dollars play few favorites, and when the automobile advertisers of the country make their advertising appropriations in Chicago in this manner there can be no question of their preference as to media in the six-day field.

"The Isle of Rhodes!"

That is what they used to call "Little Rhody" in the spacious days of the seventeenth century.

Today, the "Isle of Rhodes" boasts of a density of population unequalled by any other state, over 500 persons to the square mile, and 95% in the cities.

Connecticut with double its population has only 231 people to the square mile, half of them RURAL, and still is the FOURTH state in the density of its population.

Massachusetts is second state in density of population. Its population has increased nine times and over in the last century and a quarter, and 92% live urban.

In contrast, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, have about the density of the prosperous agricultural states, the first two being in addition maratime as well as industrial.

As to Vermont, it is the beauty spot, and makes the most of its historic mountains, high plateaus and jolly little lakes and islands.

And, none of the New England states has any prouder boast than its newspapers.

Read the list.

There is not one of those papers that has not figured NATIONALLY in the big affairs of the Nation, and played the part of patriot.

There is not one that has not had and does not carry its full share of NATIONAL ADVERTISING and would not be proud to carry MORE.

Every newspaper on this list can serve you better in its territory than any other form of publicity.

MARYLAND IS THE MOTORIST'S PARADISE

MARYLAND'S splendid system of State roads, famed among all automobile tourists, leads the driver into every corner of the State, from ocean and bay front to the tip of the Blue Ridge, with water and mountain scenery that rivals the show places of Europe.

$3,000,000 additional will be spent within the next year in further improvement of Maryland's roads.

The automobile, naturally, plays an important part in the life of the State, and automobile makers, tire and accessory manufacturers find Baltimore and Maryland a most profitable market.

THE Baltimore Sun

is the first choice of automobile advertisers who wish to interest Marylanders in their cars, tires and accessories.

Reach the Maryland motor enthusiast through his favorite newspaper —The Baltimore Sun

In June The Sun published, in morning, evening and Sunday issues, 213,000 lines of automobile display and classified advertising, a gain of 94,000 lines over the same month a year ago.

The five issues of all the other Baltimore papers combined in June carried only 138,000 lines, The Sun publishing 75,000 lines of automobile advertising more than all other Baltimore newspapers.

NATIONAL EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION MEMBERS START VICTORY TOUR THROUGH NORTHWEST

Program Will Be a Practical Educational Course for Editors and Publishers of Smaller City Newspapers—Extends from July 26 to August 26—Result Should Be Strengthening of Friendship Ties Between United States and Canada

THE members of the National Editorial Association of the United States, representing the cream of the smaller city newspaper publishers and editors, are off on their international "Victory Tour," which will come to a close with the annual convention sessions August 9 at Portland, Ore.; August 15, at Seattle; and August 18, at Victoria, B. C.

The N. E. A. party left Chicago last Saturday for Winnipeg, and during the past week have been the guests of the citizens and business men of Winnipeg, Portage, Dauphin, Saskatoon, University City and Saskatoon, in Canada. They are in the latter city today, and will leave at midnight for North Battleford.

Will Strengthen Friendship Bonds

On departing for the Northwest, Congressman Guy Hardy of the Canon City Record, who is president of the N. E. A., said to Editor & Publisher:

"The Victory Tour of the National Editorial Association is about the most pretentious ever undertaken since the days of the over worked pass—of sad and pleasant memories. The distance covered is great. The tour includes weeks to be spent in the world renowned Canadian Rockies—days on the waters of the Pacific, days in Mount Rainier National Park, days in Crater Lake National Park, days in automobiles and boats—a little time in the cities of the Northwest—and about three days in convention sessions.

The convention sessions will be divided between Portland, Seattle and Victoria, a day at each place, with an occasional address slipped in here and there. The convention dates will be about as follows:

"Saturday, August 9, at Portland.
"Friday, August 15, at Seattle.
"Monday, August 18, at Victoria.

"There will be some serious talk—some heavy programmes but not enough to interfere much with the pleasure side of this wonderful tour.

"A good, interesting, enlightening, elevating, inspiring programme is being assembled. Two great nations are being combed for talent. The programme will contain some big numbers—bigger and better than we promise—which promise I know is unique in convention literature.

"Since last we met the Great War has been brought to a successful close. The United States and Canada had a great part in the winning of this war. Sons of American and Canadian mothers fought side by side—many are buried side by side in France. Canada is grateful to America and America appreciates the valor and worth of Canada as never before.

"And now in celebration of the Great Victory, the National Editorial Association will be honored and entertained by Canada as she has never been honored and entertained before."

HON. GUY. U. HARDY,
Member of Congress, newspaper editor and president of the N. E. A.

Complete Schedule of Tour

From today on the program follows:

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1.—The party will arrive during the early hours of the morning at North Battleford, where complimentary breakfast will be served. Auto drives about the city will be made and departure from the city taken at 11 A. M. Lunch will be served on the diners, and the party will reach Wainwright about 6 P. M., where they will be the guests of the city for supper. A visit will be made about the city and an opportunity given to view the Government herd of buffaloes, the largest herd of these animals now in existence. Departure from Wainright will be made about 11 P. M.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2.—The City of Edmonton will be reached about 9:30 A. M., where the party will be guests of the city at luncheon, and the afternoon will be spent in visiting about the city. A reception and supper will be tendered by the Board of Trade during the evening. Edmonton is the gateway to the far Northwest, and is a very interesting city for the editors to visit. The departure will be made about midnight, the train departing from the Canadian National Station.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 3.—The party will reach Jasper about 11 A. M., where they will be served a barbecue, after which the party will have an opportunity for a view of the Mountains of Jasper Park. Departure will be made from Jasper about 3 P. M. The next stop being at Lucerne, reaching there about 6 P. M. Devotional services will be conducted that evening and the train will be parked for the night at Lucerne, as all of the travel in the mountains will be made during the day-light hours.

MONDAY, AUGUST 4.—Departure will be made from Lucerne at about 10 A. M., and the day spent traveling through the mountains, reaching Kamloops about 9 P. M., where the train will be parked for the night.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 5.—Leaving Kamloops about 10 A. M., the day will be spent traveling through the mountains, reaching Boston Bar about 6 P. M., where the train will be parked for the night.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 6.—Leaving about 10 A. M., from Boston Bar, a daylight run will be made down the mountains, reaching Vancouver during the night.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 7.—After breakfast on the diners the Editorial Party will be guests of the city of Vancouver, spending the entire day about the city, viewing the many places of interest. This is one of the leading ports of the world as one of the largest cities of the Pacific Northwest. The entertainment will be varied to include a luncheon by the city and in the evening supper will be served by the Board of Trade. Departure will be made from the city about 11 P. M., enroute for Seattle, via boat from the docks of the C. P. S. S. Lines.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 8.—The party will reach Seattle shortly after the breakfast hour, transfering to a special train on the Northern Pacific enroute to Portland, stopping about noon for a couple of hours at Chehalis, where lunch will be served, as guests of the Citizens' Club. The arrival of the party at Portland is scheduled for about 5:00 P. M. Hotel reservations will be made enroute, permitting each member of the party to reach the Headquarters Hotel and to find his or her room with little difficulty. Autoes will meet the train. At 7:30 P. M., a reception of delegates and ladies will be held at Waverly Country Club, where the addresses of welcome and responses will be made.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9.—A business

CHARLES H. FULLER, ADVERTISING PIONEER, DIES IN WEST

Legions Affectionately Called Him "Uncle Charley"—One of First Agency Men to Invade London—Was Interested in Organized Base Ball in Early Days.

CHARLES H. FULLER, pioneer advertising man and founder of the company that bears his name, died at the Hyde Park Hotel, Chicago, where he made his home, July 21 at the age of 75 years.

To hundreds of newspaper and magazine men from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast he was known affectionately as "Uncle Charley" Fuller. Big of mind, heart and body, he tried each day through his active business life, which was spent entirely in the newspaper and advertising field, to make a new friend, and how well he succeeded is attested by the sorrow that was expressed throughout the publishing world when his death became known.

Started as a Police Court Reporter

His only great activity outside of the advertising field was organized baseball, in which he was also, with A. G. Spaulding, a recognized pioneer, he having been a stockholder in the first Chicago White Sox club. He was among the first men to realize the possibilities of international advertising, and opened a branch office in London, England.

Born in Rome, Pa., in 1843, Mr. Fuller went to Illinois as a child, his parents settling at Belvidere. He attended the public schools in Belvidere and Lee Center, and began his career in a country hardware store.

He entered the publishing world as a police court reporter on the Chicago Daily Mail, having gone to that city shortly before the great fire. In 1871 he switched to the Chicago Daily News, shortly after its establishment by Melville E. Stone and Victor Lawson. He was first connected with the editorial department, but later changed to the advertising department, and is reputed to have drawn up the News' first rate card.

With Daily News Five Years

Mr. Fuller remained with the News five years and then left, against the advice of Victor Lawson, to enter the agency field, and with D. M. Lord and C. E. Raymond, of the J. W. Thompson Agency, became one of the dominant factors in American advertising circles.

The enterprise he founded prospered, and in 1886 it was incorporated as the Charles H. Fuller Company. Mr. Fuller became its president, which position he continued to hold until eleven years ago, but even during this later period he maintained private offices adjacent to the great agency he established. No other man in the Chicago section knew so many publishers intimately, and he acted as philanthropist and father confessor to many men in their troubles.

His Binding Friendships

Mr. Fuller was a great admirer of Joseph Pulitzer, and for years kept his picture framed hanging over the desk in his office, while hundreds of other autographed portraits of prominent publishers and advertising men hung on the walls.

diffident and reserved in manner and a lovable character, but extremely very dignified, he managed his agency always as practically a one-man institution.

After the sale of the agency and Mr. Fuller's retirement in 1906 he traveled extensively all over the United States his retirement it is estimated he had and part of Europe. Up to the time of paid daily newspapers alone approximately $50,000,000 for space bought.

Charles H. Stoddart, Western Advertising representative of the Munsey publications, and one of the men who knew Mr. Fuller best, said of him:

Associates Pay High Tribute

"The passing of Charles H. Fuller will come as a shock to the newspaper and magazine men of America, especially those of a decade or so ago. He was one of the pioneers and giant figures in the advertising field when the advertising profession was more of a business and less of an art than it is today.

THE LATE CHARLES H. FULLER

"Possessing in a remarkable degree a genial personality, a vigorous business mind, and a rigid spirit of integrity and fairness at all times he quickly became one of the international figures in the advertising world. He was a believer in the first American advertising agent to extend his operations into foreign countries by opening an office in London to cover continental Europe.

Was Always Fair

"As a constructive advertising man he was a leader, and to his farsightedness and business acumen is due today the solidity of many a monster business and possession of fortune by his early patrons.

"To his keen sympathy, his absolute fairness and sense of justice many men now enjoying prosperity owe much. Young men in his employ for years and profiting by his instruction and advice have since become the heads of great business. They could be counted by the score.

American War Reporters Great Service to Country Attested and Praised

Out of all those forty or fifty regularly attached correspondents, I can state that I never met one who was not willing to sacrifice his own personal interests at any moment for the interests of the American Army. I think, in view of that reason, America has a right to be proud of the American Press.

* * * *

No more patriotic service was performed by any officers of the A. E. F. than by the correspondents who covered Chateau-Thierry and the Marne. It isn't easy to ride all day every day over bad roads, and then work half the night besides. That is what the correspondents were doing on the Marne, and the good work they performed is therefore doubly to their credit.—Gerald Morgan, Major of Field Artillery and Chief Censor of the A. E. F., in The Saturday Evening Post.

CONGRESS WILL QUIZ POST OFFICE HEAD

Postmaster-General Burleson's Conduct of the Department to Be Subjected to Searching Inquiry When House Resumes Work in the Fall

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Postmaster General Burleson is to have an opportunity very shortly to explain all about his fight with the newspapers and magazines of the country over the postal zone law.

But he will have to produce facts and names, as he will be appearing before a hostile committee of Congress which will have for its announced purpose the getting of his "goat."

Representative Zihlmann of Maryland, chairman of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, is to conduct the inquiry into the mail service, but neither the Maryland member nor other members of the committee have any hesitancy in going into all affairs of the Post Office Department under Mr. Burleson.

Want Concrete Information

Members of the committee are accumulating information bearing upon the alleged inefficiency of the postal service, with its consequent effect upon the business of the country. They are getting letters from many sections of the country citing specific instances of inefficiency, and they are quite convinced that the Postmaster General will have to produce some other response than the word "$220,000,000 subsidy," which he has used to answer any and all criticisms of his administration of the postal service.

He will have to show, they declare, "something stronger" than his charge that all criticism of the department has its origin, development and influence from his "secret fund to prevent the publishers of the country to continue to pilfer the public treasury," through the aforesaid well known "$220,000,000 subsidy." The hearings are scheduled to begin soon after the recess of the House.

A. N. P. A. COMMENDS STEREOTYPERS UNION

Kellogg Compliments Union on Integrity in Holding to Contracts—Asks Consideration for Publishers—Union Opposes Teaching Trades

(BY TELEGRAPH)

DENVER, Colo., July 29.—The most successful convention of the International Stereotypers and Electrotypers Union since its organization nineteen years ago, came to an end July 26, after being a week in session here. Approximately 100 delegates attended and action was taken upon important matters.

The convention went on record as condemning the teaching of trades in their entirety by public trade schools.

The Technical Education Commission of the national organization, recommended that locals should investigate trade schools in their vicinity.

Reports on a pension system the union proposes to put into effect, on assessments, and other matters pertaining to the conduct of the union were referred to committees.

One of the most important addresses was that given July 23 by H. N. Kellogg, chairman of the special standing committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. He congratulated the union on its clean record in fulfilling its contracts and cautioned against Bolshevist tendencies. Referring to the unrest among labor unions, he urged stereotypers to consider that the publishers had been equally hard hit with labor by the rising costs of the last four years.

Many Papers Not Out of Woods

"The record of publications suspended since the inception of the great war is concrete proof of this," he declared. "In the past few months business has improved, but there are still many that are not by any means out of the woods."

An inquiry was made into the recent Seattle labor troubles, believed to have been instituted by I. W. W. leaders. Charles A. Sumner, secretary treasurer of the organization, was the only international representative of the printing trades in Seattle at that time, and it was declared to be through his influence that the five printing unions refused to follow the I. W. W. His vigorous action won the praise of Ole Hanson, Mayor of Seattle.

It was decided that matters of jurisdiction between the two branches of the union should be settled by the local unions, if possible.

Eugene V. Dunnegan, delegate from Washington, occupied practically the entire session of the fifth day in a defense of his entertainment by the Washington local after being expelled from the national convention of 1918.

Next Year in Boston

Toronto was chosen as the convention city for 1921. At the last general convention it was decided to hold the 1920 convention in Boston. No officers were elected, those elected in 1918 holding over for two years.

Union dues were raised from 50 to 75 cents a month.

Resolutions were adopted providing for the representation of the International Typographical Union of Canada at Labor Congress, and for the transfer of $36,000 from the pension fund to the general fund to meet deficits caused by the war.

A referendum vote will be submitted to the membership within the next few weeks on a resolution calling for the adoption of a union label for all products of the union.

NEWSPAPERS MUST ECONOMIZE IN NEWS PRINT OR FACE SHORTAGE IN NEAR FUTURE

Consumption Is Largest in History in Spite of Fact There Is Now Less Than Six Per Cent Increase in Production Over 1918 and Larger Part of Supply Is Being Exported—National Survey of Conditions

UNLESS newspapers of the United States take immediate and drastic steps to economize in their use of paper, news print conditions approximating those of 1916, if not worse, will confront them again in the near future. In truth, the predicament next time threatens to be one of supply and not of price —from which money can buy no relief for the unfortunate.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER bases this warning on its own inquiry and on opinions expressed to it by news print and publishing authorities, backed up by reports on production, consumption and supply issued by the Federal Trade Commission.

All sources of information serve to show that more news print paper is being used at the present time in the United States than ever before in history, while production has increased less than six per cent. This margin is far more than wiped out by vast exports to Australia and eastward to Europe of paper that, last year, became of the war, was available for domestic use.

No New Manufacturing Means

The six per cent increase in news print production over last year is not the result of new mills opening up, but is entirely due to the relief from war conditions. Outside of one unit started by the International, the Great Northern and the Laurentide Paper Companies no new mill facilities are available.

Production will be increased somewhat this year by the operation of a new machine, now being installed by the Thompson Pulp and Paper Company at East Angus, Quebec, which will have a capacity of sixty tons daily, and another machine which Price Brothers of Quebec will have installed at their Kenogami mill some time in the fall, with a capacity of fifty tons daily. But that is all.

The International Paper Company is planning to build a mill at Three Rivers on the St. Lawrence River, which will have a daily capacity of 200 tons, but this will not be in operation for two years or even later.

News print manufacturers both in the United States and Canada say they will not go ahead with expansion because of the attitude of the governments of both countries toward the industry. No new mills have been opened in the United States for some years past, and probably there will be none until water power legislation is enacted which will encourage capital to invest in the released natural resources.

Only Six Papers Own Mills

Both American and Canadian mill owners complain that price fixing for domestic consumption is unfair, and they prefer to export at far better prices than they can get from home consumers. The figures show they are doing it, as far as they can.

There are only six newspapers in the United States that own their own paper mills and have independent sources of supply. They are the New York World, New York Times, Chicago Tribune, Boston Globe and St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch. The Minneapolis Tribune is just completing a mill of its own.

The Minnesota Editorial Association is endeavoring to have the state finance a paper mill for their use, as well as that of the state needs.

The newspapers of South Carolina have taken up again the proposition that was favorably received before the war of establishing a pulp mill in that state for paper manufacture. During the meeting of the state press association at Greenville, a resolution was passed to push the project. Some of the leading financiers of South Carolina favor it.

These are facts for the serious consideration of news print users who are using up their reserve supplies, feeling that the mills will speed up production in the fall and prevent a shortage.

In New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit, and other big newspaper cities, daily editions have run as high as 40 pages in size recently and few go larger than 30. The increases in consumption during the first six months of this year over last year, throughout the country, will average more than 25 per cent. The New York figures are presented in a table accompanying.

Here are some typical examples of how newspapers have increased in pages this year and conditions throughout the nation:

Some Instances of Increased Sizes

The Houston Chronicle reports that between 20 and 25 has been the percentage of its increases during July, due wholly to the demand for advertising space. It has no free lists, no exchange lists, has allowed no returns, and has advanced both the subscription price and the street sale price. During the first twenty-four days of the month the Chronicle used 506 pages, eight-column size, as compared with 426 pages for the same period during 1918, or an arrearage of nearly four pages a day.

From July 1 to 26, inclusive, the Seattle Times printed 840 pages, as compared with 782 pages during the same period last year. The Post Intelligencer printed 704 pages, as compared with 544 pages.

The San Francisco Chronicle has printed during the same period this year 676 pages and last year 496; the Examiner, 760 and last year 716; the Call-Post 484 and last year 432; the Bulletin 546 and last year 429 and the Daily News 242 and last year 188.

The Atlanta Journal printed during the same period this year 684 pages against 537 last year; the Georgian 603 pages against 506 last year, and the Constitution 614, compared with 466 last year.

The St. Louis Post Dispatch printed during July 1 to 26, inclusive, this year 796 pages as compared with 658 during the same period last year; the Star 361, and 304 last year; the Times 310 and 274 last year; the Republic 556 and 534 last year; the Globe-Democrat 658 and 510 last year.

Newspapers in many of the smaller cities already are experiencing the inconveniences of a hard market.

"Anyone who has attempted to purchase paper in the open market within the last ten days has discovered a very tight situation," Charles I. Stewart, general manager of the Lexington Herald, writes Editor & Publisher. "A newspaper not now assured of its supply for the remainder of this year is, in my opinion, in a very critical situation."

The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph reports that it has exceeded its supply under contract and is unable to buy paper at the mill for less than 3 to 6 cents.

Between twenty and twenty-five per cent. of the print paper used by newspapers in the United States is consumed in Greater New York. About twenty-five per cent of the total is consumed in Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and St. Louis. Another twenty-five per cent. is used in forty-five cities having over 100,000 population. The increase in news print consumption during the first six months of this year as compared with the same period last year, is greatest, proportionally, in the large cities than in the smaller cities and towns.

Yet, in New York City and other large cities, advertising is being refused in order to keep down the size of newspapers.

Growth in Production Small

The News Print Service Bureau in its bulletin for June of this year, states that 39 reporting companies produced 150,938 tons and shipped 151,741 tons during June. Shipments exceeded production by 803 tons. Production figures include 715 tons of hanging, of which 305 tons were made in Canada.

The average daily production of news print paper by the mills reporting for June amounted to 99.5 per cent. of the average daily output during the three months of greatest production in 1918.

The comparisons for 1919 with 1918 are based upon the same identical mills.

Production by the United States mills during the first six months of 1919 was 32.145 tons, or 6 per cent. greater than during the same months in 1918. Canadian production during this period exceeded that of the same six months in 1918 by 17,745 tons, or 5 per cent., making the combined production of the 39 reporting companies 469,890 tons, or 6 per cent greater than in the first six months of 1918.

The United States mills shipped 1,175 tons less and the Canadian mills 12,063 tons more in the first six months of 1919 than in the corresponding period of 1918.

Stocks during June decreased 930 tons at United States mill points and increased 1,454 tons at Canadian mills, making total stocks 525 tons more on June 30, 1919, than on May 31. The total of 24,704 tons on hand at all mills June 30 amounted to about six days' production.

News Print Service Bureau figures are used, because nine mills report to it than to the Federal Trade Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission's figures on the amount of news print used and of stocks held by leading publishers in the United States from May, 1918, to June, 1919, inclusive, show how consumption has increased, and the amount of paper on hand or in transit has decreased.

Since there is some variation from month to month in the number of publishers reporting, the figures are not directly comparable, but they show that there was a decrease of 14,008 tons in the hands of the 718 reporting publish-

U. S. SENATE ADOPTS "OPEN COVENANT"

Secret Session for Discussion of Treaties Has Passed Into History—Press Will Be Admitted Monday to Consideration of Peace Treaty

By Robert T. Barry,
Washington Correspondent for Editor & Publisher.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—At last "open covenants openly arrived at" are to come into their own.

The secret session of the Senate for the discussion of treaties has passed into history. No more will the American people have to depend upon the willingness of some Senators to whisper to correspondents snatches of the business transpiring behind closed doors when international relations are on the legislative calendar.

The Senate voted today to begin this radical—almost revolutionary — departure from custom, honored and maintained by mossworn tradition, which commonly is regarded as having had its inception in the "public be damned" policy which governed all phases of international affairs in bygone days.

Throws on Full Light

It is true, no doubt, that the present agreement to let the American public have full knowledge at least of the surface transactions incident to the ratification of treaties, may be traced to political strategy, but what matters it when the end is justified by the means?

President Wilson was unable to force European diplomats to swallow this pill of "pitiless publicity," but the Senate has determined that the full light of public discussion shall pervade the atmosphere during its discussions of the treaty with Germany.

The real start in "open executive session" will be made Monday when the long-delayed Lodge resolution treaty will be taken up. Prior to that, however, the Senate correspondents will be permitted to enter the room of the Committee on Foreign Relations on Thursday, when the first of the "peace conference experts" are called for their views on the treaty.

Will Tread on Sacred Ground

Instead of loitering in the corridors outside the committee room as they did in the old days, the newspapermen will file right into the room where the late Senator Stone of Missouri presided until his death a little more than a year ago. It was Senator Stone who protested most vigorously against Senators violating the rule of the secret session by telling newspapermen as much as they remembered of what transpired. He once insisted that newspapermen seemed to proceed on the theory that they possessed an unwritten license to nose into the affairs of anyone they pleased.

The Senator's remarks were published at about the same time that George Creel was charged with having described the Washington correspondents as "a pack of hounds going around snapping at the heels of public officials."

But this is another day, and the correspondents, perhaps a little battle-scarred from previous battles, are hoping that they will have to work about one-tenth as hard and will get many times more news and accurate news at that, than before.

Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi whose delightful whimsicalities never fail to appeal to the Senate, gave a parting thrust to the secret session of the Senate this week. The Senator was discussing the charges of Senator Brandegee of Connecticut that President Wilson had violated the Franco-American alliance by failing to present that covenant to the Senate at the same time the German treaty was delivered.

He referred to the fact that whereas Senator Brandegee, Colonel George Harvey and Will H. Hays seemed to have discovered the text of the treaty on July 22, it had been carried in full by the Associated Press on July 3.

"And the Associated Press certainly is public," the Senator added. "I know of nothing more public than the Associated Press unless it be a secret session of the Senate."

Editors! A Friend of a Friend of America Wants Your Help, Please

General John J. Pershing is coming home from France within a few weeks. He has done a good job—a big American job—well. When he reaches the home shores bands will blare a welcome; all real America will shout, "Well done, son;" silk flags of the world's greatest democracy will again flutter from careful hand folds, and the manhood leadership of the dawning day will have its military idol home.

For more than two years General Pershing has been too busy with America's work in the world's remaking to notice what we were saying in print about him here, but when he steps ashore the press of America is going to decorate him—he is going to receive a big book filled with the things that were said about him when he was taking care of things over there for you and me.

You must help make this decoration. Whether your publication is daily, weekly or monthly, today may should set aside fifteen minutes to rush all the best stuff you have printed (with or without pictures), with name of publication and date attached, since General Pershing was chosen to lead the overseas forces, to: The Great Scrap Book Editor, The Times, Detroit, Mich.

James Schermerhorn, general manager of the Times, is responsible for this call, and in a letter to Editor & Publisher says:

> "Just to show Jack Pershing I hear him no ill will for "jumping" me and making me "sore" when he was a Brownsmanan and I was a plebe at West Point! He probably never spotted it. Great Scrap Book—fit title scrap—established this ocean of type. Pershing said about the Commander-in-Chief of the American Expeditionary Force while he was on duty in Europe."

A. B. C. PUTS NEW RULES INTO EFFECT

Finally Ratified at Monthly Meeting of Directors' Board—Practice of Carrying Time of Subscriptions Next Matter to Receive Attention

The monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, held at the Hotel Knickerbocker, New York, July 25, presided over by President L. B. Jones, advertising director of the Eastman Kodak Company, as usual, was well attended.

A vast number of matters in the nature of questions were presented to the board by Stanley Clague, managing director, relating to special cases which were awaiting rulings, and disposed of. The new rules and regulations governing the bureau's standing practice, which had been submitted to the membership prior to the annual convention, were finally adopted. These rules and regulations are of the utmost importance to publisher members, and of course, to advertisers and advertising agents as well. They clarify the treatment of all circulation methods in the auditing procedure and all audits made by the bureau from now on will have these rules as a basis. They were printed in full in Editor & Publisher of June 19 and 26, 1919.

An important discussion on the next forward movements in the work of the bureau was a feature of Friday's directors' meeting. For instance, the consensus of opinion was that there will be a constantly growing demand in future from advertisers for the elimination of practices that tend to lessen the value of circulation, such as carrying subscribers in arrears an undue length of time.

Subscription Arrears Question

The present post office rules and the rules of the A. B. C. permit carrying subscribers in arrears up to one year from the dates of expirations of their subscriptions. It was declared to be pretty well established, however, among the buyers of advertising space that this is not sound business policy; that the number of renewals secured after a period of arrears of eight or more months are not warrant continuing old subscribers on the mail list beyond that time. The opinion was that it is fair and reasonable to carry a subscriber in arrears long enough to afford the publisher a full opportunity to bring about a renewal, but the conviction is growing that after a reasonable credit to the old subscriber should be limited more than it is at present. That is, if an old subscriber will not renew his subscription within three months from the date of expiration, it ought to be assumed either that he does not wish to renew or that he fails to do so because he is satisfied that the publication will be sent to him in any case for a second year.

This and other questions of equal moment affecting the improvement of circulation methods are crowding themselves more and more upon the attention of the A. B. C. board of directors, and it is the purpose of the board to give them all the time and consideration possible in future meetings.

Editor Wins British Medal

Mexico City, July 28.—Felix M. Palaficini, owner of the newspaper El Universal and former Secretary of Public Instruction, on Monday will be awarded the Cross of Commander of the British Empire by the British Charge d'Affairs at a public ceremony. The honor is in recognition of Senor Palaficini's pro-Ally services during the war.

HARD TO COVER CHICAGO RIOTS

Motorcycles and Automobiles Used Principally by Reporters

(By telegraph)

Chicago, July 30.—To cover the worst race riots in the history of Chicago, besieging city editors turned the city-wide strike of car men and the tieup of all means of public transportation, city editors made use of many ingenious ideas for covering the story. Typical American is advertising that it will pay $7 per day rent for motorcycles with side cars and rear seats for conveyance of reporters during duration of strike.

All papers are having extreme difficulty in getting men over the large city area covered by rioting.

CAROLINIANS MEET TOMORROW

Secretary of Navy Josephus Daniels Will Be Guest of Honor

Wrightstown Beach, N. C., July 30.—All is in readiness for the opening of the annual convention of the North Carolina Press Association, which will be held here tomorrow and Friday. An especially fine business program has been arranged, and sufficient pleasure will be interspersed to make the occasion enjoyable to all.

A big ship will be launched during the program session and the editors will be special guests on this occasion, President Whitehead says. Secretary of the Navy Daniels, editor and owner of the Raleigh News and Observer, and a member of the association, will be the principal speaker of the occasion. The North Carolina Press association has about 125 members.

WOOD PULP NOT AFFECTED

Excluded from Scope of Canadian Reciprocity Law Repeal

Washington, July 29.—Wood pulp and wheat are omitted from the scope of the proposed repeal of the Canadian Reciprocity Act as approved by the ways and means committee of the House. Representative Young of North Dakota filed the report with the House from the committee favoring the repeal of the Canadian Reciprocity Act. He explained that provisions of the bill affecting wood pulp and wheat which are actually in operation, were re-enacted in the Underwood tariff law, and hence are not affected by the repeal bill.

The effect of the repeal bill is to take off the statute books the measure which never was operative, because of the failure of Canada to enact similar legislation.

George T. Bye Was with U. S. Soldiers Through the War

Kansas City, Mo., July 29.—George T. Bye, correspondent of the Reciprocal News Service, is home from Europe on a brief business trip. He was formerly with the Kansas City Star. Mr. Bye, who was with the American troops on the British front much of the time after America entered the war, will spend his time, until he sails for England again on August 30, in getting into touch with American conditions and helping out in the extension of the Reciprocal News Service string of papers in the East. The R. N. S. has its American headquarters in Kansas City, where Reginald Davidson is agent.

Chicago Tribune May Have to Move

Chicago, July 29.—It is reported on good authority that the Chicago Tribune has acquired a site on North Michigan Boulevard, half a block wide and a block long, to erect a building by May 1, 1920, at a cost of $1,500,000. The board of education, which owns the land on which the present 12-story Tribune building stands, has expressed its intention of taking back the property for school purposes.

Mexicans Seize H. L. Foster

Joplin, Mo., July 26.—Harry L. Foster, a Brooklyn newspaper man, has been seized by Mexican bandits, according to word received by relatives here. Mr. Foster was taken from a train near Colima, Mex., a few days ago, and the American government has been unable to obtain word of him. He was writing a series of articles on Mexican affairs.

FRANK GRANDIN WELCOMED TO NEW YORK BY GOTHAM'S ADVERTISING HOSTS

One of the Most Remarkable Tributes Ever Paid an Advertising Man was Tendered by 200 Leaders of Profession—Gen. Felix Agnus, W. A. Thomson, J. W. Scott of the Manchester Guardian, and Col. Buxton Among Speakers.

A WELCOME to New York such as no advertising man starting in business ever received before was that tendered to Frank C. Grandin by his Eastern friends and admirers (assisted by many Westerners) Tuesday evening at the Hotel Pennsylvania.

Mr. Grandin recently moved his advertising organization from Battle Creek, Mich. (where he established a national reputation as a space buyer for the Post Cereal Products), to New York, to enter into the general advertising agency field through the Liberty Advertising Agency. In putting Post products in the forefront of goods of their class, Mr. Grandin performed an advertising feat that has made him a nationally known figure.

A few weeks ago in Chicago his Western admirers tendered him a send-off dinner that was in a class by itself as far as the West was concerned, but New York was determined to bid him welcome in a manner unique in the annals of its advertising events.

A committee composed of George A McClellan (chairman); Howard Davis, Louis Wiley, Thomas Conklin, George Larke, Paul Block, William Simpson, E. W. Preston and Barrett Andrews laid the scheme for a $10 a plate dinner some weeks ago, and it was staged de luxe Tuesday evening with fully 200 participants.

Friends Swear by Him

And such a welcome they extended! Good spirits reigned supreme. Business and the worries of prohibition were forgotten in making Frank Grandin know that he was welcome to the best New York advertising fellows have within their power to give him.

It is really remarkable how many friends this man Grandin has, all swearing by him through thick and thin. If well wishes count for anything the Liberty Advertising Agency is assured of success right from the start.

William A. Thomson, director of the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A. was toastmaster, and filled the role as only he can.

Toastmaster Thomson in bidding Mr. Grandin welcome in behalf of his hosts, said the transplanting was not a difficult matter, for as he remembered it, "in the sixty-two years" of their acquaintance Grandin was to be found 728 times in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, one time in Battle Creek, where he lived, and was supposed to do business. "It was just a case of telegraphing to Battle Creek for his shirt and to pick up his cutaway coat for the change to be made effective," said Thomson—which expression received unanimous endorsement.

Then there was Gen. Felix Agnus, proprietor of the Baltimore American and Star, as a speaker of welcome, and the ever popular Civil War fighter told some things of Mr. Grandin and his ancestors, as he knew them, that just glowed with warmth and good feeling.

Mr. Thomson then introduced William C. Freeman "as the champion heavyweight recommender of the world" to really express to the honor guest the sentiments of New Yorkers with whom he is taking up his abode.

And "Pop" Freeman proceeded to launch forth into oratory—short and hearty—that was the speaking gem of the evening.

This is what he said:

"I am taking the thirty-one letters used in the name—Frank C. Grandin—our honored guest, whom we welcome to New York with open arms and glad hearts—and in the word "advertising"—our guest's business—and in the word "liberty," the name he has given to his company—to initial thirty-one paragraphs that form the foundation upon which our guest has built his manhood—upon which he and others have built advertising—and upon which he and all of us in America have built our conception of liberty.

"F—Fairness—an essential to success.
"R—Reliability—necessary to win strong place in the world.
"A—Ability—honorably applied, carries one over the top.
"N—Nobility—the twin of honor.
"K—Knowledge—a great asset of life.
"C—Character — the cornerstone of happy human existence.
"G—Generosity — prompts heart and brain to act unselfishly and justly.
"R—Reputation—the preferred stock of life.
"A—Achievement—the reward of honest endeavor.
"N—Naturalness — invites confidence, love, respect.
"D—Determination—the backbone of victory.
"I—Intensity—the basis of heart and love in work.
"N—Never—the word that prevents surrender or deviation from duty.
"A—Aggressiveness—the ally of progress.
"D—Dependability—the keystone of faith in the printed word.
"V—Vision—that which leads men to great accomplishments.
"E—Enterprise—continued effort.
"R—Resourcefulness—the quality that enables men to meet all situations squarely.
"T—Tenacity—holding on with bulldog grip till one wins.
"I—Integrity—the foundation of all advertising success.
"S—Sincerity—the passport to the people's confidence.
"E—Equality—giving opportunity to all.
"R—Responsibility—assuming it, makes men strong and courageous.
"T—Tolerance—makes us forget, forgive and help.
"Y—Yankee—the name given to men who made liberty possible.

"I—Intelligence—applying care and good sense in making understandable statements.
"N—Nerve—a quality that surmounts obstacles and gains the goal.
"G—Grist—the result of zealous and honest application.

"L—Loyalty—the finest human characteristic.
"I—Industry—the open gate to success.
"B—Building—aiming always to better conditions.

NEW YORK'S ADVERTISING MEN WELCOMING FRANK GRANDIN AS ONE OF THEM AT HOTEL PENNSYLVANIA BANQUET TUESDAY EVENING

"And now, let me give our guest another paragraph—the thirty-second and the last. I want to emphasize what I think is his strongest qualification—LOYALTY—which I have defined as 'the finest human characteristic.'

Cabaret de Luxe

"I know all about his splendid loyalty to the man who founded the business with which he has been so long and honorably associated. I know that his sense of loyalty has enabled him to give it in full measure to all who are now responsible for the conduct of the business. I know that Frank Grandin's chief aim is to do everything he can at all times and under all circumstances to further the interests of the business which gave him his first opportunity in life and which commands now and always will his affection and his ability."

After this, James Gilroy of the Gude Company, seized the floor and paid his respects in a humorous strain to Mr. Grandin.

In the meantime stage stars from the

ADVERTISING CAN HELP RETAILER MEET CHAIN STORE COMPETITION

Worcester Telegram Plan Offers Wide Possibilities—Places Merchant, National Distributor and Manufacturer Under Mutual Obligation to Do Share of Local Advertising.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

WORCESTER, Mass., July 30.—The new advertising campaign organized by the Worcester Retail Grocers Association in conjunction with the Telegram of this city to meet the competition of chain stores without antagonizing the national distributor is already attracting wide attention.

The Worcester Telegram plan differs from others that have recently been advanced for the benefit of the established grocer to meet the chain store competition inasmuch as it places the local merchant under obligation to carry a share of the necessary advertising, places the manufacturer or distributor of a nationally known product under obligation to advertise locally, practically assures him a shelf showing, and unlike the Southern California Plan carries with it no threat of ultimate competition in the manufacturing field.

Worcester Movement Started in June

In June a movement was set on foot in Worcester to raise capital for the expansion of a chain of stores operating for cash at cut prices, which threatened the security of the long-established retail dealers.

The condition existing attracted the attention of the grocers, and after several conferences the retail grocers decided to use a page of advertising a week in The Worcester Telegram for a period of fifty-two weeks.

The space is being used to demonstrate the greater worth of personal, dependable service and standardized goods. That the corner grocer is a family friend of long standing is a thought that will be developed through the advertising.

In short, the idea of friendly service rather than of impersonal service will be sold to the consumer. An official emblem has been adopted by the Association, which appears on all advertising done by the grocers, and will be shown on the store windows.

Advertised Goods Assured Distribution

For the national distributor, this plan is, the writer believes, the most effective means devised to quickly secure worthwhile distribution of advertised food products.

It goes further than the Des Moines plan or the Providence Journal plan, for the subscribers agree to stock and display the goods of any manufacturer (whose goods are approved by the Publicity Committee of the Retail Grocers' Association) who advertises them in The Worcester Telegram, to the extent of 10,000 lines or more within the year.

Both the Des Moines and Providence plan provide for the display of such goods as are carried in stock if these goods are advertised in the newspapers the grocers, however, do not agree to stock such goods as are advertised nor do they agree to spend any money for advertising. In Worcester the grocerymen will spend their own money to bring trade to their counters and agree to stock the goods of any manufacturer for the national advertiser.

Committee Passes on Requests

Meetings are held each week between representatives of the newspaper and representatives of the Retail Grocers' Association. At such meetings the application of a manufacturer who wishes to introduce his goods to Worcester is received. The application is at once passed upon by the publicity committee of the grocers, and if it is accepted each member of the Grocers' Association is immediately notified of the Committee's action. According to the agreement between the grocers and The Telegram the grocer is then obligated by the vote of his committee to stock the goods.

The concluding transactions are only a matter of detail. Provision is made that such advertising as is done by the national distributor in The Telegram shall bear the words:

"Sold by the members of the Retail Grocers' Association of Worcester."

This, of course, will serve to reinforce the weekly association advertising. The firms entering into this agreement are the most powerful and influential of the retail grocers, and have also been established for many years in Worcester. Only by a complete collapse of the whole association can the Worcester Retail Grocers' Association fail to accomplish a betterment of conditions for the consumer, the retailer and the national distributor.

Will Reduce Sales Resistance

The Worcester plan is calculated to reduce sales resistance, to cut down selling time, to secure a more adequate display of advertised goods and to furnish a local representative in the person of The Telegram promotion man for the national advertiser.

The writer is of opinion it will have the effect of stimulating business in various ways. The element of personal pride enters more largely into the conduct of his business. By virtue of having spent his own money for advertising which proclaims his store to be painstaking in service and up to date in every particular, the retailer at once becomes careful to live up to his creed.

Proposes Labor Union for Baltimore Scribes

Federation Organizer Circularizes Editors, Copy Readers and Reporters and Promises Support for Higher Pay

BALTIMORE, July 29.—Efforts are being made here to unionize the reporters on the daily papers here. Harry L. Eichelberger, general organizer of the Federation of Labor, has the matter in hand, and every reporter, editor, and copy reader on the daily papers here has received letters from him inviting them to become members of the Newspaper Writers' Union. Application blanks were enclosed.

To what extent the movement has progressed has not been announced. It is understood that apart from the letters of invitation, a great deal of quiet missionary work has been undertaken, but those who know anything definite about this are not talking for publication.

Several years ago there was talk of organizing a Newspaper Writers' Union, but no headway was made, the scribes apparently unanimously sidestepping the proposition. There are those with the papers today who see no better chance for the present movement than that of years ago, and the newspaper managements, as far as known, are not worried.

On the other hand, the organizer appears to feel that the time is opportune, and is setting forth facts concerning the comparative pay received by "the brains" of the papers and the mechanical forces. Assurance is given those approached, of support of affiliated organizations of the Federation in securing better pay.

PUBLISHERS SEE NEED OF LABOR DATA

Heads of Many Newspapers Believe They Will Profit in Parleys with Unions by Information Being Gathered by United Typothetae

Industrial and wage problems of newspaper publishers and those of commercial printing establishments parallel each other in so many particulars that publishers appear to be a greater interest than ever before in specialized work of the United Typothetae of America, composed of master printers, toward solving labor troubles. Those newspapers which maintain job shops are particularly interested.

In order to bring some degree of order out of the industrial chaos which prevails in the commercial printing field, and which is duplicated to no small extent in the business of newspaper publishing, the Typothetae has appointed an Industrial Relations Bureau, with headquarters at the main office of the organization in Chicago.

Lack of Uniformity

In a recent issue of the Typothetae Bulletin, the official paper of the organization, Arthur E. Southworth, the president, addresses the members on the work of the new bureau, as follows:

"There is an appalling lack of uniformity in wage scales and working conditions in the industry within the same competitive area.

"This condition, as every printer knows, is the curse of our business, and in spite of the requirements of Section 3 of the constitution, which provides that all agreements entered into with labor unions be sent to the secretary of the association, and in spite of repeated letters requesting information as to wage scales, working conditions, etc., little response has been secured.

"We cannot too strongly appreciate the importance of having this data compiled centrally. It will serve primarily as the basis to the association for getting more uniform conditions, and will make possible to you information of incontestable value in your local negotiations with the unions.

"The labor organization has all this data sent into their international secretaries and distributed their locals with up-to-date information. This arrangement is especially necessary for that such information is just as valuable to the employer—if not more so—as it is to the employee, or it is to the unions.

"Now, I am going to count on all members to come through with the following information:

"Wage scales by classes and by businesses separately.

"Apprentices—ratios and wage scales in effect.

"Hours—day and night and Sunday.

"Working conditions—shop conditions, rest period, etc.

"Methods of payments or informal plan.

"Copies of contracts with organized labor.

"This information is especially necessary now that there has been established an Industrial Relations Bureau, for which purpose we have currently informed only in proportion to your own willingness to co-operate and assist by sending in the information requested."

Many newspaper publishers are agreed that similar means of getting light on labor conditions throughout the country should be adopted by themselves, but in the meantime they are awake to the valuable service information being obtained by the Typothetae will be to them in negotiations regarding labor conditions and wages, with their own union employes.

In New York City, for instance, the local Newspaper Publishers' Association now has negotiations pending with both the engineers and machinists. Committees representing the publishers and the union have conferred on the demands of the former for an increase in the weekly minimum wage scale from $32 and $33 to $36, and by agreement have submitted to their respective organizations a counter proposal to make the wage scale $36 for chief engineers and $34 for engineers.

Negotiations in New York

A conference may be held soon between committees representing the New York publishers and the machinists' union on demands of the latter for an increase in the minimum weekly wage from $43 to $55, a reduction in the hours of labor of from 48 to 44, and double time for overtime.

In June of this year the National War Labor Board granted to the machinists employed on New York City newspapers an increase of wages to $7.20 daily, the eight-hour day, the award to take effect as of October 15, 1918, and to continue for the duration of the war unless either party chose to terminate it on July 1, 1919, "for such readjustments as changed conditions may render necessary."

The machinists took the initiative in reopening the matter of further wage adjustments.

FINE WELCOME HOME EDITION

Gloversville and Johnstown Give Message to Soldiers Through Herald

A splendid special souvenir edition of the Gloversville and Johnstown (N. Y.) Morning Herald was published July 25 in honor of the Second District Selectives. Each one of the twenty pages contained a "welcome home" message from the business institutions of the territory or the people.

The first page was given over entirely to a reproduction of F. Mantania's drawing, "The Glorious Americans In Battle," the winner of Second District selectives, the honored dead and many reproductions of photographs of men who entered the service as well as a complete list of persons on welcome home committees are included in the edition.

Mr. Birmingham and Miss Glenn Wed

Ernest F. Birmingham, publisher of the Fourth Estate, and Miss Mae Catherine Glenn were married at Harperley Hall, New York, last Friday evening by Bishop C. H. Burch. The couple left immediately for a honeymoon trip to Nova Scotia. The ceremony was performed in the presence of 150 guests, and was followed by a formal reception. The Fourth Estate staff presented Mr. and Mrs. Birmingham with a beautiful silver tea service.

Washingtonians to Meet with N. E. A.

TACOMA, Wash., July 29.—The 33d Annual Convention of the National Editorial Association will be held August 13-17 in conjunction with the Pacific Northwest Convention of the National Editorial Association, according to announcement by N. Russell Hill, of the Davenport Times-Tribune, secretary-treasurer.

Herman T. Schlick Dead

SWANZEA, Ill., July 25.—Herman T. Schlick, for many years owner and editor of the Evening News until he retired in 1906, died here last week. He was born in Berlin, Germany, and passed the greater part of his life in Rochester.

BUCK PRIVATE AND OFFICER ADVENTURERS IN FOREIGN LAND JOURNALISM ARE HOME

Stars and Stripes Set New Record in Quick Circulation Achievement—Raised Great Funds for French Orphans—Fearless to the Last—Complete Roster of Persons Who Served the Army through Its Official Spokesman

"THIRTY" was sounded for the Stars and Stripes, official newspaper of the A. E. F., with issue No. 19 of Volume II, June 13, 1919, and now Wally, "the Marine and Swedish cartooner," Private Dave Walsh and the sheet's only board of censors—"three privates and a fat sergeant"—are back home.

Other members of the ever-changing staff of the famous sheet that attained a circulation of more than half a million have been arriving in this country for several months. One of the things upon which the men who made this famous agent for higher morale pride themselves is the fact that in editorial conference and questions of policy "Buck privates proceeded to outvote hell out of the officers," according to the history of the paper in the last issue.

When "J. J. P." Made a Request

The narrative cites incidents to show that silver stars on a man's scapular never prevented a buck-private managing editor from saying what he thought when the policy of the paper was an issue, and then closes with

"Only one request, which was couched as a request and not as an order, ever came to us in 16½ months from the High Command. That was when the C-in-C. adopted two little French war waifs under our orphan department's plan.

"Being American newspaper men, we naturally got all set to boost the cause by heralding the adoption far and wide. But a brief, yet polite, memorandum, signed "J. J. P.," asked us not to play it up—asked, and not ordered. And so the best story in that week's paper went in, along with Cook Smith's and Private Jones' adoptions, as simply:

"Gen. John J. Pershing 2

"We can remember another memorandum, the outcome of a little difference as to whether the paper was going to run for the enlisted men or not. It came from the fountain head of G. H. Q. through channels. And it said, in substance:

"The style and policy of The Stars and Stripes is not to be interfered with.'

"It never was; and thus the old sheet was able to achieve whatever measure of usefulness, whatever place in the hearts of its fellow Yanks it may be credited with, now or in times to come."

"Apologies to Nobody"

Inside on the editorial page of the last edition "Finis" was written and in it will be found a touch of the daring that made it possible for America's army to lead the world to freedom. It follows:

"The Stars and Stripes is no more, but before its wan song lisk the breeze it had the satisfaction of seeing the final stamp of authenticity, the last bound of the genuine O.D. article, like stiun and terrible, as it was generously included in a box of its Army products and held up to violent misjudgment by a discharged soldier whose needs were widely quoted in the States.

"About the worst thing that our gentle critic could say about the sheet was the fact that all the time that the buck who was the editor was busy answering angry letters from top officers and other autocrats and trying to get Wally to draw his cartoons for the paper on time, a legend was appearing on the masthead in which "1/2/0" was a part of the postoffice address.

Ah-ha! said the corporal, and put down another note in his book. Some day I'll get back and tell the world that the A. E. F. Overseas Staff was a propaganda paper.

"The facts are these: There was a censorship on The Stars and Stripes. It was made up of some three privates and one fat sergeant. They sat on every article and if they caught the scent of the press agent, the promotion-hunter, or the officer who wanted to explain all about what the enlisted men really thought, they threw the said contribution into the waste basket and Rags, the freedom office bloodhound, swallowed it.

"Once in a while this board was fooled, there is a white list proprietor of bordeaux and ice cream got into the columns but did not come over until long afterward. Once in a while some joyful enthusiast got over some Pollyanna keep smiling ideals, but it wasn't often. You can fool some of the people all of the time but you can't fool every soldier-editor of the time.

"So let them wield their hammers if they will. The Stars and Stripes is beyond them. It is certainly first issue, with native forward nose, with chariots for all, and apologies to nobody."

Praised by Secretary of War

Secretary of War Baker, who has urged the passage of legislation that will prevent any private publication to adopt the name, Stars and Stripes, in order that it might be preserved for a mission similar to that it has come America should ever raise another big army, has written the following letter to Stillman H. Bingham, editor of the Duluth Herald:

"It is different to speak about or to write about the enterprise of the Stars and Stripes different indeed than many about the remarkable young men in charge of that publication would tolerate.

"I had the privilege of meeting the staff of the paper at its office, of seeing its representatives through all the lines of communications, and of finding its product all the way up to the friendly edge of No Man's Land.

"I hesitate to draw distinctions between services in a great adventure where self sacrifice was everywhere in evidence, but I doubt if there was any existence of self forgetfulness and disregard of rank which surpassed that of the men on the Stars and Stripes.

"As you know, large contributions were made by the soldier readers of the paper for the education of French orphans. Working in connection with the former editors of the Stars and Stripes, I have had prepared and sent to Congress a proposed bill which will permit the entire surplus of the paper to be turned over to the same purpose, in accordance with the wishes of the staff."

The Stars and Stripes began its career with a circulation of 30,000 copies. Less than a year later its circulation had reached 550,000, a new record for growth in the history of journalism. At this time the paper was "rationed" to the soldiers, only one man in three in a company or other unit being allowed to subscribe.

French Supplied News Print

It was only at the beginning of this year that the Stars and Stripes received print paper from America; before that it had to depend upon the generosity of the French press bureau, which had only scant supplies at its disposal.

In addition to serving the A. E. F. with news and keeping the scattered units from the Murman Coast to Italy in touch with one another, the Stars and Stripes maintained a French War Orphan Fund to which 480,000 soldiers contributed 2,000,000 francs, enough to "adopt" and maintain 3,500 French children for a year, operated a service department for the soldiers in the field which answered 120,000 questions pertaining to allotments, insurance, pay and thousands of other problems, printed 500 poems written by soldiers—and received 20,000.

Made Profits from Start

The Stars and Stripes made a profit of 3,500,000 francs in its 16 months of life. It had been intended to turn this over to the French War Orphan Fund for the further care of the A. E. F.'s family of fatherless French children, but the Judge Advocate of the A. E. F. decided that the funds belonged to the Government and must revert to the United States Treasury. A bill is now pending in Congress, based on a petition of the editorial council, to appropriate the profits of the paper to the future care of the war orphans.

STAFF OF THE STARS & STRIPES UPON THEIR ARRIVAL IN NEW YORK.

Stars of Army Papers Will Head New Weekly

Men of Stars & Stripes, Gas Attack, Plane News and the Spiker Are on Staff of the Home Scetor

The former editorial council of the Stars and Stripes, official newspaper of the American Expeditionary Forces, will conduct a weekly magazine for the discharged soldier and sailor to be known as The Home Scetor, it is announced.

The council includes the several former soldiers—mostly privates—who went to France in 1917 and were detailed to work on the A. E. F. newspaper upon its founding in February, 1918.

The men who will comprise The Home Scetor's editorial staff are H. W. Ross, of San Francisco, formerly managing editor of the Stars and Stripes, who will be the editor of the new publication; John T. Winterich, of Springfield, Mass., news editor of the Stars and Stripes; Alexander Woollcott, of New York, chief correspondent of the Stars and Stripes at the front; Hudson Hawley, of Hartford, Conn., according to the announcement made by the publishers, the Butterick Publishing Company, of New York.

The associated staff and regular contributors include: Franklin P. Adams, Grantland Rice and W. E. Hill, all of New York; Tyler H. Bliss, of Hartford; J. W. Rixey Smith, of Springfield, Mass.; Phillip A. VonBlon, of Cleveland; Jack Burrgess and R. J. Bidwell, of San Francisco, most of whom were assigned to the Stars and Stripes during its existence and all of whom were in the army or navy in the war.

The staff artists of The Home Scetor include: C. LeRoy Baldridge, staff artist of the Stars and Stripes, who has been called the greatest American artist of the war; Abian A. Wallace, of Philadelphia, whose comic cartoons were a feature of the Stars and Stripes; R. Van Buren, of the Twenty-seventh Division's "Gas Attack"; George W. Alexander, artist on the Plane News, the newspaper of the air service in France, and Lucien Brenon, artist on the Spiker, a magazine issued by the engineers in France.

With these men will be associated members of the soldier newspaper's organization—its circulation department, its service department and other branches, in all 200 men.

Taught British Government Importance of the Press

Lord Burnham and Sir George Riddell Are Honored by the Newspaper Owners of England

By HERBERT RIDOUT, London Editor, Editor & Publisher

THE men to whom the British and, in part, English-speaking world owe their knowledge of the events of the war and the progress of the peace negotiations are Viscount Burnham, the chairman of the British Newspaper Conference, and Sir George Riddell, who has held the none too enviable position of laison officer between the press and the British Government, and rendered signal service to secure the freedom of the press in connection with the peace negotiations.

The members of the Newspaper Proprietors' Conference have just honored these veteran press-fighters by presenting them with their portraits painted in oils by celebrated artists as a mark of appreciation for their notable work.

Speaking of Lord Burnham, Viscount Northcliffe aptly said, in this connection, that the newspaper world is fortunate in having one so willing and able to champion its cause, and that he knew how often Lord Burnham smoothed over the difficulties at our Press Parliament, the Newspaper Proprietors' Association.

Lord Northcliffe Praises Work

Lord Northcliffe was one of those who suggested the presentation, and, referring to it, remarked that immediately hostilities commenced there were all sorts of curious discoveries as to the psychology of the Government and the public. Not more astounding than the famous myth that the Russians had landed in England, and were to proceed to France, were the extraordinary myths in the mind of the Government in regard to newspapers.

It was, he added, largely due to Sir George Riddell that the press has come into its own during the war. He had himself many times met Sir George in Government offices, patiently awaiting the pleasure of some minister in order that he might explain to him that the newspapers were not unpatriotic seekers after something with which to sell their wares that the Government thought them to be, and that the British public and the whole world should know what our soldiers and sailors were doing and suffering.

It is difficult to believe today that there were exalted personages at the War Office and the Admiralty and in the Cabinet who did not realize that it was essential to make the effort of the British Empire known. It was Sir George Riddell who personally did much to overcome this opposition in high quarters, and, in addition to his untiring work at the Newspaper Proprietors' Association, it was his incessant efforts that secured the belated publicity for the British armies which has made our effort known in Allied and neutral countries.

It is almost inconceivable, but it is true that the British public did not hear of the first battle of Ypres till long after it had been fought. War correspondents were treated at that time as reprobate camp followers.

Lord Northcliffe said he dwelt upon this point because he considered that Sir George's work for the war correspondent was one of the most important of his many achievements for the press during the war.

Lord Burnham, in acknowledging the presentation, said that in regard to the press, things had changed greatly in the last few years. It was almost incredible how little the press was recognized by the authorities of the State when war broke out. But now they had no reason to complain of the indifference of Government offices. Indeed, the Government was now almost pestering the press with their attentions.

Formerly the idea was to keep the press on the outside doorstep of Government offices and to use it, if it were necessary, in the old ways, which were good enough 50 years before. At first the men who went abroad for the press were treated as if they were criminals let loose. War correspondents were locked up in stalls by a corporal's guard. That kind of thing could not occur again, and there was no doubt that his colleagues who, week in and week out, attended the press conferences had established them in a position from which in the future no matter what happens they could never be shifted.

Sir George Riddell, telling of the efforts made in the early days of the war to get facilities for the press, said that all acted in co-operation and adopted the method of open diplomacy. So loyal was the British press to the Government that the Expeditionary Force was sent out and the British Navy mobilized without a word appearing in the newspapers.

When Lord Birkenhead, the present Lord Chancellor, but then Sir F. E. Smith, first organized the Press Bureau, he added Sir George Riddell, who, he believed, was the best person to be censor.

"There is only one person who could do it with satisfaction," answered Sir George.

When Sir George Became Censor

"Who is that?" inquired Sir Frederick, and Sir George answered:

"The Almighty, and you may take it that the Almighty would not escape criticism."

That seemed to dampen Sir Frederick's ardor.

After an interview which Sir George had with Lord Kitchener it was decided in February, 1915, that a certain number of correspondents should be allowed to go to the front for a night's trip. At about that time he received a letter from Lord Northcliffe, which was almost prophetic. In that letter his lordship wrote:

"If the Government wishes to avoid strikes and enlist in this country the services of the whole people, they should strain every nerve to get distinguished writers to make clear what the war is—a matter of life and death to the nation."

Lord Kitchener allowed the correspondents to go for a fortnight—but they never came back. We know the self-sacrificing manner in which they worked, and that the spirit of the country was in no small measure due to the magnificent descriptions of the heroic deeds of the British Army written by those correspondents.

"I have had," continued Sir George, "an exciting time in Paris. We found the conference a very elusive and mystic body, and, as you will remember, it was necessary in the early part of January in this year to make representations with regard to publicity. The general idea was that you could conduct the conference without any publicity except the mere official communique.

Exciting Days in Paris

"We made certain representations, and a meeting of the press of the world was held. It was difficult to meet fifty or sixty newspaper correspondents every day and have nothing to give them but stones. But as the result of what was done, I find I have made among journalists a great many friendships which will last during the whole of my life."

Sir George paid a tribute to the excellent services which had been rendered by the working journalists at Paris. In a reference to M. Clemenceau—that wonderful man who was a true representative of the spirit of France—Sir George remarked that it was a privilege to be in the same room with such a personality. He had conversations with him about the arrangements of the press.

"Where shall I put the photographers?" he asked, and M. Clemeneeau answered:

"You can put them in the dungeons, where they will be able to work in peace."

"The press parted on very good terms with the celebrated three—Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Wilson," said Sir George. "They said, 'God bless you,' and without suggesting that the press had saved the Peace Conference, they expressed the hope that they would see us at the next Peace Conference."

Honored by the French

Sir George Riddell, who has also been honored by the French Government in creating him an Officer of the Legion of Honor, stands today one of the most prominent figures in the world of newspapers, and rightly so, for only those who have had dealings with British official departments can conceive the magnitude of his fight against red tape, and the colossal task involved in convincing the military and other powers that the method of trusting the people was by permitting full publicity and criticism in the press.

It was through the initial efforts of Lord Burnham and Sir George Riddell and their persistent claims for the freedom of the process that it was possible to use the editorial pens of the Allied press for Victory.

Advertisement Causes Suit

PORTLAND, Ore., July 27.—Frye & Co., a big firm of Western packers, has been sued for $102,500 damages as the result of an advertisement printed in local newspapers. Members of the Meat Cutters' Union brought the suit, contending that the advertisement made them appear un-American and Bolshevists.

The hotel accommodations of the South must be increased 50 per cent within the next 12 months to meet the natural increase in business, according to authorities.

Germans Call Vast Gather... In Reichstag to Denounce Treaty

Will Complete Counter Proposa... — Discussion of Past Ends Thursday

BERLIN — (Friday) — Counter-proposals to the peace treaty probably will be completed Sunday, it was learned from an authoritative source Friday.

Under the regulations governing the negotiations the Germans have until May 22 to discuss the terms.

Vast meetings have been called for Sunday in the reichstag and elsewhere to protest against signing the treaty. Certain names already famous in the reform will not be accepted unless they are modified.

"We will not sign for the purpose of signing," the note accompanying the counter proposals will say, "but only if it is impossible to carry out proposals of the terms and we do not wish the world to continue thinking that Germany regards treaties... as mere scraps of paper."

ALLEN BELIEVED TO HOLD RECORD IN DIVORCE MILL

Fifteen Suits for Separation Filed Here Within Past Sixteen Days

Twenty Marriage Licenses Are Issued During the Same Period

Here girls as the latest on the divorce question.

There is still a margin of safety in the marriage mart.

However, the odds are not very large as the rate of matrimonial bereavement. Latest reports indicate that the factor of happiness in married life is stated very heavily by women throughout on divorce proceedings.

Nevertheless if you desire to change there is an element of safety which is proven by slight odds of two to three in favor of remaining.

For the first sixteen days of May a total of twenty marriage licenses have been issued to persons over against fifteen divorce cases filed, according to records.

Court officials are at a loss to explain the slackness of divorce cases filed and state that it is their opinion that Allen county's record for divorces is higher than probably any other county in Ohio.

Gentlemen:-

I am enclosing in this letter the new contracts which Mr. Harrison recently presented me and you will note that I have signed them.

I have to pay I will say that for afternoon and Sunday accepted papers I believe the United Press is the best news service in the world.

United Press copy has truth, snap and human interest and these are the three cardinal principles which we find our readers, to use a slang phrase, "eat up".

I know that you will be interested when I state that the Daily News has had the greatest year in its history in existence of last year.

We have had to install two additional linotypes, including a new Model 30, and have double the capacity of steel furniture, and have added an entire separate race for our advertising mechanical department.

With best wishes to the United Press and knowledge that the Daily News will grow with it, I beg to be,

Very truly yours,

"Jinx Flying Boat" of the American Squadron Arrives Safely At Horta, After Averaging 80 Miles An Hour

Seaplane Sets New World's Record In Overseas Flying—Two Other Ships Following Closely Behind

WASHINGTON—An American seaplane, the N.C.-4, "jinx boat" of Commander Towers' trans-ocean flying fleet, established a world's record in overseas flying Saturday.

When the word reached the navy department here that this new famous "Nancy" had reached Horta in the Azores group, she had officially covered 2,200 miles of the flight from Rockaway to England. The log covered since Friday night when she "hoisted anchor" at Trepassey is 1,200 miles and she made a record of 80 miles an hour.

All Washington was thrilled at the N.C.-4's feat. It surpassed the most radiant expectations of navy officials.

She is now only 150 miles from Ponta Delgada and has traversed the longest leg in the navy attempt to blaze an air trail to Europe.

WANT F. A. SEIBERLING TO HEAD A. A. C. W.

St. Paul Advertising Club Nominates President of Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. to Succeed W. C. Darcy at 1919 Convention

F. A. Seiberling, president of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio, has been nominated by the St. Paul Advertising Club to succeed William C. D'Arcy, president of the D'Arcy Advertising Agency of St. Louis, as president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

F. A. SEIBERLING.

Mr. D'Arcy's second term of two years expires this year, and he has announced that he does not seek re-election. The choice of his successor will be made at the annual convention of the A. A. C. W. at New Orleans, September 21-25.

In furtherance of its nomination of Mr. Seiberling, who recently became one of the five trustees of the A. A. C. W., to carry out an enlarged "Truth In Advertising" campaign, the St. Paul club has addressed a circular letter to all the advertising clubs in the organization, which reads:

"Who shall be the next president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World?

"President D'Arcy has definitely intimated that he will not under any circumstances accept another term.

"The St. Paul Club believes that we must have a big business man, whose position in the business world will immediately command respect.

"He should be a large user of advertising in many mediums.

"He should be a man who has been identified closely with the association—who has backed its efforts, who has believed in the things for which it stands.

"Such a man is Frank A. Seiberling, president of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company. He and his company have long given active cooperation in the work of the association.

"With no thought except for the welfare of the association, we have adopted the attached resolution.

"We come to you with the suggestion that your club adopt a strong resolution, acting as a club or through your executives, seconding our action, and that you let us have a copy of this resolution at the earliest possible moment.

"We have no idea whether Mr. Seiberling will accept. But we believe he is the man for the place, and we hope that when he hears the will of the clubs, he will consent thus to lead us on to greater things."

The Houston (Tex.) Advertising Club announces its approval of Mr. Seiberling as a candidate.

COURT THROWS OUT SUIT

Upholds Demurrer of Kansas City Star in Hyde Libel Case

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 26.—The $2,500,000 suit for libel, filed by Dr. B. Clark Hyde against the Kansas City Star, was thrown out of the circuit court by Judge Willard P. Hall, who sustained a demurrer by the Star which set forth that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute cause of action against the defendant; that the petition and alleged cause of action passed with the death of William R. Nelson, owner of the Star, at the time of the alleged libel; that no suit was brought against the administrators of the estate of Mr. Nelson, and that the petition was barred by the statute of limitations, which provided that all cases of libel must be brought within two years of the alleged libel.

The Star printed testimony (which the court would not allow to be considered by the jury) in a murder trial in which Dr. Hyde was the defendant.

CHARLES H. FULLER DIES

"His reputation for square dealings and personal honesty and integrity were put to the test some twenty years ago when, having backed his judgment and faith in his patrons by his cash and his credit he found himself in financial deep water.

"Instead of having recourse to the quite usual resort to free himself of the burden he met his situation squarely, asked for a little time with the promise to pay dollar for dollar, and with hardly a misgiving on the part of the publishers of the newspapers and magazines of America as a whole he was given exactly what he asked, and true to his word as always, he paid every dollar and re-established his agency stronger than ever.

"One of the strongest financial institutions in the country allowed him to refer to them by permission, and allowed him to print this on his letterhead. To this day there are publishers throughout the United States who went through this crisis with him and most of them are known personally to me, and I have never heard a regret expressed that they gave "Uncle Charley" Fuller all that he asked.

Was a Trusted Adviser

"To hundreds of the leading advertising men throughout the United States Mr. Fuller was a personal friend, to many he was a trusted business adviser. Known to me personally are at least two of the leading men in the automobile business today who had their early schooling with Mr. Fuller. Better than that there are known to me personally many men who while not so prominent in the business world were down and out until Mr. Fuller with his great kindness of heart gave them courage and cheer and financial assistance until they were able to stand alone, and who today will remember him with the feeling of a loving son for a father.

"My personal acquaintance with Mr. Fuller extended over a period of more than thirty-five years. I know special representatives who when they were young men found Mr. Fuller ever ready to go to their publishers and intercede for their personal advantage, and who feel today they owe much of their present comfort and prosperity to his friendship. He was always a true friend, always a fair competitor, always a conscientious business man."

Helped a Stranger

William C. Freeman, of Paul Block, Inc., a long time friend of Mr. Fuller, said of him:

"I remember very well the first trip I ever made to Chicago as an advertising salesman. I was not an experienced advertising salesman, and did not know personally one man in any advertising agency in Chicago. I knew many by reputation.

"I will never forget the courtesy with which I was received by both Charles H Fuller and A. L. Thomas—both of them now gone to their reward.

"When I was informed at the Frank C. Grandin dinner Tuesday night, for the first time, that Charles H. Fuller had died last week, it meant to me the passing of another good friend—and naturally I felt badly about it.

"'Charlie' Fuller had his troubles like the rest of us, and I knew him intimately when he was passing through the most serious of them, yet he stood up and faced them with the kind of splendid courage that one finds only in strong characters.

"I never believed that 'Charlie' Fuller would intentionally do any man harm, and I remember sticking to him and standing up for him because I never forgot how kind he had been to me when kindness and help meant so much to me.

"I know many men in the advertising business today who shared with me, at the beginning of their careers, the splendid co-operation and assistance which 'Charlie' Fuller gave us. My, what orders I brought back to New York for my papers from his agency, just because his associates were instructed by him to take care of me.

"He lived a long life, and I am glad to know that his closing years were spent in happiness and comfort. If one's closing years furnish the rewards that come from having done one's very best, it makes life worth while.

Another Good Friend Lost

"'Charlie' Fuller was one of the pioneers in advertising agency work, the kind that assumed great financial risk in starting many to advertise. He developed accounts that put millions into the pockets of publishers all over the country. He operated in days when advertising had not assumed the character that it now possesses, and he swam along with the tide like many of the rest of us did.

"There will be hundreds who will say as I do—when they hear of his death 'Well, I have lost another good friend.'"

J. Howard Start, present head of the Fuller Agency, who entered it the deceased's employ, knew Mr. Fuller intimately for a quarter of a century, characterizes his passing as a genuine loss to the advertising fraternity.

Mr. Fuller's old competitor, D. M. Lord, was with him almost to the last and at the funeral.

George Schofield, of the E. H. Clarke Advertising Agency, said of Mr. Fuller: "We have lost him for whom all of us held highest respect and admiration."

William Rankin, of the Rankin Company, said: "He was the first agency man I ever knew.

"I walked into his office one day in 1906 when I was connected with the Star League of newspapers. He always continued warmly, friendly, and unselfishly helping to me and other special representatives. His was a fine character. I know of no one more generally highly respected by all with whom he came in contact."

"Review Week" Put Over by Ads

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 29.—St. Paul was one of the cities to make the "Pictorial Review week" experiment. The result was successful beyond all expectation. Such co-operation between national advertisers and merchants is a new idea in the Northwest. Newspaper advertising was the keystone used.

—cure substitution evil at its source

Mr. Advertiser, do you relish asking for an advertised product and having the retailer say, "I haven't got that, but here's something just as good?"

What happens?—Then you, as an advertiser, damn the retailer as a substituter—the rascal!

Who makes the substituter?

The manufacturer who lets his advertising run wild—he makes the substituter!

If you were a retailer and a customer called for an article you did not carry and if you could recommend conscientiously a similar article,—be honest with yourself—what would you reply?

The retailer cooperates best with the advertiser who cooperates best with him.

Support with local publicity the man who sells your goods to the consumer.

Ohio Newspaper Uses Simple and Telling Carry-Over Story Key

The carry-over on news stories from the first page has been one of the worries of news editors and make-up men for many years.

To repeat the original head on the carry-over, which is the practice in certain sections of the country, has meant a big loss of paper space. To carry over only the first deck of a head often proves confusing to the reader and a rewritten head for the carry-over makes the continuation of a story almost impossible to find. From time to time other systems have been put into practice without any great success.

Sandusky (O.) Star-Journal is using a system of handling carry-over that seems in every way to be a success. It is space saver and at the same time stands out from the page and makes the carry-over matter easy to find.

And the following is a reproduction of a box style and key that is being used in place of a head of any kind over the carry-over:

Iowans and Nebraskans to Hold Joint Outing

Midsummer Excursion Will Be Held in Western Nebraska August 4 to 9, Starting in Omaha

OMAHA, Neb., July 26.—Newspaper men of Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska will be the guests of this city when they gather here Monday, August 4, preparatory to their mid-summer excursion into Western Nebraska. The visitors will be taken to the Grain Exchange in the afternoon, followed by a luncheon. Following a banquet at the Hotel Rome in the evening they will be the guests of the Ak-Sar-Ben, while the ladies will be taken to a theatre.

The party will leave late at night for the west. Others will join them at Lincoln, and stops will be made along the line to pick up editors. The party will spend three days at Ghering, holding the annual summer meeting of the Nebraska State Press Association. The party will make a trip into the North Platte Valley, and will return about August 9.

Will Israel, of the Havelock Post, is president of the association; Emerson Purcell, Broken Bow Chieftain, vice-president; W. C. Edgecomb, Geneva Signal, treasurer, and W. Q. Buck, Harvard Monitor, secretary.

"America's Largest and Best Newspaper Industrial Advertising Agency"

This permanent Weekly Business Man's Page secured among non-regular advertisers has been running two years—it is one of a chain of pages we handle—it carries over one hundred thousand lines of advertising per year—more than thirty-five thousand dollars annually in new business, which the paper would not otherwise obtain. The Page is beneficial in many ways—it has made new advertisers and helped circulation—it has aided the paper in being recognized as the business man's newspaper in its community.

Contracts with the advertiser commence and end together and are made for twenty weeks at a time, being renewed each twenty weeks.

The question of a cancellation of an accepted contract rests entirely with the newspaper. All advertising is solicited on an indirect result, general publicity basis.

Representative sent anywhere upon request.

ers during June of this year. Approximately, 64 per cent of the total stocks was held by seventy publishers. Stocks on hand or in transit on June 21 amounted to an average of forty days' supply at the rate of consumption during the month. Sixty-five publishing concerns held about 52 per cent of the stock at the end of June.

The figures, month by month, for a period of one year, are as follows:

Months	Firms	Stock on hand and in transit at end of month	Stock on hand at end of month	Days' supply

Exports from U. S.

Besides the news print being sent abroad by Canada, a great deal that could be used here is being exported from the United States. The figures for May, 1919, as compared with May, 1918, show a considerable increase. They are as follows:

	May, 1919. Net tons.	May, 1918. Net tons.
Total Exports of Newsprint..	17,597	9,402
To Brazil	2,000	696
To Argentina	3,132	906
To Cuba	1,000	1,000
To Australia	146	820
To other countries	11,319	5,980

This shows our exports of news print in May, 1919, were 11,106 tons greater than in May, 1918.

The tonnage to "other countries", includes 6,990 tons to France, 890 tons to China, 346 tons to Philippine Islands, 291 tons to Uruguay, 230 tons to Hong Kong, and 163 tons to Greece.

Northern New York paper and pulp manufacturers are quoted as saying that they do not intend to allow Canadian mills to monopolize the foreign trade and German and Scandinavian mills controlled before the war, or to permit the Scandinavian mills to get it back if they can prevent it. Sulphite manufacturers in northern New York are said to be endeavoring to dispose of their surplus product in European and South American countries and to develop a regular market there.

The imports by the United States of news print for May, 1919, which were all from Canada, were 5,736 tons less than for May, 1918. The total number of tons imported in May of this year was 52,803.

Mill Men Predict Rise

Many publishers of newspapers in the medium sized and small towns of the United States have very small stocks on hand, and already frequently are obliged to hunt for a source of supply in a hurry in order to keep on printing their papers. Often they appeal to jobbers for emergency paper and pay any price asked for it.

Paper manufacturers frankly say newspapers must begin to economize in the use of news print by limiting the size of their issues, or "there won't be enough paper to go 'round."

The mill men also seem to be unanimous in prophesying that the price of news print is going up, principally because of increased manufacturing cost.

The International Paper Company, for instance, declares that its payroll, since the award of the War Labor Board, is running at the rate of at least $8,148,196 a year, against $3,894,172 in 1915; that stocks are at record figures; paper is $19 against $8.68 in 1915, and the annual production per employe has fallen from 80.05 tons in 1915 to 65.79 today.

Still "I. P." common stock is today selling above 70, jumping up from 19 or 20 in three years. Likewise Canadian paper mill stocks are at record figures.

Other factors which have combined to add enormously to the cost of manufacturing, according to paper makers, are the increased cost of labor, wood, transportation, and mills supplies.

Mill Prices to Publishers

The following facts are from the Federal Trade Commission's report of July 23, 1919:

The weighted average price of contracts between domestic mills and publishers during June, 1919, f. o. b. mill in carload lots for standard news in rolls was $2.50 per hundred pounds. This weighted average is based upon the total tonnage of 1,500,000 tons, which is more than one million tons of paper manufactured in the United States. These contracts have in most cases extend until December 31, 1919, including a few which run continuously from year to year or for very low prices. The majority of the contracts which extend into 1920 call for tonnage prices between $2.50 and the price of $3.7525 per 100 pounds as fixed by the War Trade Commission.

The weighted average contract price based on tonnage of more than 500,000 tons of all grades of newsprint paper, f. o. b. mill in June, 1918, was $2.40 per hundred pounds.

The weighted average price of contracts between domestic mills and publishers during June, 1919, f. o. b. mill in carload lots for standard news in rolls was $3.26 per 100 pounds. This weighted average is based upon the total tonnage of contracts involving about 150,000 tons of Canadian paper. The greater part of these contracts terminate more than 1,500 tons was $3.13 per 100 pounds.

"Must Prevent Waste"

"We want to maintain prices on a fair and reasonable basis," said a manufacturer.

"There is no reason for publishers to be unduly alarmed as to the prospect of any shortage or unwarranted high prices, provided they take ordinary provision for future contracts. If the newspaper proprietors agree on the wisdom of keeping down sizes it would be a good thing for them to raise their advertising rates as well."

Urges Higher Rates

The need of continuing the conservation of paper by newspaper publishers was emphasized by Charles I. Stewart, chairman of the Committee on Paper Conservation of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, in an address at its convention at Asheville, N. C. He predicted a period of high prices for paper stocks, and said that because of rising costs, "newspaper proprietors must not be timid about the prices they ask subscribers and advertisers."

"There is danger in being dazzled by the prospect of a large volume of business, and if we make losing rates, the larger the volume the greater the loss," he said. "We should remember

Sold Ad Space 3,000 Feet Up in the Air

William T. O'Heaney, of the advertising staff of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star, claims the distinction of being the first advertising solicitor to sign up a space customer while in the air in an aeroplane. O'Heaney was 3,000 feet up when he sold the space on the gunnel of a commercial plane in which he was a passenger. He wrote the copy and then dropped it onto the roof of the Union-Star building. Printers had the ad in the next edition.

that, after all, the real test of our profits is not the measure of dollars and cents, but the measure of commodities.

Points Out Extravagance

"It is opportune, I believe, to call your attention to the importance of the continuation of conservation methods. While there were phases of the War Board regulations that worked hardship in some cases, they were in the main of very great value to the publishers, and their rigid enforcement saved millions of tons and saved the publishing interests a large amount of money.

"There has been, I believe, a disposition on the part of the publishers to withdraw the relief from this restraint and in some cases the publishing has swung back to paperless as bad or worse than that prevailing before the war or when news print was cheap. There has been a natural, inevitable decline in circulation since the signing of the armistice, and it appears that some publishers have been tempted to practices that no longer obtain, methods that are, to say the least, questionable.

"I note certain publishers have been forced by competition to resort to circulation methods they would prefer to avoid. In my opinion, this association can render no greater service to the publishing interests of the south than to impress upon all publishers the importance of maintaining a legitimate price for the products of the newspaper plant, that is, both for circulation and for advertising.

"The average member of this association publishing a seven-day paper will consume about 900 pounds news print per subscriber. Not many of us are buying paper out into our prime years for less than 4 cents a pound when we sold straight, carriage and waste to the mill end. We are now paying 1½ cents per pound for postage and this means that the average seven-day paper costs in white paper and postage $9.50 per subscriber, and yet there are a considerable number of newspapers circulating south of the Ohio river which we ask prices to the subscriber considerably under this amount.

"There is at present a large volume of advertising, with a reasonable prospect that this will continue. But the very volume of the business tends to increase expenses. It makes the problem of a sufficiency of white paper more acute, and the publishers and in many cases it is forcing additional investment in machinery at a very high cost. I believe that there is a member of this association who has advanced his advertising rates in proportion to his increase in circulation plus the proportionate increase in all other commodities.

Expenses Are Increasing

"A careful analysis of business sheets as compared with those of three or four years ago will probably bring some disillusion by disclosing the fact that expenses have grown not as large as they seem. A newspaper that made a profit of $25,000 in 1915 will be lucky to better this year than it did then if it makes a profit of $50,000. Even this increased profit in 1918 would probably buy more in almost any locality than it would today, in printing machinery, and in commodities of any sort, than $25,000 would buy now.

"I believe we may look forward to a slightly lower price for paper in 1920 and there is no reason to expect a great decline. There is nothing in sight to indicate for many years a return to the prices of 1915, and what is true of paper in terms of wages and transportation of newspaper cost, just as it is true of the general cost of living. There is no assurance that we may look forward to a period of high prices, and the newspaper must adjust itself to this condition."

PUBLISHERS' VIEWS OF NEWS PRINT SITUATION

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, said:

"The reported print paper shortage which is due to be upon us by October, if it comes, will be the result of lack of ordinary common sense on the part of the publishers and cleverness of the paper makers.

"Our newspapers have it in their power to change the situation over night if they had the nerve to do it—which they will not. All we would have to do would to be cut down the sizes of our papers twenty-five or fifty per cent for a week or so. So long as our newspapers are seeking constantly increasing tonnage the demand keeps ahead of the supply and makes the open market price and print paper famine.

"If any of us were in the print paper making business we would probably do exactly the same as those who are in it now. I have no quarrel with them, but I am charged that my fellows in the newspaper business are permitting a new and serious situation to develop right out under our eyes in 1919. A horned child dreads the fire, but our newspapers seem to want more of it."

"Profligate Use of Paper"

"The lifting of the war conservation order last December, plus a large increase in the volume of advertising was all that was necessary to make many newspapers go wildly on in their profligate use of paper heedless of the notice that danger lurked in the distance if we did not give the manufacturers time and opportunity to get back on a quantity producing basis. Most of us thought this was well, well, business.

"The main squeeze this time is going to come to those big newspapers that are using much more paper than contracted for and to the many little fellows deprived of their supply through the superior buying ability of the big wasters in the business. This is exactly what happened in 1916, and it would look as if history was to repeat itself.

Banking Firm Prophesy

"This extract from the market letter dated July 1, of Hayden Stone & Co., a conservative Boston banking firm, is significant:

International Paper.—In all probability a free print paper monopolist, the largest product of International Paper Company will prevail by October next. Several years ago the price of newsprint has been fixed by the Federal Trade Commission. The present price of $3 per hundred price regulation has really satisfied no one, either the manufacturer or the newspaper producers, it has had one very important result. The various investigations and studies of cost of production which the Federal Trade Commission has made have tended to establish the decision of the mills for higher prices for their product. Ever since the cost of newsprint has been a constant bone of contention between the manufacturer and the buyer and in the chief producer, International Paper has been subject to a great variety of attack and abuse.

"But the Federal Trade Commission which has certainly had no bias in favor of the manufac-

The Genius of Military Germany, Whose Revelations Will Stir the World

Ludendorff was the General Grant of the Central Powers. Unknown, without influential friends, a man of the common people, it was he who rose to give orders to princes and prime ministers and ignore the wishes and demands of emperors and kings.

LUDENDORFF SAYS:

"It was the German Government's fault Germany was defeated."

"The U-boat warfare was justified."

"Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg did not back up the German army chiefs."

"The German Government thought more of making peace than of making war."

"Germany's situation was serious from the start; it was critical long before she collapsed in 1918."

"Austria Hungary was a burden and not a help to Germany."

"Germany had no inkling of the Russian revolution."

"Bernhardi's book should never have been written."

"Lloyd George, Clemenceau, Woodrow Wilson were great statesmen—greater than any who came to the fore in the Central Empires."

AN HISTORICAL RECORD

At last the German side of the war emerges from the mystery in which it has been shrouded. At last the full story of the German campaigns, of Germany's titanic effort to dominate, the inside story of her inception of ruthless U-boat warfare, of the ups and downs of her mad struggle against an aroused world in arms, told by her greatest military genius, is to be available to American newspaper readers.

From the outset of the war to Germany's final collapse, the name of Ludendorff bulked ever larger. He became a colossal figure on the German side. He seemed to embody Germany's aggressiveness, her ruthless militarism, her lust for conquest. He was the incarnation of Prussia. Nobody else, through all the length and breadth of the territories of the central powers, became so pre-eminently qualified to tell the story of the war from the Teutonic side.

And here he tells it. He minces no words. He spares nobody. He strikes straight from the shoulder at men in the highest official posts. Uncompromisingly and unsparingly he puts the blame where he thinks it belongs.

The story is a revelation in German psychology. It is the history of Germany's side in the war for which the whole world has been waiting ever since 1914.

OHIO FIRST

OHIO, the fourth state in the Union in point of population, maintains a splendid balance between urban and suburban.

2,842,500 people live in towns and cities 5,000 and up—(82 cities), this being approximately 55 per cent of the State's population—5,150,356.

While Ohio is known as a great and growing manufacturing state, Ohio, agriculturally speaking, is one of the really great units of this country.

The average number of native born white people in the United States is 74.4%. That of Ohio is 85.1% which is very high.

The average negro population of the United States is 10.7%. That of Ohio is 2.3% which is very low.

The average foreign born population of the United States is 14.9%. That of Ohio 12.6% which is low.

Ohio boasts, and rightfully, of having furnished a large number of great men in the history of the country—claiming that for staunch up-standing Americanism Ohio ranks well toward the top—and admitting that this is a fair indication of the superiority of the Ohio products—contending that with the entire country to draw from, Ohio would not be called on so frequently for leaders if Ohio did not have leaders to produce at any time and for any occasion.

Ohio people are always intensely interested in Ohio, Ohio products and Ohio business.—and local retal merchants reach local people by Ohio daily newspapers.

Manufacturers may obtain profitable results by cooperating with Ohio merchants in Ohio daily newspapers and reaching Ohio people.

While Ohio's fame, just now, is growing because of the tremendous manufacturing activities, it is well to bear in mind the fact that Ohio, agriculturally speaking, is one of the really great states of the Union.

These astonishing figures, although they are very conservative, indicate how tremendous is the value of the annual crops.

CROWELL TAKES OVER COLLIER'S WEEKLY

Famous Magazine and Associated Publishing Business Pass to New Control—Name, Staff and Policy Will Be Retained

Collier's Weekly, together with the book and publishing business founded in 1887 by Peter Fenelon Collier, has passed from control of the Collier family and will henceforth be directed by the Crowell Publishing Company, one of the largest publishers of periodicals in this country.

Announcement of the change in management was made by George D. Buckley, president of the Crowell company, who declared that a contract was signed July 25 to make possible the affiliation of Collier's Weekly with such well known national magazines as the Woman's Home Companion, the Farm and Fireside Magazine and the American Magazine, now published by the Crowell concern.

The Crowell company does not intend to change either the name of Collier's Weekly or its policy, and will continue the employment of the same staff which has been publishing the periodical.

In making known the deal Mr. Buckley refrained from divulging what price had been paid to Mrs. Robert J. Collier, who name into possession of the properties after the death of her husband in last November. The publication offices will remain at 416 West Thirteenth street. The capitalization of the holding company of P. F. Collier & Son is $2,500,000.

Mr. Buckley's qualifying statement that a contract had been signed, instead of declaring that the publishing house had been bought outright, was accepted as meaning that Mrs. Collier still retains some interest in the properties in deference to the expressed wish of her husband that the house founded by his father be perpetuated.

In his will, which has been admitted to probate, Robert J. Collier bequeathed the properties to three friends, Francis P. Garvan, Payne Whitney and Peter Finley Dunne, but although the bequest was easily worth millions, they renounced the gift and turned it over to Mrs. Collier.

Negotiations with the Crowell Company have been going on for some time. Thomas L. Briggs was elected president of Collier's on January 1 last.

For more than four years prior to the death of the publisher his friends acted as a committee in managing the periodical and book publishing concern. They succeeded in re-establishing it upon its old firm footing as one of the best known and profitable businesses of its kind in this country.

New Morning Paper for Idaho

POCATELLO, Idaho, July 30.—Arrangements have been completed to begin publication of the News, a new morning paper, here September 1. The News Printing Company, a corporation composed of local men, is to be the publisher, and Harold M. Sims, a circulation and advertising promotion man, is the general manager. Contracts have been made for the full leased wire service of Universal Service.

"City Life" In Winnipeg

WINNIPEG, July 29.—A new weekly paper, City Life, has made its appearance here. It specializes in city news and views and is owned and edited by W. Garfield Rees, former city editor of the Winnipeg Tribune.

Advertise where the Automobiles grow!

These 10 Southern states—together—have 5 times as many automobiles as they had during the first year of the war. Several have 10 times as many.

These 10 did it:

The United States—in total—tripled its registrations in the past five years, BUT the ten Southern States up in the circle surpass all records; some with a gain of over 1000 per cent.

And the daily newspapers listed on this page helped bring it about!

Why not spend your advertising appropriation here where the automobiles GROW!!

ture has from time to time permitted increases in the selling price of newsprint. In all it has assented to increases which by successive steps have advanced the price from 3.10 cents per pound to 3.75¼ cents, which is the present level.

As a matter of fact, the so-called "open market" for newsprint is even now above 3.75¼ cents per pound. It is believed that in the event of a free market gestalia, the price of newsprint will advance considerably, based on the purely natural operation of the law of supply and demand.

Some trade authorities would not be surprised to see 4 cents level. Whatever the new price level proves to be it will affect net earnings of International Paper for the last quarter of 1919 and will almost assuredly be the basis for the renewal of 1920 contracts, most of which expire or for revision in December or January.

While a price of 4 cents for newsprint sounds altruitinous, compared with the pre-war levels of 2¾ and 2¾ cents, it is worth while that the newspapers of practically every city in the country are now charging two cents and in many cases more. Higher cost paper and labor has put the 1 cent paper almost out of existence.

But perhaps one of the most interesting situations is the fact that the papers of the larger cities are today extremely prosperous. For several months their advertising has been increasing at record figures. One explanation of this is the income and excess profits tax. Many large corporations—manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers—figure that advertising will be allowed 50 or 60% of what they actually pay the papers. In other words, if they did not spend this money in advertising they would be obliged to pay 60 or 70% of it to the Government as taxes. The law is, therefore, an ally of newspaper advertising and inefficiency of long standing is met by making the burden of high cost newsprint less appalling to bear.

Very little has been made of the fact that International Paper's $20,000,000 bond issue has been consistently strong for six months. It has at times actually gone against the 6% basis, national Paper earned 19.4% on its common, after $1,000,000 set for taxes, in 1918. It earned 24% after a tax reserve of $2,500,000, in 1917 the balance was 21.8%. In the years therefore, 74.1% has been earned on the common, none of which has been divided with shareholders.

Prospects are that 1919 will exceed even the 1918 record of 19.4%, but will fall below the high water mark of 1917, when scarcity and inbecilesmen fluxe of paper gave the company an abnormally profitable year. In fact, it will never likely attain the four years to December 31 next. International will have earned very close to $100 per share on its junior shares.

In four years the company has rajjovenated itself financially. It has reduced its bonded debt from $13,252,000 to $7,190,000, a saving of $6,062,000. It has swelled working capital from $9,353,640 to $18,249,700, a gain of $7,314,100, or 81%. It has also increased its net worth, as per preferred dividends, with the bounce of but $8,062,000, or 24% on preferred stock.

In 1918 the company borrowed $9,000,000 from the banks, all of the debt was paid off from which was acquired no insurance against war conditions in the Netherlands. It is safe to say 1920 before this big stock of wood is all converted into paper. It would appear as if the floating debt situation was, perhaps, the most immediate feature of interesting common dividend action.

Can Go to Three Cents

"Our newspapers can go to three cents the copy and reduce the use of paper by cutting out duplication; the same as was done when we went to two cents. We can increase our advertising rates and reduce volume, but this is a longer process. We can reduce the quantity of reading matter in our papers and thus get enormous tonnage. It is up to us to give consumption a hard eut or we will continue to be exploited by those smart enough to do so.

"In the case of the New York Globe we are going to hold our requirements inside our contract tonnage by the same methods we employed in 1916, 1917 and 1918. We will reduce reading matter to the war basis. We will limit the amount of advertising we will accept. We will increase our advertising rates as is necessary, and we will go to three cents a copy if that step is forced on us.

Must Restrict Size

Ervin Wardman, publisher of the New York Sun, said:

"The outlook for fall, so far as news print supply and news print prices are concerned, looks rather gloomy.

"I do not believe in any artificial regulation of consumption as a means of coping with the situation, but something will have to be done, and I believe that the solution lies in restricting the size of papers and increasing advertising rates.

"I believe that advertisers will be willing to co-operate with publishers by using less space and thereby enabling more advertisers to make use of what space is available."

Reserve Is Far Short

Don Seitz, business manager of the New York World, said that was the practice of the World to accumulate a surplus stock of 200 tons of news print, weekly for a period of about twelve weeks during the summer, for use in the fall, but that this summer it had been able to obtain a weekly surplus of only about seventy tons.

"I don't know what is going to happen in the fall," he said. "Possibly, there will not be as much advertising then as a good many newspaper editors seem to think. Conditions are abnormal right now. For instance, this morning (July 22) we carried 150,000 lines of advertising, and half of that sum was paid for 'Help Wanted' ads.

"Also, there is a lot of advertising being done now to force the buying of stocks before they reach the peaks of the war, and when a normal demand for merchandise sets in there may not be the need for so much advertising.

"However, no one can tell just how supply and demand will operate, as regards news print, a month or two from now."

Public May React

George Vernor Rogers, business manager of the New York Tribune, said he knew of nothing to indicate that there would be any change in the news print situation though there might be a reaction on the part of the reading public against large newspapers and that the demand might be reduced in this way.

"I doubt whether increasing advertising rates would tend to limit volume of advertising. The increases would have to be very large before this will be said.

H. L. Bridgman, publisher of the Brooklyn Standard Union, said:

"The Standard Union knows of no shortage or indication of one of news print in its territory, nor of effective protection other than prudence and economy against the recurrence of 1916 conditions. It has no gift of prophecy nor is it able to see indication of lower prices after the expiration in December of current contracts. So far in July the Standard Union has published about three and one-half pages a day more than for the corresponding days last year.

"Five to Six Cents at Mill"

W. T. Anderson, president and general manager of the Macon Daily Telegraph, said:

"At the S. N. P. A. convention at Asheville, we had a talk with our paper manufacturers, the Great Northern, and we were impressed with the seriousness of the situation which confronted us.

"Upon our return home we put the screws on the number of pages, reducing them from twenty to a maximum of sixteen, except in cases of fire and flood. We had been allowing our news department sixty to seventy columns per day, and the advertising department was without restriction. We have reduced the news department to forty-nine columns, and the advertising department to sixty-three columns.

NEW MANAGERS IN OMAHA

Conklin, Brandon and Boyd Head Daily News Departments

OMAHA, Neb., July 29.—S. S. Conklin, formerly with the display ad department of the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, and later doing similar work for the Omaha Daily News, has been made business manager of the latter paper. H. J. Brandon, for several years past connected with the advertising department of the St. Paul Daily News, has been appointed director of advertising of the Omaha Daily News. He will assume his new position immediately.

H. J. BRANDON

C. H. Boyd, for twelve years circulation manager of the Kansas City Star, and more recently circulation manager of the El Dorado Times, has been chosen to a like position with the Daily News.

"We are continuing 'no returns' and the payment in advance on subscriptions. Our average number of pages for the first six months of 1918 were 15.5; our average number for the first six months of 1919 are 16.5.

"We are impressed with the importance of keeping our requirements within our supply. Our contract has been exceeded and we are unable to buy extra paper at less than 5 to 6 cents at the mill.

"We believe that the condition in our own case is about average over the United States. Several newspapers have carried more advertising and have developed a tendency of loosening up on the amount of news. The increase in white paper consumption since 1916 averages twenty-five per cent throughout the United States."

Paul Patterson, business manager of the Baltimore Sun, said: "So far as I know, none of the Baltimore papers is actually short of news print at the present time, but I do not think any of them will be long unless they will recall all the new contracted for to meet the consumption during the rest of the year.

"You ask how the publishers can protect themselves against the return of 1916 conditions. It seems to me the answer is obvious.

"1. Maintain a reasonable policy as to the amount of space given reading matter.

"2. Do not return to 'returns.'

"3. Do not revive any of the wasteful practices that were eliminated by the war conditions.

"4. Increase advertising rates.

"Our average number of pages for the first twenty-five days in July compared with the same number of days last year is as follows:

	1918.	1919.
Morning	14	17
Evening	17	22
Sunday	66	73*

Not Alarmed—Yet

Edgar D. Shaw, publisher of the Washington Times, said:

"I am not alarmed—not yet, anyway—at the newsprint situation. Naturally, The Times is covered by a contract which runs until the end of the year, and the paper company has thus far provided regular shipments of sufficient size. I do not see the likelihood of so big a total increase of consumption in the country as will overtax the capacity of the mills."

Charles I. Stewart, general manager of the Lexington Herald, said:

"Anyone who has attempted to purchase paper in the open market within the last ten days has discovered a very light situation. A newspaper not now assured of its supply for the remainder of this year is, in my opinion, in a very critical situation, as the present outlook is that newsprint will be very scarce before the last of December. Indeed it is already very scarce in the sense of being hard to obtain.

"There is just one way for the publishers to meet the situation and that is to consume less paper. It is reasonably certain, however, that they will consume more paper than the few newspapers ready to advance subscription and advertising rates to pay their extra expense would do because they are confronted with competition that has refused to do the extravagant methods prevailing before the War Board regulations went into effect.

"The reckless publishers, who in the face of the present situation continue their wasteful methods will learn only from hard experience, and if there should be a moderate decline in the volume of advertising the lesson would come very quickly."

Rochester Already Hit

Frank E. Gannett of the Rochester (N. Y.) Times-Union said:

"There is a shortage of paper here because newspapers have been carrying more advertising than last year. We have been unable to find paper in the market, except at much higher prices. Hoarding by big papers has had a bad effect.

"Newspapers should economize on consumption in every way possible. Increases in subscriptions should be continued. Increased advertising rates and increased circulation rates are inevitable and would tend to correct conditions."

Anticipates Shortage

Marcellus E. Foster, publisher and manager of the Houston Chronicle, said:

"From the standpoint of reserve supplies, newspapers in this section of Texas are in a very critical condition. Ever since June during the past two years, More paper has been consumed than in the corresponding time same period of last year, due largely to the prosperity of the country and the increase in the industrial spirit.

"The Houston Chronicle, for example, has used 25 per cent more paper for the first six months of 1919 than for the first six months of 1918, despite the fact that it has conserved in every way it knew how. Even this increase, however, has allowed no returns and advanced both the subscription and advertising rates of the paper.

"For the first twenty-four days of July, usually a dull month, the Houston Chronicle has used 500 pages, eight-column size, as compared with 350 pages for the same period of July, 1918, or an average of nearly four pages more per day.

"We have had far less difficulty in securing supply than we anticipated we would have period during the past two years, although the situation is now very serious. Unless supplies fall and winter and we anticipate some shortage in the fall, we believe that the newspapers all newspapers in this section have continued to follow the policy of using the pulp and paper department during the war hazard."

"50-50" Seems Imperative

M. J. Lowenstein, business manager of the St. Louis Star, said:

"We have not noticed any shortage of newsprint in this section. We have no difficulty in securing all the paper we need, and we do not believe papers of the city seem to be in a fix position. The situation, however, is serious, and unless the supply and this would seem to indicate a probable shortage in the fall, means publishers can, fully adjust their news columns to their advertising contracts. A 50-50 proposition seems to be imperative.

"From the first twenty-two days of this month we have averaged 16.8 pages per issue against 14.5 per issue for the same days last year."

Mills Will Meet Demand

Basil Brewer, business manager of the Cleveland Press, said:

"The output of paper by the Cleveland Press the first six months of 1918 was 4,112 as compared with 4,500 tons for the same months of last year.

"From what I can learn, paper stocks are low generally in this section, and with prosperity in sight, manufacturers will be busy before, newspapers will make heavy demands on the paper mills for the fall months. As the present volume of advertising is apparently not a temporary one, publishers are now figuring that this will take definite steps soon to meet the new demand. Some of them are already doing so."

Perez Wins Month's Golf Honors

The qualifying round of the August tournament of the New York Newspaper Golf Club was played Monday, at the Hudson Valley Golf Club, Van Cortlandt Park, and the high handicap members took all the honors. H. L. Perez, with a 15 handicap, led the field with a gross score of 88, and a net of 73. Five strokes behind him was Clinton Scollard, who emerged with a card of 101—23—78. F. F. Teague also had 101 gross, but a handicap of 20 brought his net down to 81 and third place.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

The Editor & Publisher takes great pleasure in announcing that commencing in the issue of August 14th, it will start a new department—a full page or more every issue, entitled

NEWSPAPER MAKING

Conducted by Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, and author of "Fundamentals of Newspaper Building," "Newspaper Building" and "Building Newspaper Advertising."

Mr. Rogers needs no introduction to newspapers in the United States or Canada. His frequent contributions to the trade press, his consistently outspoken views on all big newspaper questions and his writings constitute him as a leading authority.

During the past nine years Mr. Rogers has done more than any other man to produce greater co-operation and efficiency in newspaper production and more advertising for all newspapers. He has travelled for over a million and a half miles about the country visiting nearly all leading cities studying newspaper problems.

He organized the associated newspapers the largest and only strictly co-operative feature service in the country; it was his activities which created the united newspapers which formed the body of the present Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A.; and it was his vision and activities that were mainly responsible for changing the A. A. A. into the present Audit Bureau of Circulations.

In his books and writings Mr. Rogers' purpose has been to set down on paper all of the best experience coming to his attention in nearly 40 years' practical service for the benefit of those who have not had similar opportunity for studying newspaper making from the publisher's standpoint.

In this new department Mr. Rogers will from week to week write whatever occurs to him as of timely interest to the newspaper industry. The Editor & Publisher is giving him an absolutely free hand to write and say whatever he wishes.

He will answer questions from readers of the Editor & Publisher on all newspaper publishing subjects, consider and discuss the activities of newspapers and service to increase and make newspaper advertising more effective.

Mr. Rogers has won his success and recognition by hard work in the school of hard knocks. He makes no pretense of knowing it all. The Editor & Publisher feels pleased that it has been able to tie up to it such a dynamic instructive force as is represented in the personality of this live wire metropolitan publisher.

Remember the date AUGUST 14th, 1919.

Tell your newspaper friends and urge them all to subscribe for the Editor & Publisher, and not to miss this great series of articles.

FORD SUIT ENTERS CLOSING STAGE

Rebuttal Being Presented and Case Is Expected to Go to Jury Monday —Marshall Clears Ford of Saying Soldiers Are Murderers

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich., July 30.—Evidence for the defendant in Henry Ford's libel suit against the Chicago Daily Tribune was concluded July 28, and rebuttal for the plaintiff was begun. Every effort is being made to end the case within two weeks.

Alfred J. Murphy, of Mr. Ford's counsel, expressed the opinion that the case would be in by Thursday afternoon. Several legal points will then remain to be argued, and it is generally expected that the summing up will commence by Monday and that the case will go to the jury by the end of next week.

A deposition by Edward Marshall, the magazine writer, whose article on Mr. Ford figured largely in the defense, was the first evidence introduced by the plaintiff. Objection by Elliot G. Stevenson, senior counsel for the Tribune, that Mr. Ford had admitted the correctness of all but one item in the article was not sustained, and Attorney William Lucking read the deposition.

The Marshall Deposition

Mr. Marshall deposed that it was Miss Jane Addams of Chicago who first said to him that "the word murderer should be embroidered in the breast of every soldier."

"Miss Addams made this remark when I called on her with Norman Hapgood," said Marshall. "I repeated it to Mr. Ford, and he said 'Yes.'"

In Marshall's article the statement appeared as a direct quotation from Mr. Ford. The writer had much difficulty in interviewing the manufacturer, he deposed. He said that he "couldn't hold him still" long enough to get a satisfactory statement from him. Some of the quotations came second-hand from John R. Lee, who had them from Mr. Ford. The article was pieced together and the writer said that it was approved at the Ford plant, either by Mr. Ford or Mr. Lee.

Dispute Term of Anarchist

The Tribune's assertion in 1916 that Mr. Ford was an anarchist, was disputed in court yesterday by Professor William A. Dunning of the Chair of History and Political Philosophy, Columbia University.

In many of the utterances of the manufacturer the New York scholar found statements that he regarded as distinctly non-anarchistic. Others labeled anarchistic by an expert for the Tribune Professor Dunning found might have been said by anybody. Certainly none of them was peculiar to anarchistic doctrine alone, he said, and he cited Plato, Diogenes, Zeno, and other ancient philosophers in support of his contention.

Professor Dunning defined anarchy as the non-existence of government, and the absence of property rights as an anarchistic doctrine. He picked a score of statements in the Ford writings to show that Mr. Ford believed both in government and the right of personal property, and urged the use of the ballot.

Banner Educational Edition

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 29.—The Pittsburgh Dispatch educational number was published today and ran a banner amount of advertising of the leading schools and universities of the Tri-State territories.

DUPLEX PRESS PLANT WILL QUADRUPLE OUTPUT

AMONG building projects put forward with vigor since the close of war activities, one of great interest to printers, and especially to newspaper publishers is a large expansion taking place at the Duplex Printing Press Company's plant in Battle Creek, Mich., whereby what was already a large and efficient manufacturing establishment, is being prepared to take care of about four times its former output. The scope of the new work involves not only an immense new foundry and machine shop, but a rebuilding, enlargement and re-equipment of the old foundry to such an extent that, when completed, the whole plant will be practically new.

All of the new building is on ground adjacent to the old plant and will be directly in line and connected thereto. In order to facilitate the unity and efficiency of the extension, the city of Battle Creek vacated to the Duplex Printing Press Co. two streets which separated the city blocks, owned by the company, bought some years ago with this large expansion in view. The vacating of these streets to the company gives them several city blocks in one. The new plant extends along the railroad track for more than a quarter of a mile, and is approximately 300 feet in width.

This arrangement of continuous shop enables the use of continuous straight travel for all work, from the foundry at one end to the erecting and shipping departments at the other. No time or energy will be wasted in back tracking. Parallel lines of heavy duty electric traveling cranes will traverse the entire length, serving all work throughout the foundry and shop. Five of these cranes are to be installed immediately and the others will follow. In connection with the cranes there will be heavy magnets for quick handling of iron and steel to and from freight cars as well as in the shop. The railroad tracks run directly into the buildings and under the crane works. Slow manual labor is avoided in every possible way.

Besides the main plant, foundry and office building, the Duplex Printing Press Company has the additional facilities of a large five-story warehouse, with many thousands of feet of floor space, which will be used for all the light work of the factory, pattern making and storage, stock room for repair parts, employees' Service Rooms, etc.

The new building is built entirely on the principle of daylight construction. Steel sash constitutes almost the entire area of both sides and the interior of the entire shop will be practically as light as the open air and equally as well ventilated. With the exception of the railroad track and the wide streets, the company owns all of the land adjacent to the buildings, so there is no possibility of any other construction ever shutting off the light and air.

Tracks from both the main lines of the Grand Trunk and the New York Central railroads will run into the building at two points, one for receiving and the other for shipping, and each of these tracks will have a capacity of several cars for loading or unloading.

The foundry, entirely new both in building and equipment, is said to be the only one in America built exclusively for newspaper press work and designed accordingly.

The size and capacity of the new plant testifies to the widening use of the Duplex Printing Press Company's products the Duplex Flatbed presses and "Tubular Plate" Rotary Presses. The company now has orders on its books for work sufficient to keep even its new plant "humming" from the day it is ready for operation, which, if all goes as now anticipated, will be some time in the late summer or early fall.

NEWSPAPERS' ADVERTISING GAINS IN 1919 OVER 1918

THE following figures are supplemental to those printed in EDITOR AND PUBLISHER of July 10 and 17, showing the gains in advertising leading newspapers of the country have made in the first six months of 1919, as compared with the same period of 1918. The table is self-explanatory:

Teachers to Be Taught Journalism

ALBANY, N. Y., July 29.—The first course of journalism at the New York State College for Teachers, and believed to be the only one with a woman at its director, will be given this fall by Miss Geraldine H. Murray, a former member of the city staff of the Albany Knickerbocker Press. Miss Murray returned recently from a conference with officials of the Columbia University School of Journalism.

Forming Rochester Press Club

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 27.—Active and former newspaper men of the city have formulated a tentative plan for a press club. The organization committee consists of Bernard J. Haggerty, secretary to the Mayor; United States Marshal John D. Lynn, Ernest Pavior, Jack Knabb, secretary of the Ad Club; Arthur P. Kelly of the Post Express, Willis G. Broadbooks of the Herald, Harry V. Roff of the Democrat and Chronicle and George B. Snell of the Times-Union. It is expected that the new club will start with a membership of between 100 and 200.

Millard Against Shantung Part

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Thomas F. Millard, editor of the Far Eastern Review, Shanghai, an American, has come from Paris to Washington to wage an active campaign against the Shantung settlement in the Peace Treaty.

UNITES ALL INTERESTS FOR GREATER CITY

Columbus (Ga.) Ledger Gathers Ideas from Readers, Then Calls Business Men of Community Together at Banquet to Discuss Suggestions

COLUMBUS, Ga., July 30.—A novel and unique stroke in progressive journalism was made here this week when the Columbus Ledger, edited by R. M. Page, as a fitting climax to the publication of a series of communications on the needs for a greater Columbus, furnished by leading business men of the community, at the suggestion of the last contributor that some means be devised to get all of the Columbus boosters together for a conference on ways and means of procedure, sent out invitations for all—near a half hundred in number—to be its guests at a luncheon at the Ralston Hotel.

Practically all of the participants in the greater city booster campaign accepted the invitation. Enterprising citizens of Phenix City and Girard, Ala., were represented, it being strictly a community movement launched mainly in efforts to aid the Chamber of Commerce in its drive for a city of 100,000 by 1930.

The series started near six weeks ago, and the suggestions for enlargements, city expansion and general betterment have been published, one or two a day, consecutively each day since; every communication being accompanied by a leading editorial pointing out its merits.

The announcement that the splendid community drive was to be followed up with direct efforts on the part of the Ledger to set in motion machinery for carrying out the suggestions, has been received with hearty enthusiasm.

The Chamber of Commerce, numerous members of which contributed to the series, has warmly endorsed the movement and business men and citizens generally are talking—thinking—and boosting for a greater Columbus.

ARRANGING FOR "DOLLAR DAY"

Wilmington Newspapers, Stores and Commerce Chamber Plan Big August 6

WILMINGTON, Del., July 27.—The Retail Advertisers Section of the Chamber of Commerce, in co-operation with the local newspapers, expects to put over on August 6 the most successful "dollar day" Wilmington has ever known. Incidentally, "dollar day" does as much to advertise the city as its stores and everybody regards it as an important occasion.

The Chamber of Commerce has picked the following sub-committee of newspaper men to assist with the plans: William F. Metten, business manager of Every Evening; Edward W. Snyder, advertising manager Morning News; B. G. Strickland, advertising manager Evening Journal; Horace P. Warrington, advertising manager Sunday Star, and John Blmsinger.

Ranger Will Be at New Orleans

RANGER, Tex., July 29.—The Chamber of Commerce, which also performs the functions of an Advertising Club, is preparing a large relief map of west and northwest Texas showing the oil fields which will be sent as Ranger's exhibit to the convention of the Associated Ad Clubs of the World at New Orleans. Ranger is regarded as the premier oil city of Texas. It has grown from a country village of less than 1,000 people to a city of more than 40,000 inhabitants in less than a year.

Two More A. N. P. A. Members

The Omaha Daily News and the New Castle (Pa.) Herald have been elected to active membership in the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

SANDUSKY STAR-JOURNAL WILL BUILD NEW HOME

A CONTRACT for the erection of a four-story modern newspaper building at the corner of Jackson and Market streets, Sandusky, O., has been awarded by the Star-Journal and construction work is already under way.

Architecturally of collegiate Gothic, the exterior will be of tool finished buff Bedford limestone. With the exception of a public assembly room on the mezzanine floor, the entire building, 58 ft. x 85 ft., will be given over to the Star-Journal.

The new building will be fireproof throughout and only the most modern and up-to-date equipment will be installed in an effort to make it the last word in newspaper plant construction.

Iowa

Iowa is gaining in wealth much faster than in population. That is why its 2,000,000 have nearly as many automobiles as they have families while the state with the most automobiles of all has more families than autos, notwithstanding its riches.

IT is a pretty good thought to give the weight of your advertising to the territory that can buy the freest, and where the newspapers are read at home for the advertising as well as the telegraphic news.

Where there is money at home to spend, your advertisement in the city's daily is sure to receive attention.

CONSERVATION STILL NECESSARY

CONDITIONS in the newsprint market are not reassuring. The unprecedented volume of advertising carried by the newspapers this year —a happy circumstance in itself—has called for heavy drafts upon the inadequate reserve stocks of the mills. The anticipated Summer slump in advertising volume has not materialized on any large scale, so that the manufacturers are not accumulating the usual surplus stocks with which to meet the Fall needs of the publishers.

Indeed, during the supposed dull Summer months, publishers have been forced to look about in the open market for additional tonnage, and frequently the quest has been fruitless.

It was to have been expected, on account of the high prices to be obtained and the increasing demand for newsprint, that the paper makers would have been prepared by this time to greatly increase their output. It appears, however, that production will not be on a much larger scale than last year—at which time war conditions were assigned as the obstacle.

The policy of limiting production in order to maintain high prices, or to force still higher ones, is no longer considered as good business in American industries—to say nothing of its ethical unsoundness. The paper manufacturers of the United States and Canada are, for the most part, big business men, and publishers will not hastily accuse them of such practices.

The fact remains that the manufacturers are not ready to meet the normal demand for newsprint, and that the publishers will find themselves in an awkward situation when the flood of new advertising comes to them in the Fall months.

The policies of paper economy so successfully adopted during the war should be continued in force. The unnecessary consumption of newsprint in "circulation wars" should be wholly eliminated. Waste of every kind should be avoided. The closest possible conservation of space for text matter should be made. Lately we have had greatly enlarged daily issues of newspapers, due to the fact that most publishers try to conform to an established ratio between advertising and reading should be kept to a certain number of pages a proper balance between text and advertising is essential. But this balance need not be maintained strictly in issues carrying unusually heavy advertising.

Conservation of newsprint must be a corner-stone of administrative policy with every newspaper if a serious shortage in supply is to be averted.

A COMMON-SENSE INTERPRETATION

PUBLISHERS have felt a natural anxiety concerning the interpretation which should be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the Child Labor Law as it applies to newsboys and carriers. This anxiety has been relieved by the Commissioner's ruling that the law does not apply to children under sixteen who are employed away from the office of publication in the sale or delivery of newspapers.

The average American boy is sure to acquire self-reliance and manliness through working as a newspaper carrier before or after school hours. The work develops in him the impulse toward thrift and industry. It involves as little of hardship as he would encounter in any employment open to him. It teaches him to be systematic, and gives to him a sense of responsibility.

The carrier is an important factor in the distribution of newspapers. He renders useful service to the paper and to the community. In organizations where he also collects the weekly or monthly bills, and accounts for them, he receives a training in business which will be an asset to him all of his life.

It is fortunate, therefore, that his work is not to be taken away from him through the Child Labor Law, which was framed for the protection of children from drudgery and hard conditions—not to deprive them of healthful and useful employment.

IN every city nowadays there is a lively race between publishers to score the greatest percentage of silverstaine gains over the same month last year. This is the kind of sporting event which appeals to the live newspaper maker

PUBLISHERS AS ADVERTISERS

THOMAS H. MOORE, of the Bureau of Advertising of the A. N. P. A., said to the Southern publishers at their recent convention: "The greatest advertisers today are the publishers of daily newspapers."

Mr. Moore related how the magazine publishers were spending millions of dollars in advertising—chiefly in the daily newspapers. He could recall but one newspaper publisher who had followed a definite policy of advertising in other newspapers. This publisher, he thought, would spend about a hundred thousand dollars this year in newspaper advertising.

The fact that the magazine publishers find it so profitable to advertise in the newspapers is gratifying, of course. It evidences the development among them of the new perspective in business, which takes into account neglected factors of expansion.

And while the publishers of daily newspapers are not advertising in other newspapers as yet to the same extent that the magazine men are using their space, still there is a noticeable trend in that direction. It was not long ago that local organizations of publishers in large cities had agreements forbidding the advertising of one newspaper in the columns of a rival. We are outgrowing that sort of petty policies.

Mr. Moore might have found better grounds for optimism if he had considered the change of attitude of the publishers of daily newspapers in recent years in regard to trade newspaper advertising. We may all remember the time when publishers doled out ads to their trade papers now and then more in the nature of good-will donations than as investments for profit. That has all changed. Publishers are advertising their advertising to space buyers, and using the trade papers which space buyers read. It is a matter of business with them—not at all of sentiment. They realize that a good trade newspaper can carry their selling messages to buyers of advertising quite as effectively as the daily newspaper can carry the selling messages of merchants to the people of a community.

Of course the present volume of publishers' advertising, as before—for example—in the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, is far smaller than it should be; and this is true in spite of the fact that it is ten times greater than in 1911 and increasing all the time. When publishers generally are "sold" on the policy of advertising their advertising, EDITOR & PUBLISHER will doubtless reflect that fact through a volume of business running into more than a hundred pages a week. And that will be merely a normal state of affairs.

THE Supreme Court of Missouri has ruled that criticism of a public official by newspapers, where such criticism has to do with his acts as a public official, is privileged, and this principle should prevail in all similar libel litigation everywhere. When a man accepts office he accepts responsibility to the people—and full accountability.

MEETING A MENACE

A VAST majority of Americans believe that the system of government under which we live is the best that has ever been devised by men. We are democrats; we live in a democratic government, and we believe that, under that government, and through its processes, every political and economic ill may be cured.

We are given, however, to the habit of believing that this governmental system of ours, which has functioned so splendidly through the long years of the Republic's life, is secure from assault from within or without. That belief does infinite credit to our patriotic optimism—but it carries with it factors of danger to the democratic ideal.

We see the insidious spread of doctrines about government which are hostile to our established order. We feel a wholesome desire to strangle the propagandists who are engaged in spreading Bolshevist poison among our laboring classes, cunningly fostering discontent and disloyalty. But we do not, after all, arouse ourselves to the fighting pitch. We do not take adequate measures to meet the menace.

Under present world conditions, affecting us only in less degree than they affect some of our neighbor nations, agitators are boldly preaching the overthrow of our government—appealing to organized workers to take over the reins of power and to establish class dictation. Radical socialists, with organs of opinion through which to advocate their doctrines openly, and who are tolerant of all this, realizing that free speech is guaranteed under a democracy and that it is very easy to drift into autocratic policies in dealing with those who abuse that privilege.

We should realize that democracy in the United States is under assault. And we should not be too prone, as its defenders, to shut our eyes or to turn the other cheek. The menace can be met and defeated in the democratic way.

Our newspapers should PREACH DEMOCRACY. They should "sell" the democratic ideal all over again to American men. They should bring to all our people, partieularly to the discontented, a new sense of the value of the political system under which we have become the greatest nation in the world. They should explain radical doctrines with the doctrines of reason and common sense which are the basis of our national structure.

Democracy should be advertised anew. We must not rely upon past performances. We must keep the fires of loyalty burning—we must them to be self-perpetuating. The way to put an end to a false doctrine is to drag it into the light and show its falsity.

The newspapers may drive out Bolshevistic sentiment through showing its utter inadequacy to meet the needs of the people—by showing what a pitiable substitute it is for democratic government. They cannot disloyalty by ignoring it. Let us have a real revival of Americanism in America!

IN his administration of the Navy during the war Secretary Daniels established a record of efficiency of which all of his countrymen are properly proud. This newspaperman, called to high responsibilities, acquitted himself with honor. He met the great emergencies arising in a common-sense, American way. Now he proposes to advertise for Navy recruits. As there is no special appropriation, he will properly utilize a part of the appropriation for "recruiting and organization." And through this policy he will further serve the best interests of the naval establishment and of the nation.

J. H. ALLISON, of the Fort Worth Record, who has been honored by his confreres in the South by election to the presidency of the S. N. P. A., is a newspaper maker of the progressive kind. He played a stellar role in the creation of a splendid newspaper at Nashville—making friends while "making hay." He is now associated at Fort Worth with a kindred spirit, W. H. Bagley kinsman of Secretary Daniels and long one of the Southland's distinguished journalists. Mr. Allison will win new laurels as head of the great and still growing Southern organization.

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Harry Parker, for five years past on the copy desk of the Chicago Tribune, has been appointed assistant managing editor of the Milwaukee Journal.

Milton Palmer, later of the Detroit Times and Saturday Night, has been appointed editor of the Detroiter, issued by the Board of Commerce.

Mark S. Watson, former reporter and one-time Washington correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, who recently returned from U. S. army service in France, has been made special assistant to Thomas De Witt Cuyler, chairman of the Association of Railway Executives.

Dean Collins, "colyumist" on the Portland (Ore.) Telegram, has resigned to enter the moving picture field. He will manage the publicity and service departments of the Universal Film Company in Portland and Seattle.

M. M. Mattison has been recalled from the Washington bureau of the Seattle Times to the local staff.

Richard E. Jones, Seattle newspaperman, has gone to Washington, D. C., to write the staff of the new Stars & Stripes, to be published in that country as a private enterprise. Jones worked on "S. & S." while a soldier in France.

John Joseph Connolly, San Francisco newspaperman, lately in Uncle Sam's Navy, and Miss Mary Alice Randall have been married.

Albert Egan, Pittsburgh newspaper man, has been appointed general director of the Knights of Columbus activities in Paris.

Miss Letta MacDonald, assistant librarian of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and Clyde R. Miller, of the Henderson-Jappe publicity firm, were married on July 16. Miss MacDonald is popularly known as "the good angel" of the "P. D." editorial department, and regrets of all in losing her were expressed by one associate, who said: "None but her best to love her, nor named but to praise her."

Ensign Paul McCrea, city editor of the Boone (Ia.) News-Republican, is back at work, but may enter college this fall.

George Milton Baker, Pittsburgh Post cartoonist, has resigned to give his entire time to syndicate comic work. Mr. Baker, who is creator of "Oh, What's the Use," "It's Human Nature," and "Atta Boy, Aggie," is just out of naval service, during which he was sports editor of Navy Life.

Bernard Douglas, formerly of the Cohoes Dispatch, has been named editorial writer for the Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

W. R. Robinson, formerly an editorial writer on the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is now doing similar work for the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Gilbert B. Outhwaite, formerly of the editorial department of the Troy (N. Y.) Record, has returned from England with Base Hospital No. 33, and is now assistant secretary of the Troy Chamber of Commerce.

Frederic C. Smith, who before entering the army was city editor of the Keokuk (Ia.) Gate City, has been named editor of the A. E. F. News, published by the students of the University of Beaune, Cote d'Or. Mr. Smith was at one time with the Des Moines Register and Tribune.

Arthur G. Jackson, lately returned from war and who was made city editor of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Telegram, has decided that night work will be detrimental to his health, and on June 23 he will become sporting editor for the Evening Herald.

John Apple, formerly city editor for the Des Moines News, is handling special assignments for the Register and Tribune.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

Stuart H. Perry, publisher of the Adrian (Mich.) Telegram, in recently receiving the honorary degree of Master of Arts from the University of Michigan, was "cited" by President Hutchins as follows: "Stuart Hoffman Perry, Adrian, Mich. A graduate of the University, College of Literature, Science and the Arts in 1864, an editorial writer of widely recognized merit, whose lucid, vigorous and constructive contributions upon the great questions of the hour attract wide attention and receive most generous and deserved commendation."

STUART H. PERRY.

R. E. Yantis, publisher of the Athens (Tex.) Review and a member of the Texas House of Representatives, and Mrs. E. A. Seller, of Temple, were married July 15.

John T. Telford, publisher of the Oil City Derrick, and Miss Grace Falls (Pa.) Evening Tribune, with his family, have returned from a three weeks' automobile tour of eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey and New York.

Lieut. Ray B. Duboe, who before the war was advertising manager of the Fort Scott (Kan.) Tribune, is home from two years' field artillery service in France, and intends getting right back into newspaper work. He took part in all the engagements of his regiment, and was wounded once. For the present Lieutenant Duboe will reside with his family at 6600 Woodlawn avenue, Chicago. Prior to the consolidation of Fort Scott dailies, Lieutenant Duboe owned the Daily Republican.

H. H. Windsor, publisher of Cartoons Magazine and Popular Mechanics, Chicago, who is an old-time city editor of the Marshalltown (Ia.) Republican, has purchased a new Evanston (Ill.) residence for a reported consideration of $60,000.

Lieut. Herbert A. Cone, formerly connected with the New York Times staff, and Miss Florence Collin Gutman, of Binghamton, N. Y., have announced their engagement.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

H. G. Seely, formerly of the Chicago Herald & Examiner, is now assistant advertising manager of the Hurley Machine Company, Chicago.

Frank O. Young, Jr., has left the Erwin & Wasey Agency staff, Chicago, to join the farm paper department of the John M. Branham Company, same city.

Varina M. Losey has been appointed to handle the advertising of the Kabo Corset Company, Chicago.

Charles V. O'Donnell, formerly advertising manager for the Messenger of the Sacred Heart, is now a member of the Phillip Ritter Agency staff in New York.

H. M. Graves has been appointed advertising manager of the Southwark Foundry & Machine Company, Philadelphia. He has been with the Logemann Brothers Company, Milwaukee.

Conservation Commission Opposed to Billboard Ads

OTTAWA, Ont., July 29.—"War" on bill-board advertising has been declared by the Commission of Conservation for Canada. This body has expressed the opinion that "It is high time our municipal authorities recognized their duty towards public amenities, and regulated the erection of signs and billboards."

In a recently issued statement, the Commission says, in part:

"How the advertiser spends his appropriation, from the standpoint of securing results, is his own concern. The medium by which he reaches the public, however, concerns the public, and the people are awakening to the fact.

"Appearance counts. For this reason and for no other, all modern daily newspapers, notwithstanding that the greater proportion of their revenue comes from advertising, have excluded display advertising from their front pages.

"When a private enterprise, so dependent upon its advertisers, can take a stand on behalf of appearances, how much more important is it that our public streets, the front pages of our cities, should be protected."

Oliver B. Byerly has become advertising manager of the Billings-Chapin Company, Cleveland.

William C. Dudgeon has gone from the Campbell-Ewald Agency, Detroit, to the Gardner Advertising Company, St. Louis.

Frank B. Finch, former advertising manager of the National Bank of Commerce, of New York, has become southwestern representative of the Irving National Bank of New York, in Kansas City. Lately he has been business manager of the Western Financier, Kansas City.

Samuel Frommer has become sales and advertising manager of the McCaskey Register Company, Alliance, Ohio. He was formerly in charge of advertising for the U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Company, Baltimore.

L. W. Ernst, late of the Smith Form-a-Truck Company, is now advertising manager of the Atlas Educational Film Company, Chicago.

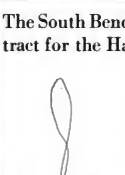
Fred W. Jones has assumed charge of advertising for the Holt Manufacturing Company, Peoria, Ill. He is from the International Harvester Company.

D. S. B. Stannard, late of the Los Angeles Express, has been added to the staff of the Crank-Paris Advertising Agency, Los Angeles.

Charles D. Isaacson has been appointed advertising director of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, New York, succeeding Kenneth McGowan, who has resigned to become dramatic editor of the New York Globe.

J. Albert McCollum has been appointed advertising manager of the Traffic Motor Truck Corporation, St. Louis. For many years he has been in charge of automobile advertising for the St. Louis Republic, where he is succeeded by Gus U. Klemme. G. Elmo Holke will remain as assistant advertising manager of the Traffic Trade, and will edit the company's house magazine, Horse Sense.

Miss Mary Jane Albert, formerly a reporter on the St. Louis Star, has joined the advertising staff of Scruggs-Vandervoort-Barney, a department store.



Paul Hutchinson, former secretary of the Advertising Club of St. Louis, who was recently discharged from the army, has been made advertising manager of the Globe-Democrat, succeeding Merrill Vincent, who will return to college in the fall.

Gordon A. MacEdward has been appointed sales manager of Walker & Company, of Detroit, outdoor advertisers.

Fred C. Millis, formerly of the Houston Chronicle, has been appointed chairman of the "On to New Orleans" committee of the Indianapolis Advertising Club, which is making strenuous plans to get the 1920 convention.

Harry Varley, of New York, has gone to Lancastershire, England, for six weeks to visit his folks and make an industrial investigation for the government.

The South Bend Tribune has signed a contract for the Haskin Service for one year.

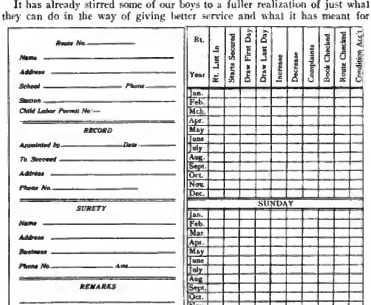
Frederic J. Haskin makes friends for the newspapers he serves.

"He supplies reliable information."

A READY REFERENCE SYSTEM OF CARRIER FACTS

By L. T. Ward

CITY CIRCULATION MANAGER, DES MOINES CAPITAL.



One of the secrets of success of any district manager dealing with a group of boys under the independent carrier system is to be able to at once find any weak spot in his district, and be able to strengthen it.

To help each man keep his records more completely we have devised a book of information for each man. Part of this book deals with each route and its record is completed monthly by the district manager and information furnished by the circulation statistician.

Each manager carries his book when he is out on his territory. It gives him at all times a method of quickly finding out which routes are needing help, and which ones are producing best.

In cases of trouble he has a record with him that he can show a boy's parents, and give them a picture of what the boy is doing in comparison with other boys who get out and hustle.

It has already stirred some of our boys to a fuller realization of just what they can do in the way of giving better service and what it has meant for boys who have had no complaints. Where the record shows no complaints the route shows a nice gain, and these records are shown to careless carriers.

The book also has other sheets that provide similar information for all newsdealers on each man's district. It also carries a collection record in case the collection of dealers is handled through the district managers. It furnishes a valuable means of comparison between the daily and Sunday papers, and proves more valuable the longer it is used.

The sheets are made separate, and face each other in the book. This allows for a change of the record sheet when new carriers are put on routes, and still leaves the sheet intact which carries the yearly record of the route. The new carrier is usually shown the record of the old carrier and given a certain mark to strive for.

When districts are changed and a group of carriers are given to another manager the record sheets are merely changed from one book to another and the new manager has a ready and comprehensive record of just the routes he is taking charge of. He loses no time in "getting on to his routes." He is ready to handle each route in the light of its previous record, and the circulation manager can look each book over occasionally to see what each district manager's record is.

In the Capital office we have a girl keep a separate book for the office, and handles other office records. It is usually the girl handling the A. B. C. record book.

Will Push Thrift Stamps

CLEVELAND, O., July 23.—Hans Heig Reig, representing the foreign language section of the Treasury Department, during a meeting of publishers of foreign language newspapers, emphasized the importance of their getting behind a War Thrift Stamp campaign in Cleveland. Richard Breeve, editor Waechter und Anzeiger; A. B. Bartoszewich, editor Dirva; and George Mclarangno, editor Italian Voice, were made members of a Thrift committee

Fire Injures Rotogravure Press

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 28.—Static electricity in the ink fountain generated by friction of paper last Wednesday afternoon caused a fire that damaged the new rotogravure press of the Sunday Post-Dispatch on the fifth floor of the Post-Dispatch building. The press was put out of commission and yesterday's Sunday Post-Dispatch contained no rotogravure section, a six-page picture section with illustrations in half-tone being substituted.

Supposing you wanted an experimental market.

You would want a territory not too hard to get around in, not large enough to be unwieldy, not small enough to be piffling.

Take Indiana for instance.

275 miles long
140 miles wide
35,910 square miles
50 cities of 5,000 or more
5 cities of 10,000 or more
12 cities of 15,000 or more
3 cities of 25,000 or more
4 cities of 50,000 or more
1 city of over 275,000

A total population of 3,000,000
7,168 Retail Grocery and Delicatessen stores
4,258 Retail General Stores
1,931 Retail Hardware Stores
1,804 Retail Drug Stores
713 Retail Dry Goods Stores
277 Sporting Goods Stores

The best railroad facilities in the United States. The best Interurban traction facilities in the United States.

25,000 miles of improved roads.

Indiana is a territory worth cultivating. You have everything in Indiana to make a business success—people, stores, money, transportation—everything.

These daily newspapers have a wide influence in Indiana—and are the kind of newspapers that believe in co-operation.

Co-operate with them, and through them with the local merchants, and you will find that they will co-operate with you.

Win Indiana.

Indiana is worth winning.

CIRCULATION NOTES

The Glens Falls (N. Y.) Times is conducting a "Popular Baby Contest," offering gold prizes. Keen interest is reported.

The Schenertady (N. Y.) Union-Star is running a "salesmanship contest," conducted on the voting system. Among the prizes is a $1,700 automobile.

Chester A. Darling, former circulation manager of the Duluth News-Tribune, and who has been overseas for the past 18 months on the Stars and Stripes, was discharged at Camp Dodge last week.

W. Matthews, late of the Winnipeg Telegram, is now city circulation manager of the Winnipeg Tribune, succeeding C. O'Shaughnessy, who has gone to the Pacific coast. E. LaChappelle is now city circulation manager of the Telegram.

The chief of police at Portland, Me., has completed a contract for the purchase of over 250 badges to be used by the newsboys. A campaign was started recently to have the ordinance governing newsboys enforced, as it has been a dead issue for several years.

Newsboys who handle the Lewiston (Me.) Sun were entertained by the management of the Sun recently with an outing at Sabattus. Prizes were given to winners of various events. A feature of the day was a game of baseball between the Sun's regular nine and the "Bolsheviks."

The St. Paul Newsboys' Club is to be reorganized. This has been decided upon by the general delinquency committee of the St. Paul Association of Public and Business Affairs. A three-year budget will be obtained if possible.

Mrs. Allan D. Husted, general chairman of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Newsboys' Benevolent and Athletic Association, gives a newsboys' pedro party every Wednesday evening at their club rooms. Sixteen valuable prizes will be given. There is dancing after the games. The proceeds go toward the new building.

Twenty-one children of non-English-speaking parents were presented silver medals by the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard at an "Americanization" meeting held at the high school. The presentation is an annual event, the children reading selections from the Standard and prizes being awarded to the winner in each school.

Buenos Aires Seeks Ad Club

DALLAS, Tex., July 27.—Apparently the fame of the Dallas Advertising League has penetrated to a point somewhat near the South Pole. C. H. Abbott, Buenos Aires, has written a letter to J. C. Phelps, formerly president of the league, asking for information as to its organization and operation, it being his desire to organize an advertising league in the South American city.

Celebrates 133d Birthday

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 29.—The Gazette-Times today celebrated its 133rd birthday, and in the Sunday issue previous a whole page was given over to a special story with illustrations outlining the history of this big Pittsburgh newspaper.

Admit McKenzie Letters to Christian Science Case

Writer "Unequivocally Stood for Directors as the Authority of the Mother Church"

(BY TELEGRAPH)

BOSTON, MASS., July 29.—Letters written by the Rev. William P. McKenzie, an editor of the Christian Science publications, to Herbert W. Eustace, chairman of the trustees of the publishing society, were admitted as evidence in the Christian Science controversy here yesterday. Objections were filed by counsel for the directors, but Judge Dodge, sitting as master, ruled in favor of the trustees. Editor McKenzie testified he earns $9,000 a year.

In closing one of these letters Mr. McKenzie wrote:

"I have the assurance within myself that in framing the deed of trust Mrs. Eddy's desire was to safeguard the movement. If it should ever happen that the church might be divided into schismatic political parties the unity of the trust could still be preserved through the publishing society."

In a subsequent letter to the trustees Mr. McKenzie recited that he "unequivocally" stood for the directors as the authority of the mother church.

"I believe then with all my heart that the publishing society should rest where Mrs. Eddy placed it, in the mother church as an accepted gift," he wrote. "As one of the first members who accepted the gift standing, I am sure, in full agreement with the vast multitude of church members in the world, I repudiate any theory, legal or otherwise, which would claim the publishing society as the possession of any person or persons. "If any such claim has been made then the Christian Science Publishing Society should be rescued from the grasp of legal power, and now it must be put back into the arms of love if we would not be found fighting against God."

Want Pure Ad Law in N. Carolina

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 30.—The Advertisers' Club, an institution separate and distinct from the Charlotte Merchants' Association, will introduce a bill in the North Carolina legislature making it a misdemeanor to publish a false or misleading statement in an advertisement, thus protecting the legitimate and truthful advertiser. The club, of which Leak Caraway is president, has been working on the matter for some time. The new club has the endorsement of the merchants' Association of Charlotte.

Alma Mater Honors E. P. Bell

CHICAGO, July 30.—Edward Price Bell, London correspondent of the Daily News, was honored this week by his alma mater, Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Ind. Mr. Bell spoke in the course of the commencement festivities, and on the day of the graduation exercises he was given an honorary degree of doctor of letters, and made a member of Phi Beta Kappa, a scholarship fraternity.

New Women's Wear Weekly in Chicago

CHICAGO, July 30.—The rumored weekly newspaper, to cover the manufacturing and wholesale ends of the women's wear field, has appeared here under the name of the Women's Apparel Review. The publishing corporation is headed by Allan L. Rosenthal. Offices have been established at 53 West Jackson boulevard.

New Jersey Manufacturing

New Jersey is a great play ground.

Pleasure seekers with money to spend find plenty of places to spend it pleasantly along the coast of New Jersey.

New Jersey is a great home state.

Many beautiful home towns, given over principally to being ideal places for people in easy circumstances to live, dot the entire state.

But New Jersey as a manufacturing state—as a state producing wealth, tangible wealth, is—well, look at these figures and see.

$1,150,000,000 in manufactured products annually.

53,000,000 in silk.
40,000,000 in wire goods.
37,000,000 in chemicals.
35,000,000 in rubber goods.
31,000,000 in woolens.

There are 8,820 factories in New Jersey. They employ 375,000 people, people who earn good pay and live well. Customers, every one of them.

AIRPLANE ADVERTISING STARTS

Introduced to St. Louis in "Bargain Sale" Copy in Newspaper

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 28.—Airplane advertising has arrived in St. Louis. The first copy to be placed was a full page, which appeared in yesterday's Post-Dispatch. It is the announcement of the Briscoe Motor Sales Co. offering airplanes of the Curtis-Canadian type for $3,250, delivered in St. Louis. The advertisement tells of the uses to which the airplanes may be put and gives the specifications of the machines.

There is a "bargain" element to the copy, it being announced that the price is "an exceptionally low one. These planes cost the British Government from $7,000 to $9,000 each," and adding that "only a limited number will be sold at this price."

PAPER CARRIERS ASK INCREASE

75 Cents 100 Pounds Asked by the O. W. R. & N. Company

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, July 29.—The Oregon Washington Railroad and Navigation Company has filed application with the Interstate Commerce Commission asking higher rates on news print, wrapping paper and paper bags shipped to Utah over federal and non-federal controlled railroads from Washington and Oregon points near Portland, according to H. W. Prickett, manager of the Traffic Service Bureau of Utah.

An increase from 56½ cents to 75 cents a hundred pounds on news print and wrapping paper and from 75 cents to 85 cents a hundred pounds on paper bags is sought. A protest probably will be filed with the commission by the Traffic Service Bureau, Mr. Prickett said.

HELPED NEW ORLEANS WIN A. A. C. W. MEETING

L. R. Putman is director of Advertising and Trade Extension of the Southern Pine Association of New Orleans.

He was born in Fayetteville, Ark., and was graduated from the state university, which is located there. Immediately on leaving college he entered into the retail lumber business. Later on he became a stockholder, director and general manager of a line of retail yards, which operated in addition, a wood-working plant, and sold hardware and all kinds of building material. The manufacture of all classes of wood-work was turned out and sold at wholesale and retail.

L. R. PUTMAN.

He went with the Southern Pine Association of New Orleans in January, 1917, as advertising manager. In January, 1918, the trade extension and selling policies were turned over to him, and he was given the title of Director of Advertising and Trade Extension. At the present time he directs the national advertising for the Southern Pine Association, as well as the compilation of its technical bulletins and dealers' selling helps. In addition, he keeps in close touch with the 800 sales managers and salesmen representing the more than 200 sawmills comprising the Southern Pine Association.

He was elected president of the Advising Club of New Orleans in April, 1918, and represented that organization at the San Francisco meeting of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, where the 1919 convention of that organization was secured for New Orleans.

J. J. Ahern, city editor of the St. Paul Daily News, is the father of a baby daughter.

BETTING ODDS CAUSE TROUBLE

Detroit Police Court Issues Warrants Against Newspaper Distributors

DETROIT, July 29.—Nine warrants charging violation of the State law in selling newspapers containing betting odds on horse races, and two charging publication of such information have been issued by the police court. Six of the warrants charging sale of papers are against Frank and Louis Groscup, proprietors of the Wolverine News Company. Three were issued against Max and Sam Solomon, proprietors of the Solomon News Company.

Chicago, Toronto, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo and New York newspapers are named as having been distributed by the two companies.

The warrants charging publication of betting odds were issued against E. D. Stair, president, and W. H. Pettibone, business manager of the Detroit Free Press.

SEN. HITCHCOCK MAY RETIRE

Says This May Be His Last Year in Public Life

BOSTON, July 27.—Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, proprietor of the Omaha World-Herald, who is leading the fight in the Senate for unqualified indorsement of the Peace Treaty, and who has been mentioned as a presidential possibility, will, in all likelihood, retire from public life when his present term is finished next year. In an interview with newspaper men at the Union Club here he expressed a yearning for the peace and quiet of the lot of a private citizen, and said he had about made up his mind to return to it.

"I am thinking strongly of withdrawing from politics," said Senator Hitchcock. "I have been in the Senate for fourteen years—a long time for a young man like me."

EDITORS CO-OPERATE IN THREE STATES

Illinois, Iowa and Missouri City and Telegraph Desk Heads Lay Plans for Co-ordination at Meeting in Quincy—Critchfield President

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

QUINCY, Ill., July 28.—The Illinois City and Telegraph Editors in a meeting here Sunday took action that will greatly enlarge the membership and to make the association a real serviceable association. All workers in the editorial departments of the daily newspapers in Illinois, Iowa and Missouri and the publishers of the papers were made eligible to membership.

Under the reorganization the publication of a bulletin will be started. It will be of interest to the newspaper workers and publishers in the States. Personal mention is to be given to the doings of the newspaper workers on the papers having membership. Staff changes are to be told, mention is to be made of accomplishments of reporters and editors in securing and handling notable stories and other news of interest to the newspaper workers and publishers will be given. The bulletin will also tell of the needs of the different newspapers wanting new and additional help.

All Will Co-operate

It will be the aim of the Association to serve as a co-operative body. The members in the various cities will pledge themselves to be of service to each other papers and fellow members in the various other cities. To give news information that may be of interest in some other city represented by membership is one of the new pledges.

When the meeting came to a close Sunday night the membership represented newspapers in central and western Illinois, eastern Missouri and southeastern Iowa. Newly elected officers were instructed to carry on a campaign to enlarge the membership.

The meeting in Quincy was well attended and highly enjoyed by those present. It was a two-day meeting, with the first day, Saturday, given over to an all-day boat excursion on a specially chartered boat to Keokuk. At that place the members of the party were permitted to make an inspection of the Keokuk power dam, the first time this privilege has been given to anyone since the outbreak of the war.

The business meeting was held Sunday in the Quincy chamber of commerce. Shop and experience talks were made, and the plans for enlarging the membership were threshed out. A banquet was later held in one of Quincy's leading hotels, followed by an auto ride through Quincy's park system, residential and factory districts.

Dean Williams, of the University of Missouri School of Journalism; Perley Boone, city editor of the Chicago Tribune, and Frank H. Behymer, assistant city editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, were on the program to make talks at the meeting, but none of them were able to attend.

Officers Elected

Officers elected for the new year were: Roy Critchfield, of the Bloomington (Ill.) Pantagraph, president; Paul B. Whallon, Fort Madison (Ia.) Evening Democrat, vice-president; John M. Schonecker, (Ill.) Journal, secretary-treasurer; W. T. Eddy, Quincy Herald; Charles L. Miller, Burlington (Ia.) Hawkeye; Ralph L. Sisson, Decatur (Ill.) Herald; W. A. Jacksonville (Ill.) Journal, and Miss Iloura Murphy, Fort Madison (Ia.) Evening Democrat, executive committee.

The place and time for the next meeting was left with the executive committee to decide.

COMBINE FOR STATE NEWS

Three Texas Dailies Co-operate in New Leased Wire Service

DALLAS, Tex., July 28.—To improve their state news service the Dallas Morning News, Galveston Daily News and the San Antonio Express have inaugurated a leased wire service. The wire runs from Dallas to Galveston, via San Antonio and Austin, and all news gathered by any one of the three papers is interchanged. The state has been divided into three districts and each paper is held responsible for protection on all news originating in its district and is given charge of all correspondents in that district. The plan enables the papers to exercise a closer supervision over correspondents and affords a greatly improved service.

Narrowly Escaped "Blimp" Fate

CHICAGO, July 27.—The terrible dirigible disaster in Chicago, July 21, which cost the lives of two newspapermen passengers, nearly added three others to its fatality list. In a half-hour preliminary trial, Robert H. Rhodes, city editor of the Chicago Evening Post; George Putnam Stone, of the Post news staff, and Eddie Mahoney, reporter for the Chicago Evening American, all made a flight, leaving the machine at Grant Park exactly six minutes before the catastrophe.

Mt. Vernon (Wash.) Argus Sold

MT. VERNON, Wash., July 29.—Sale of the Argus, by Fred Ornes to Ray Eldridge, of Kansas City, and Ray Thorpe, of Hoquiam, Wash., is announced. Transfer of management will take place August 1. Mr. Ornes had published the Argus since 1903.

Veteran Omaha Man Dead

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., July 25.—Charles P. Williams of Edgar, Neb., a former Omaha newspaper man, died a few days ago at this city, aged 70 years. He worked on Omaha newspapers for forty years, and also edited newspapers in Grand Island and other cities.

Says Trade Papers Should Have Human Interest

Their Readers Would Welcome It, Floyd W. Parsons Says at Luncheon in His Honor

"There is romance in business, and I have become convinced recently that the readers of business publications like to read about it," said Floyd W. Parsons at a luncheon given in his honor by the Editorial Conference of the New York Business Publishers Association.

The luncheon, which was held at the Automobile Club last Friday, was commemorative of Mr. Parsons' having retired from his position as editor of Coal Age, to become a member of the staff of the Saturday Evening Post, specializing in the writing of human interest stories of trade under the heading, "Everybody's Business."

"The work I have been doing on the Saturday Evening Post has made me see that human interest is latent in even what seems to be the most matter-of-fact subjects, and I believe writers on technical publications should develop it," he said.

"Furthermore, I believe that technical publications should not confine their writing solely to their own lines of trade. I am sure that their readers would welcome a broader field for both news and editorial comment."

Mr. Parsons was chairman of the executive committee of the Editorial Conference of the Business Publishers Association, and speakers at the luncheon, which was largely attended, were enthusiastic in their references to the zeal and interest he had taken in the work of the organization.

W. W. Macon, managing editor of Iron Age, was chairman; David Beecroft, editorial director of the Class Journal Company, another speaker, presented Mr. Parsons with a handsome traveling bag, on behalf of his former associates in the association.

Reduction in R. F. D. Route Lengths

OSWEGO, N. Y., July 28—Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Blakslee has rendered to Congressmen and Mott Snell a report on rural mail changes in Lewis and St. Lawrence Counties as a result of the order of July 1, revising the order of May 1, showing decreases in the route lengths. The report shows the average length of rural mail routes in Lewis County prior to May 1 was 23.94 miles; May 1 it was increased to 24.9 miles, and July 1 it was reduced to 24.3 miles. In St. Lawrence County the original length of rural mail routes was 24.12 miles, which was increased to 25.92 and then reduced to 25.71.

Col. Griffith J. Griffith Dead in Los Angeles

Was Noted California Philanthropist, Former Newspaper Man, Mining Expert and Land Owner

Los Angeles, Cal., July 25.—Col. Griffith J. Griffith, newspaper man, philanthropist and mining expert, died here a few days ago. Mr. Griffith was born in Glamorganshire, South Wales, Great Britain, January 4, 1850. He came to America in 1865, settling in Ashland, Pa. In 1873 he came to California and located in San Francisco, where he engaged in business as manager of the Herald Publishing Company. In 1878 he became mining correspondent for the Alta California, the San Francisco paper for which Mark Twain wrote his famous travel letters, which later were published as "Innocents Abroad."

In his capacity as reporter Col. Griffith became thoroughly acquainted with the mining industry of three Coast States, as well as of Nevada. He gave up reporting and became a mining expert, being employed to examine and report on properties owned or controlled by various mining syndicates.

As a mining expert Col. Griffith acquired a small fortune. In 1882 he came to Los Angeles and purchased the Los Feliz Rancho, consisting of 4,000 acres in what now is Hollywood. He made other fortunate investments in land which accrued enormously in value with the growth of the city. Among other things he donated Griffith Park to Los Angeles.

Col. Griffith had taken an active interest in the welfare of the city for the last thirty-seven years. He formerly was a member of the Chamber of Commerce, Merchants and Manufacturers' Association and the Jonathan Club.

CAPT. AUPPERLE DIES OF TYPHUS

Red Cross Officer Was Well Known U. S. Newspaper Man

Capt. Harold Aupperle, newspaperman and member of the Red Cross Commission to Serbia, died of typhus at Nove Varosh, Serbia, June 18. He was born in Sioux City, Ia., and prior to the war had been managing editor of the Grand Junction (Colo.) News; news editor of the Grand Junction Sentinel, and a special correspondent for Denver and Salt Lake papers, covering a large territory in Colorado and western Utah. He also worked for a number of papers in California.

Capt. Aupperle was widely known as an athlete, being captain of the Stanford University track team. Funeral services were held from the residence of the Red Cross Commissioner in Belgrade. A company of Serbian soldiers accompanied the body to the grave on a pontoon covered hill that overlooks the Danube, and fired a salute of honor as the last words of the service were pronounced.

Obituary

John Mahin, for fifty years editor of the Muscatine Journal, died in Chicago, July 24, following an illness of three weeks. Mr. Mahin was for many years the dean of Iowa newspaper editors. He was a pathfinder in the temperance crusade, and his home was one of several to be dynamited some years ago as a result of his fight on the saloon. John Mahin was born on the eighth of December, 1833, at Noblesville, Ind. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Bloomington (now Muscatine) Herald in 1847. In 1851, the name of the Herald was changed to the Muscatine Journal. In 1856 the daily edition was established; it was first a Whig and later a republican paper, and one of the firm, unflinching advocates of temperance. He is survived by his wife, Anna Lee Mahin, and four children—John Lee Mahin and H. J. Mahin, of New York City, Mrs. Louis T. Jaume, Chicago, and Mrs. J. Warren Alford, of East Orange, N. J.

Professor Spina, former editor of La Lara in Lima, N. Y., and one of the best-known Italian residents of the city, died a few days ago. Mr. Spina was born in Missanello, Potenza, Italy, 62 years ago. He received collegiate education and for a score of years was engaged in teaching. He came to America in 1905. He had been editor of La Lara from its founding, and about 10 years ago became its proprietor. In September last he sold the property, but retained the editorship until April last, when failing health compelled him to retire.

Miss Nora Donovan, for 26 years a cook at the Boston Press Club, is dead.

John J. Green, president of the Green News Service Company, Kansas City, Mo., died July 19 of apoplexy, at Milwaukee, while on an automobile tour. A widow and two sons survive him.

Samuel B. Shilling, publisher of the Chicago Dairy Produce Journal and formerly president of the National Creamery Butter Makers' Association, died July 22 in Chicago, aged 66 years.

Howard F. Bliss, one of the pioneer publishers of Wisconsin and president of the Janesville (Wis.) Printing Company, died July 24, aged 75 years. He also was superintendent of the state school for the blind from 1895 to 1901.

I.) newspapers, and later sporting editor of the Detroit Free Press, died in Providence last week, following an operation for internal trouble resulting from gas poisoning received while in France. He was 57 years of age, a member of several Catholic organizations and of the Pen and Pencil Club.

Charles F. Erdman, formerly an editorial writer for the New York Staats-Zeitung, died last week of cancer, aged 64 years.

Will F. Archibald, the man who handled the first cable across the Atlantic (addressed by Queen Victoria to the President of the United States), died at Nanaimo, B. C., July 26, aged 81 years. He began telegraph operating at fourteen years.

Thomas A. Feeley, for more than 15 years foreman of the Boston Post's mailing room, is dead.

Charles E. Trahern, 49, for 18 years connected with the Kansas City Star mailing department, died July 23 in St. Louis. He had been connected with St. Louis and Kansas City newspapers for thirty years.

Nathaniel S. Wilson, 35, former Salina (Kan.) newspaper man, died at Iola, Kan., where he was court reporter.

Patterson Gets Fox Film Account

The advertising account of the Fox Film Corporation has been placed in charge of the W. A. Patterson Company, Inc., 1 Madison avenue, New York. Extensive advertising will be started in the very near future. It is claimed that the Fox Film Company will spend the largest amount of money ever put into an advertising campaign by a member of the moving picture industry, intending to make good the slogan, "Fox Films Encircle the Globe."

WARMLY WELCOMED IN WINNIPEG

48 Hours Spent by N. E. A. Members in Winnipeg Filled with Hearty Expressions of International Good Will —Received by Officials

(BY TELEGRAPH)

WINNIPEG, Man., July 29.—The two hundred members of National Editorial Association of the United States, who arrived from the South yesterday morning and left tonight for their swing across the Great Western plains, are a happy lot. From the moment they crossed the border into the land of their northern cousins, officials of the Canadian Government, of the Manitoba Government, of the city of Winnipeg, and the press of Western Canada fell upon their necks and proceeded to show them a good time. The whole forty-eight hours spent in Winnipeg were filled with hearty expressions of goodwill between Canadian and American peoples.

The party is scheduled to arrive back in Winnipeg by August 26. Newspaper men from as far West as Colorado and as far East as Maine are in the party.

Illinois Best Represented

Illinois has the largest delegation for any one State. The dean of the gathering is F. M. Mills, one time editor of Des Moines Daily Register. He is 89 years old, and carries a dress suit in order to take full advantage of all social opportunities. He claims he is 89 years young.

Guy Hardy, president of the National Editorial Association, and a member of Congress, is along. He is publisher of Canon City, Colo., Daily Record. The party made the Royal Alexandria Hotel its headquarters in Winnipeg. They were taken on an automobile ride around the city, visiting the Grain Exchange, Agricultural College, old Fort Garry, which marks the foundation of Winnipeg, and other spots of interest.

A section of agricultural editors were taken out forty miles in the country to see the working out of the Manitoba Rural Credits Act. In the evening the visitors were entertained at a dance at the Royal Alexandria Hotel. In the afternoon the women of the party were guests of the Women's Canadian Club at luncheon.

Guests of City and Government

On Tuesday the editors were guests of the city of Winnipeg at luncheon at Assiniboine Park, and in the evening were guests of the Winnipeg Board of Trade at a banquet at the Fort Garry Hotel.

The party left on special train at 11 o'clock as guests of the Canadian Government. President Hardy and other members of the party expressed delight at the hospitality shown by Winnipeg people. Hundreds of citizens gathered at the station to cheer the visitors as their train drew out. The editors cheered lustily in returning the compliment.

J. Bruce Walker, Canadian Commissioner of Immigration, and a former newspaper man, and prominent officials of the Canadian railways are accompanying the party to the coast. Steps are to be made at all principal cities in Western Canada.

Pawtucket Times Names Representatives

PAWTUCKET, R. I., July 29.—The Evening Times has just announced the appointment of Gilman, Nicoll & Ruthman as Canadian advertising representatives for the eastern and western territories. The appointment is of special interest, because for a number of years the Evening Times has been handling all eastern advertising from the home office. The Evening Times will shortly increase the size of its plant.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER will cover the N. E. A. Convention fully by telegraph.

PARIS PAPERS AVERT PRINTERS' STRIKE

Union Vote Overwhelmingly in Favor, but Action Reconsidered When Publishers Promise Aid in Reducing the Cost of Living

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

PARIS, July 11.—Paris was within an ace of having no morning papers the day after the ceremony at Versailles to describe how peace was signed. The typographers and allied unions met the day of the great event and discussed whether they should strike that night or not. They demanded 25 francs a day for day work ($5 at normal exchange) and 30 francs ($6) for night work. The proprietors offered, respectively, 23 and 26 ($4.60 and $5.20).

When the vote was taken there was a majority of only 48 for, 813 voters against a strike.

Try to Reduce Living Cost

The proprietors' terms, however, were accepted on one condition, that the press should at once inaugurate and carry on an active campaign for reducing the cost of living, as the typographers recognized that increased wages always result in increasing the cost of living.

As a result of this vote a deputation of employers and employed connected with printing, books as well as papers, had an interview with M. Clemenceau and made certain propositions to him on which he has since acted—that frontier restrictions on food should be lifted; that parishes should be enabled to construct homes for workers, and create communal co-operatives for the sale of food stuffs; that minimum tariffs should be applied to the transport of food stuffs, and that severe fines should be inflicted on speculators.

Tery's Sensational Journalism

Bonsoir (written in one word), Gustave Tery's bright evening paper, has not been in existence seven months and yet has been seized by the police seven times:

(1) For reproducing an interview with Marshal Foch which had appeared in the Daily Mail, London edition, but not in the Paris edition.

(2) Three days later for alluding to certain passages of the same interview.

(3) For reproducing an item from the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune to the effect that President Wilson was about to publish a message to the Italian people.

(4) For reproducing from the Antwerp Gazette a report that Foch and Poincare were about to resign and from the Independance Belge that serious differences had arisen between Clemenceau and Foch on the military terms of the peace treaty.

(5) For publishing certain extracts from the peace treaty.

(6) For an article headed "Aoh, Yes!" accusing Clemenceau of having been "done by his friend Lloyd George" over the peace negotiations, and

(7) For a cartoon showing a winged figure representing peace, draped in American and English flags, giving one oyster shell, marked "Glury, Bankruptey" to a tattered figure representing France, and marked "Ruin, Slavery" to an equally tattered Germany, conveying the suggestion that the oyster has been kept by the American-English representative.

Reconsidered This Time

Tery's equally lively morning paper, L'Oeuvre, bravely announced on June 23 that after that date (the peace treaty having been signed) it would no longer submit its proofs to the censorship; but the director of the Press Bureau, the official name for the censorship, warned him that he would have the paper seized every day before it left the printing office unless the proofs were sent in for examination and the threat was sufficient.

NEW HOME FOR ST. PAUL NEWS

Site Is Purchased for Concrete Building to Cost $500,000

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 30.—The Daily News has purchased a site for a large new publishing home, to cost approximately $500,000, on 4th street, between Cedar and Minnesota streets, and will begin work on a concrete fireproof building immediately. It will be completed within the next 12 months.

The building the Daily News now occupies has become too small, because of the growth the paper has enjoyed ever since it was started 19 years ago.

New North Carolina Daily

HIGH POINT, N. C., July 28.—The Republican, a new six-day morning paper, was launched here today. George W. Holloway, former editor and manager of the Asheboro Bulletin, a weekly Republican paper, is manager, and F. W. Prather is editor. Aside from covering the local field, Universal Service has been installed for world news.

EDITOR SENTENCED FOR CONTEMPT

Southerner Will Enter Jail Monday—Attorneys Say First Time Libel Conviction Was Ever Secured on Circumstantial Evidence

MEMPHIS, Tenn., July 30.—Edward T. Leech, editor of the Memphis Press, will enter the county jail here Monday, August 4, to begin serving a 10-day sentence for alleged contempt of court, as the climax of what his lawyers say is one of the strangest cases in legal history.

Leech was given the maximum sentence provided under Tennessee law for having printed in the Press, July 20, 1919, a general political editorial which mentioned no names, referred to no court or any cases and which was admittedly intended to influence an election, only 10 days distant. He was convicted of being in contempt of Chancellor Israel H. Peres, a candidate for re-election. The conviction was sustained by the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court refused to review it, thus ending the case.

Following the final upholding of the case, Mr. Leech refused an offer by the prosecution to suspence sentence if he would file in court a written statement amounting to an explanation and apology. Leech filed in court at the start of the trial a sworn answer admitting the authority of the editorial in question and denying the intent or malice but declaring that it was obviously of a general nature and was aimed at no specific judge or case.

He was found guilty, however, of having referred to a decision in a political lawsuit which had been rendered the day previously by Chancellor Peres. While the decision had been rendered the case was technically pending until the time limit for asking a rehearing had expired.

The editorial charged that a political machine had caused waste, inefficiency, dishonest elections and untold shame, and had brought even the courts and judges into disrepute.

Leech pleaded the truth of his references to the courts, citing the fact that only a short time previously the judge of the criminal court of Memphis had been impeached and removed by the legislature, sitting as the State's highest court, for corruption in office. He swore that he made no specific reference to any individual, that he was dealing with a general political condition and that those whom the shoe fitted could put it on.

It is contended also that, even had he referred directly to Chancellor Peres, the latter was a candidate for election before the people and could not punish any citizen for criticism of his fitness for office, except in so far as he was protected by such civil procedure as is open to any ordinary citizens, no witness testified that he knew the case referred to Chancellor Peres, or that Leech had made any other attack on Peres.

Mr. Leech's lawyers say the case was decided on circumstantial evidence, the chief of which was that the editorial appeared the day after Peres had rendered a political decision and that the ticket supported by the Press had substituted another candidate for Peres.

The Court of Appeals opined that the substitution of names was free reading matter, though the list of candidacies was printed as paid political advertising, was so marked and receipted bills for the advertising are still held by the business manager.

Democratic weekly of a far West county seat paid owner $3,675.80 in year ending April 30, 1919, for his personal effort and income on the investment. Can be bought for $8,500; $5,500 cash necessary.

Lawyers defending Leech declare that this is the first case on record where a contempt conviction was found for writing which contained no names of any judge or any litigation, which obviously could not interfere with a decision already rendered, which was intended to influence an election close at hand, and in which the offended judge was a candidate.

GRANDIN WELCOMED TO NEW YORK

Ziegfeld Follies and the Midnight Frolic were treating the assemblage to an exhibition of Grade A singing and dancing, through the courtesy of Florenz Ziegfeld. A little six-year-old ballet dancer proved the popular favorite of the evening.

Lieut.-Col. G. Edward Buxton, Jr., of the Providence Journal, was next introduced. Col. Buxton has just returned from service in France, where he won three citations for gallantry, and was warmly received. He said he had hardly time to get his bearings in the new order of things home, but he did see evidence on every hand that the men who served Uncle Sam in the war were returning home "100 per cent Americans, and were bound to make their influence for good felt in every walk of life.

Speaking of Bolshevism, he gave the following example of the attitude of soldiers toward it:

Soldiers Won't Stand Bolshevism

"In the month of April, while my regiment was at Bordeaux waiting to sail for home, Bolshevist propagandists began looking for support among the men. They listened for a while until one day the agitator picked out a select bunch of rough and ready fellows for likely converts and launched forth on a speech he thought would convert them.

They stood it for a few minutes—until the Bolshevist reached the point of advocating the nationalization of women. He just got that far—and no further. A doughboy stepped forward, and thrusting forth his chin and fist half an inch from the Bolshevist's nose, said: 'Where the h— do you get dat stuff.' That ended the propaganda right there, and the agitator had to scurry away for his life.

"That is the spirit Uncle Sam's soldiers are bringing home. Watch them. Their influence will tend to make better Americans all.

Grandin Couldn't Reply

Mr. Grandin was too touched by the evening's tribute to make an address, and the hosts were satisfied with a simple "thank you all" from him.

A. H. Hulscher, one of his associates in the Liberty Agency, and long a worker with Mr. Grandin, expressed hearty thanks for the welcome accorded them, and assured all they would give the best in them to make good the high expectations of their friends.

J. W. Scott of the Manchester Guardian lent an international flavor to the occasion. He was one of the official welcomers, and said he felt highly honored to be present and pay tribute to an American advertising man such as Mr. Grandin. He declared the Manchester Guardian has long been an admirer of American opinion, and his presence with is that Great Britain and America will continue to be drawn more closely together in bonds of sympathy and mutual knowledge.

DEMOCRATIC LEADER HEADS DELAWARE DAILY

THE new president of the Wilmington Every Evening Printing Company, Josiah Marvel, has long been prominent in the public affairs of Delaware, always manifesting the keenest interest in matters and movements pertaining to the general welfare. And it was but following the natural trend of his activities when he became identified with the only Democratic daily paper published in the State of Delaware. He is one of the leaders of his party in the State and prominent in its higher councils.

JOSIAH MARVEL

He was born at Georgetown, Del., January 18, 1866, and comes of a family long prominent in Maryland and Delaware, one of his ancestors, John Marvel, coming from England and settling in Virginia prior to 1663, subsequently removing to Worcester county, Maryland, which is now a part of Delaware. Part of the laud granted to him and his son Thomas is still the property of the family.

Josiah Marvel was educated in public and private schools, and studied law under Federal Judge George Gray. He was admitted to the bar in Wilmington twenty-five years ago, specializing in corporation law, and is now a member of the firm of Marvel, Layton & Goldsborough, with his brother, David C. Marvel, Caleb S. Layton and W. Laird Goldsborough.

Mr. Marvel has been chairman or vice-chairman of various public committees, and in 1918 was president of the Wilmington Associated Charities and of the local council of the Boy Scouts.

Mr. Scott said the warm welcome accorded him since he has been visiting America—and especially New York—has impressed him deeply.

An Englishman's Tribute to U. S.

"When any of you advertising and newspaper men come to England be sure to visit me in Manchester, and it will be my delight to return, as best I can, the hospitality shown me while I have been here," said Mr. Scott, who intends sailing for home August 9. "You will find that London is not England, but that Manchester is the industrial capital of England."

The toastmaster read a telegram from Charles H. Stoddard of Chicago, expressing the wishes of Mr. Grandin's friends in that city for his success in New York.

Chairman McClellan and Hugh O'Donnell of New York Times closed the speaking program. Mr. O'Donnell predicted the highest degree of success for Mr. Grandin by horoscope and head character reading, and likened him to Thomas Moore, the Irish poet, "whose statue in Dublin needs no name nor tablet to identify it."

"A Jolly Good Fellow"

Jocularly, Mr. O'Donnell blamed Mr. Grandin for bringing prohibition to New York. "Frank Grandin started the trouble by getting folks to stop drinking coffee (and taking Postum instead) as a means of taking the edge off the taste of 'the night before,'" Mr. O'Donnell said.

"Undoubtedly that put the thought into the prohibitionists' heads to go him one better and remove the reason for the 'taste.'

"Frank, withal, we forgive and welcome him as a business man and resident of good old New York."

As a fitting close, with a few words by Gen. Agnus on upholding the honor of America above all things, the evening's festivities concluded with the old familiar and hearty "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" by all.

CANADIAN WEALTH

Figures Showing Why Canadian Business Is Well Worth the Most Intensive Cultivation by Manufacturers looking for the Best Places to Sell Good Merchandise. Figures of Great Interest

CANADA has nearly 15,000,000 acres of wheat, yielding approximately 235,000,000 bushels, which will bring around $455,000,000 in money.

CANADA has nearly 13,500,000 acres of oats, yielding approximately 405,000,000 bushels, which will bring around $280,000,000 in money.

THE total value of the field crops of Canada will approximate $1,150,000,000 in money.

CANADA has other resources, too. The fisheries, the mineral wealth, the lumber valuation, all go to swell the total wealth of Canada so that it mounts well into the big billions class.

CANADIANS have the money, they have the ideas, they have the desire and the tastes for the best of everything.

DAILY NEWSPAPERS published in Canada, with the Canadian viewpoint, the Canadian ideas and the Canadian angle on things reach Canadians IN THEIR HOMES, and manufacturers, co-operating with local merchants, through these daily newspapers complete the cycle in making the sale.

USE THESE DAILY NEWSPAPERS and watch your sales grow. It will prove more than gratifying.

CLEAN "MEDICAL" COPY PUTS TRIBUNE AHEAD

For years The Chicago Tribune has trailed other Chicago papers in "medical" lineage. Year after year it ranked fifth or sixth in this classification, although first in almost all others.

Recently, however, the situation has been changing. Worthy "medical" copy is increasing more rapidly than "quack" stuff. Although The Chicago Tribune's rigid censorship has been in no way relaxed, The Tribune ranked first in "medical" advertising in June and July, 1919. The total "medical" lineage in all Chicago papers for the two months was as follows: Tribune, 90,190; American, 78,758; Journal, 76,739; Herald-Examiner, 72,412; News, 30,333; Post, 12,719.

Note that of the following fifteen leading "medical" advertisers in the Chicago Tribune in June not one offers an internal remedy:

Marinello	Nestle's Food
Djer Kiss	Cutex
K. D. X.	Freezone
Scholl Foot Appliances	Pompeian
Pepsodent	Lysol
Cadum	Pebeco
Resinol	Tiz

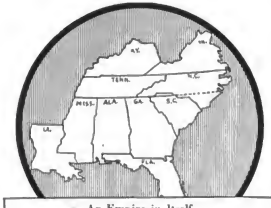
Mulsified Cocoanut Oil

All but three of the above placed more advertising in The Chicago Tribune than in any other Chicago paper during June.



"Toilet preparations" would be a better title than the outworn name "medical" for the above type of advertiser.

In June, 1919, The Chicago Tribune carried 90% more local display and 145% more foreign display than in June, 1918. The second Chicago paper carried a total increase, both local and foreign, of only 65%.

An Empire in Itself

The South—An Empire of Vast Importance

Four ways of looking at the South as a market for goods.

First—Area and population. People enough to work in, people enough to make it worth while. An empire in itself.

Second—Retail distribution. Figure how many sources there are for your products, be they what they may.

Third—Daily newspaper help—intensive cooperative effort at your disposal. Reaching the people via the home route.

Fourth—Sources of revenue. This list shows some of the principal agricultural productions, and there are many more. Note that there are no manufacturing statistics in this. The manufacturing activities of the South, already enormous, are growing larger every year.

Dealer and daily newspaper cooperation in this territory is sure to make a showing that will justify any expenditure.

PHILADELPHIA BUILDING AND LOAN LEADER

Greatest Loan Centre in Country, Convention is Told

Philadelphia is the greatest building and loan centre in the United States.

This statement was made by W. R. Adair, president of the Omaha Building and Loan Association, addressing the annual convention of the United States League of Building and Loan Associations, now in session at Detroit.

He said that since the B. and L. plan had been transplanted to the United States in 1831, Philadelphia had developed this method of thrift to a greater degree than any other community. As the result, Mr. Adair pointed out, Philadelphia enjoys the proud title of "The City of Homes."

He praised the proposed Federal building and loan bank system, and said it will provide ample means to meet building demands and also result in uniform legislation for building and loan associations in making B. and L. savings tax free.

Representatives of numerous associations in this city are at the convention and some will read papers. It is also expected that Philadelphians will be candidates for high office.

There are approximately 7,300 B. & L. Associations in the United States, of which 1,200 are in the City of Philadelphia, with assets exceeding $180,000,000.

Philadelphia now has 392,000 separate dwellings.

The North Philadelphia Tenants Protective Association will erect 6,000 dwellings at once.

All previous building records for July in Philadelphia were broken last month by an aggregated completed construction value $6,281,930 greater than for any previous July.

GREATEST CRISIS IN HISTORY FACES NEWSPAPER INDUSTRY, DECLARES S. S. CARVALHO

Noted Newspaper Authority Supports EDITOR & PUBLISHER in Warning—Twenty Per Cent More Paper Being Used Than Manufactured—Higher Prices Certain—Stocks On Hand Reach Danger Line—Department of Agriculture Asks Survey

"THE newspaper publishers of America are today facing the greatest crisis in the history of their business, and paramount of the causes is the newsprint situation," is the opinion expressed to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, by S. S. Carvalho, expert counsellor, former general manager of all publications of William Randolph Hearst and recognized authority on every branch of the newspaper making business.

Mr. Carvalho bases his belief on a survey of general conditions, backed by his years of experience. He warns the publishers of America that unless they do something at once to curb the excessive use of newsprint at the present time, the entire surplus will be exhausted and the coming months of December, January and February will be the gravest in the history of the newspaper industry. Many will find themselves up against a stone wall when they attempt to meet their paper needs.

Higher Prices Sure

The entire question, as Mr. Carvalho views it (and as was pointed out by EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week), is not one of paper price, but of available supply meeting excess demand. He does not believe an increase in the price of newspapers which would be followed by a circulation decline, would assist materially in solving the problem.

Recognizing the seriousness of the present situation, the United States Department of Agriculture has asked that immediate steps be taken to develop the pulpmaking industry in the Northwest and Alaska with a view of relieving the users of newsprint from depending entirely on foreign markets for their supply.

Use of Paper Is Excessive

That five cent news print will prevail in a very short time is now the belief of many paper manufacturers, but these same men say that the question of price is secondary as there will be not enough paper to go round if the present excessive use is not stopped.

In discussing the present situation with EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Carvalho said:

"The newspapers of America are today enjoying the greatest prosperity in their history. The present conditions are most unusual. This prosperity is the result of advertising volume with some increase of rate. Newspapers today are making money in months that were formerly looked upon as loss months; but there is going to be a reckoning.

"In October the publishers are liable to be confronted with a demand for a 40 per cent increase in wages, and at about the same time the shortage of paper will begin to be felt. The present excessive use of paper cannot continue indefinitely, for with the demand exceeding the supply it is only a question of time until the crisis will come.

"I would not be surprised to see five-cent-a-pound newsprint, but price is not going to be the worst of the publishers' troubles.

"The excessive use of paper during the present summer months has been caused by the unusual volume of advertising caused by the general prosperity of the country.

"Then there is a third contributing factor to the excessive use of white paper. This is the new advertiser who is establishing his business, product or products in the minds of the public at a cost of 35 cents on the dollar to himself and 65 cents on the dollar to the United States Government.

S. S. CARVALHO.

The Government's Toll

"This third factor has been created by the excessive and unfair excess profit and income tax laws. Advertising is chargeable to running expense and rather than pay the excessive demands of the law a part of the money that would otherwise go into the treasury of the United States is being spent with the newspapers to establish goodwill and trade-marks.

"When I say that the price of paper may go up I base that statement on the following facts:

"First—The labor cost per ton on white paper is now $20 against $10 four years ago.

"Second—It takes one ton of coal to make one ton of paper and coal at the mill has practically doubled in price.

"Third—The haul on pulp wood is growing greater each year, likewise the freight charges.

"Fourth—The 6 to 9 cent markets of Europe, South America and Australia are now asking for Canadian and United States paper.

Danger Point Reached

"The production of newsprint has been increased this year, roughly speaking, between 5 and 6 per cent, but the use of newsprint has increased 25 per cent. This means that 20 per cent of the paper now being used is not only coming out of the surplus, but is rapidly eating its way past the recognized margin of safety.

"Contrary to the practice of many years, no surplus has been built up by paper mills this summer for use next winter. Mill stocks are down to the danger point and the mills, in an effort to meet conditions, are rapidly using up their surplus supply of wood stock.

"With the wood piles disappearing price ceases to be the real question. There is only one thing to be done—newsprint must be conserved; but vertising which has carried a stream of wealth to the newspapers. Several things have contributed to this advertising activity. A great deal of it has been caused by a desire to find a place in the new world business of which the United States is to be the center; there has been an unusual increase in the established lines of

NEWS PRINT SAVING NEED URGED ON NORTH CAROLINA EDITORS

Dr. Taylor Startles Annual Convention with Facts and Figures on Production and Waste—J. A. Sharpe Elected President—Peace Treaty Endorsed.

WRIGHTSVILLE BEACH, N. C., Aug. 1.—At the annual convention of the North Carolina Press Association, held here yesterday and today, various matters of interest were discussed, such as the need for conserving news print, question of exchanges, the cash in advance plan for subscriptions, political advertising, etc. The cash in advance plan for subscriptions, it was almost unanimously agreed, is the only businesslike way of handling the question. Secretary of the Navy Daniels was a guest and speaker on the need for an adequate navy and U. S. merchant marine.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, J. A. Sharpe, Lumberton Robesonian; first vice president, R. T. Wade, Morehead City Coaster; second vice president, J. F. Hurley, Salisbury Post; third vice president, Parker Anderson, Wilmington Dispatch and Greensboro News; secretary-treasurer, John B. Sherrill, Concord Tribune (for 33rd term); historian, M. L. Shipman, French Broad Hustler; orator, Miss Beatrice Cobb, Morganton News-Herald; poet, B. L. St. Clair, Sanford Express; executive committee, W. C. Hammer, E. B. Jeffress, I. S. London, Santford Martin and H. B. Varner.

Twenty New Members Are Elected

By a rising vote the association elected Dr. William Laurie Hill poet emeritus.

Invitations from Waynesville and Greensboro to meet there in 1920, presented by J. D. Moon and E. B. Jeffress, respectively. The matter was left with the executive committee.

Twenty new members were received into the association, as follows:

J. D. Boone, Waynesville; J. B. Craigmiles, Bakersville; J. N. Flowers, Freemont; H. W. Haywood, Raleigh; W. Brodie Jones, Warrenton; W. H. Lindsay, Hamlet; Mrs. Carolina Land, Albemarle; G. L. Nesbit, Waxhaw; L. Bunlee Pope, Dunn; J. P. Rawley, High Point; R. G. Shockell, Scotland Neck; F. M. Shute, Roanoke Rapids; F. J. Triplett, Hertford; Ronald B. Wilson, Raleigh; Grey Gotham, Asheville; C. M. Brown, High Point; A. C. Hunneycutt, Albemarle; A. C. Johnson, Lumberton; O. J. Peterson, Clinton, and Ben Dixon McNeill, Wilmington.

News Print Situation Startling

The newspaper men were enabled to secure many facts of value from addresses by Dr. Jobe Taylor of Roanoke Rapids and Mrs. Caroline Land, managing editor of the Albemarle News, the latter succeeding in making her point that women have a place in newspaper work so clear and definite that the editors were ready at the conclusion of her very interesting talk to elect Miss Beatrice Cobb of Morganton orator for next year's meeting.

The paper read by Dr. Jobe Taylor, a paper manufacturer of Roanoke Rapids, was pronounced by W. C. Dowd, editor of the Charlotte News, to be the most remarkably informative paper on the news print situation he had ever heard. Dr. Taylor sketched in rapid outline the whole history of paper making and startled his hearers when he told them the paper mills of the country are producing only 75 per cent. of the paper that is being consumed and that the forests of this country are being depleted three times as fast as nature is reproducing them.

"We are wasting our forest products," Dr. Taylor warned "Nothing in the world is so appalling as the manner in which we are chopping away at the very vitals of the national life. He pointed out that substantially less paper is being produced today than was produced ten years ago. He urged that the North Carolina Press Association set in motion influences for the conservation of paper resources by the abatement of waste, by the growing of more timber and by other means.

The association heard with every evidence of interest an exposition of the state's new tax program by Tax Commissioner A. J. Maxwell.

Peace Treaty Endorsed

The report of the committee on resolutions committing the North Carolina Press Association to endorsement of the peace treaty without reservations was adopted by a rising vote of 30 to 3, and then made unanimous. A long argument against the treaty was led by Parker R. Anderson of the Greensboro Record and Wilmington Dispatch. Mr. Anderson said that the League of Nations plan hit at the very foundation of American independence and that "Section Ten" required this country to go immediately to the aid of France in the event she were attacked. The only unqualified negative vote was that cast by Mr. Anderson himself. But on Mr. Anderson's motion the vote was then made unanimous.

"The sex barrier is down. Convention and prejudice will not in the next few years keep a woman from success in whatever calling she elects," said Mrs. Caroline Land, of the Albemarle News, in a paper on "Woman and the Fourth Estate." "Woman," said Mrs. Land, "is in danger of finding her greatest hindrance in her own nature. The profession of journalism is strong with the fiber in the bone that she needs more than the player and the ship more than the crew. The personal element is abandoned. A complete sheet, bearing the limitations of no man's nature, is the apotheosis of good journalism. It's a game that a woman can play. But if she wants it, she will be under the necessity of turning out her copy without the figleaf imprint."

H. Gale Braxton of the Kinston Free Press, in a paper on "Propaganda Advertising," declared that the time had come when a newspaper publisher had to distinguish between free advertising and the real news of the day. Newspaper men must apply the same principles to theirs the same as any other business enterprise and the propagandist must be referred to the counting room for a rate card. Mr. Braxton excepted propaganda sent out by the government bureaus with educational aims and appeared to have in mind principally the business man who seeks to secure advertising in the form of so-called news matter.

With the subject, "What Is an Adequate Price for a Weekly or Semi-Weekly Newspaper?," J. A. Sharpe, editor of the Lumberton Robesonian, reached the conclusion, subject to amendment depending on circumstances, that the subscription price ought to be three times the cost of the white paper and the mailing costs combined. He said, however, that it was a question largely for each publisher and that it was difficult to lay down a general rule. He thought a committee ought to be appointed to consider what would be a suitable relation between advertising and subscription receipts.

President Whitehead supplemented the remarks of both Mr. Sharpe and Mr. Braxton with the declaration that the papers must make both advertising and subscription yield more or continue to live on glory and work for nothing.

The editors witnessed the launching of "The Cape Fear," the first concrete ship built by government shipyard. In his address, Secretary Daniels said:

"Today, as never before, the American people understand the real meaning of the ocean. The war brought to it a realization of our weakness on the seas and never again will we be in the humiliating position we found ourselves in in 1917.

"We will build a merchant marine which shall carry our commerce to the ends of the earth. We will never again permit the use of this nation to pass into the hands of others."

In an address on the place of the editor in reconstruction, Roland F. Beasley, state commissioner of public welfare, said:

"At no time previous has the impulse for service been so great as it is today. The editor can be the leading spirit of public service and apply it to the complex questions of community life."

Advertising Pays Fruit Growers

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 4.—California's annual fruit sales would probably be something like 4,000 carloads today, as in 1893, but for advertising, declared Paul Findlay, of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, in an address to Seattle advertising men. He declared that the expansion of this industry to an annual output of 50,000 carloads of fruit is exclusively due to extensive advertising.

"The successful business man has the goods and tells about it, while the failure may have the goods but does not tell about it," he said. "This is the difference between the merchant who advertises and the merchant who does not."

More than $500,000 will be expended in advertising the apples of central and eastern Washington state this year in Eastern newspapers and other publications, according to an announcement made by P. R. Parks, general manager of the Co-operative Fruit Growers' Agency, with headquarters in Spokane, Wash. Last year's advertising appropriation was $67,000.

PREDICT FIELDING'S ELECTION

Considered Favorite for Leadership of Canadian Liberal Party

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Indications are that Hon. W. S. Fielding, Editor of the Montreal Journal of Commerce, will be chosen as the leader of the Liberal Party at the national convention this week in Ottawa to select a successor to the late Wilfred Laurier.

Mr. Fielding was formerly editor of the Halifax Chronicle, but gave up journalism many years ago to become premier of Nova Scotia. He held that post for twelve consecutive years, and then for fifteen years was Minister of Finance in the Laurier Cabinet. When the Liberal Party was defeated in 1911 on the Reciprocity Agreement, Mr. Fielding again took up journalism, this time in Montreal. He was re-elected to Parliament two years ago where he has been an outstanding figure. His selection as leader of the Liberal Party will eventually mean the Premiership of the Dominion, it is believed.

POSTPONE ROTAGRAVURE

Will Not Be Resumed in Cleveland for Present—"P. D." Improves Plant

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 6.—The Plain Dealer and the Sunday News-Leader have decided not to reissue a rotagravure section at present. Arrangements had about been completed whereby each of these morning papers would resume such publications, which were discontinued during the latter part of the war period.

The Plain Dealer has just completed the installation of an additional press, which is necessary to meet increased circulation and advertising demands and has spent about $7,000 in installing an up-to-date wash room, including a dozen shower baths for employes, on the fifth, or editorial floor.

Captain Playfair Returns Home

MONTREAL, Aug. 6.—Capt. W. E. Playfair, who went to Siberia as Canadian Press correspondent with the Canadian Expeditionary Force, has returned to Montreal and a few days ago addressed a meeting of the Montreal Publicity Association. Before going overseas Captain Playfair was on the staff of the Montreal Star. The captain is not able to find much comfort in the Russian situation. He was of the opinion that the Russians would have to work out their own salvation and that the process would be a long and tedious one.

Canadian Soldier's Paper Stops

MONTREAL, Aug. 5.—The Canadian Daily Record, the overseas soldiers' paper, ceased publication July 31. It commenced publication in the spring of 1915 as a newsslip attached to the trenchline orders of the day. It gradually grew in size and importance, until it became a six to eight-page paper filled with illustrations, editorials and news of the Canadian overseas forces. It also contained home news which was cabled overseas by a bureau established in Ottawa.

Hutchinson Editor Homeward Bound

HUTCHINSON, Kan., Aug. 5.—William Y. Morgan, owner and editor of the News, who has been engaged in war work for the Y. M. C. A., is believed to have sailed for home about July 28. Mr. Morgan was engaged in Y work with the 35th Division. Reports have been touring Germany securing material for a book he contemplates writing.

BETTER UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN NATIONS OF WORLD MUST BE MISSION OF PRESS

American Editors and Publishers Join English Newspaper Makers in Demand for an Established System of Interchange—J. R. Scott of Manchester Guardian Says His Paper Will Send Men Regardless of General Action.

A TALL and almost thin man, whose eyes twinkle easily and who talks like an American, but has the mannerisms of an Englishman, came here to look us over a few weeks ago, and he is very much pleased with what he has seen, and likes a great many things that he has heard from us.

His name is J. R. Scott. He is the member of a family of leading English journalists and at present is general manager of the much-quoted Manchester Guardian, of which his father has been editor for nearly half a century.

Mr. Scott not only believes that a closer relationship between the Anglo-Saxon races is necessary for the future peace of the world and the security of the rights of the United States and the British Empire, and that the mission of bringing about a better understanding belongs to the press of the countries concerned, but is today putting into practice, insofar as the Guardian is concerned, agencies that will aid in this development.

"I do not know the details of the plans for the interchange of men between the newspapers of the United States and England, but I do know that the idea is a good one, from which not only the newspapers but the people of both countries would profit, and we should, by all means, attempt it," said Mr. Scott to EDITOR AND PUBLISHER. Continuing, he said:

Wants All Departments Included

"I object to the use of the phrase 'interchange of editors,' however, and do not see how that could be made to bring all the results desired. I do not think the interchange should be confined to editors or department heads in the editorial department, and I would strongly urge the widening the scope of the entire proposition to include even the business side of the newspaper as well as the editorial.

"We would probably derive the greatest benefit from a business office exchange, but that should not stand in the way, for we can all help one another. Publishing and advertising, there is no doubt, has been developed to a finer point in the United States than in England, and there are many things that I want to learn from you, even if I have to make another trip back for that purpose.

Guardian Will Send Man Here

"I think so well of the interchange idea that if it should for any reason fail to go through, although I cannot conceive of that, I propose to send some of the fellows of our paper over here to learn something about your newspapers and your people.

"It would be my idea that the men exchanged in the editorial departments would secure a better understanding of the people and the newspapers if given roving assignments as reporters.

"In this connection, I think the men from our side will have a little the best of things for a time, for our papers, as a rule, have established styles of long standing that we rarely break, while your papers change style at times with an ease that is startling.

"What I mean is that your papers more generally adapted themselves to the style of an editor or writer, while in England the editor and writer must adapt himself to the style of the paper I rather imagine that would prove hard for a time for the American.

The Mission of the Press

"The new friendship that is to be established between the English-speaking people is entirely in the hands of the press, and I think that a thing like the interchange which they can do to bring about the results we all desire should receive every consideration from the men of both countries."

"It was with pleasure that I learned of the appointment of James Bone, our London editor to the British Committee to investigate interchange."

The Manchester Guardian, in carrying out its advocacy of a closer relationship between England and the United States, has already taken the first step and is now issuing a weekly edition for American readers.

This edition prints the week's digest of news and timely English editorial comment that carries with it an overseas interest. The new edition is made with a view of informing Americans and Canadians of events and opinions across the sea, which hold special interest for the people of North America.

In keeping with the new policy of closer relation of the Guardian, an American office has been opened in New York and a Canadian office in Toronto. Mr. Scott has made it plain that this is only the first step in the greater plans of the famous paper. W. J. Curtiss, formerly of the London Times, is in charge of the New York business office.

Not His First Visit

The present visit of Mr. Scott is not his first to this country. Twenty years ago he was student in the department of mechanical science at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, but at that time, he says, he did not give a thought to the newspapers of the country and the business methods employed in making them, which has caused the conditions he has found on the present trip to be all the more amazing. He confesses that now he even likes our high office buildings, with their increased facilities for sunlight and fresh air.

While he recognizes a general condition prevailing in the world that means a readjustment in established conduct, he believes that the newspaper business as a whole is on the eve of greater prosperity than ever before, and that it has a wider field for its efforts than was true a few years ago.

Will Not Lower Prices

In speaking of publishing conditions in England, Mr. Scott said:

"Prices of newspapers in England will not be reduced, not in the immediate future, at least. Some few papers have increased the size of their editions, although it has not reached the pre-war days, but taken as a whole, changes that the war forced upon us as a means of conservation, have come to stay. I do not think that we will again return to the lavish use of paper that prevailed before the war. Our editors generally agree that there will be no return to the multiplication of special features, which was a very common practice before paper economy became a necessity."

splendid thing that nobody can dispute. It would prevent those misunderstandings and misconceptions that are usually at the root of international bitternesses.

If every leading city in Great Britain had one or more editorial experts with a comprehensive and intelligent understanding of American affairs, all the ridiculous rumors and downright lies would be nailed on the spot, and the really constructive work being done there would be rightly interpreted to our friends over there. Of course, British editorial experts here would perform a reciprocal service.

No doubt many criticisms can be leveled at the scheme, and as I sometimes drop into humor myself, I am sure I could write a rip-roaring satire on all the things it would not do. But the very salutary mission outlined above is something that it would do, and something that would be well worth while.

MARCELLUS E. FOSTER
PRESIDENT, HOUSTON CHRONICLE

The suggestion that British and American newspapers exchange staff men as discussed in a recent issue of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER impresses me most favorably.

I would be very glad indeed to have

WHAT AMERICANS SAY ABOUT INTERCHANGE

American newspaper makers are showing a deep interest in the subject of staff interchanges, not only with the newspapers of England, but other countries as well, as is shown by the following discussion of the subject by EDITOR & PUBLISHER readers:

MELVILLE E. STONE
General Manager, Associated Press.

I heartily approve of the proposed interchange of staff newspaper men between England and America. Indeed, I approve a like interchange with the newspapers of our other allies, if feasible.

I follow the views of Plato, who held to the omnipotence of public opinion and I can see no permanent peace without a great development of inter-communication throughout the world. An international league of newspapers seems to me an essential feature of any league of nations for peace.

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS
President, Public Ledger Company, Philadelphia.

I heartily favor the proposed interchange of staff members by British and American newspapers and discussed this subject with Lord Northcliffe and Lord Burnham when I was in London a few weeks ago.

WILLIAM SEAVER WOODS
Editor, Literary Digest.

The plan for an international exchange of editors would at least do one some good writer on a British paper visit Texas, and discover that Indians and wild cowboys are very scarce in this State and that we have a Manchester Canal "leading from the Gulf to Houston, and that there are some evidences of culture and refinement, as well as big business in this State, and that cotton doesn't grow on trees, and I would also be glad to have one of our men visit London, mingle with the people there, and find out for himself that they speak English on that island and that the stage Englishman with which we have been so long afflicted, is not typical of that great country.

I am quite sure that we could obtain many good ideas from British newspapers and we might be able to impart a few.

CONGRESSMAN GUY V. HARDY

PRESIDENT, NATIONAL EDITORIAL ASSOCIATION

It looks to me like Mr. Blumenthal has hit on a good idea. It is a good subject to discuss at various associations, more especially among the bigger publishers. It would be a good idea for the big city papers to endeavor to exchange a member of their organization with the big city papers of Europe,—something after the fashion that universities made an exchange of professors a few years ago, by which method Germany succeeded in distributing a great deal of valuable propaganda.

The National Editorial Association appreciates better than most people the benefit that newspapermen get in traveling about the country. In the past years the leaders of our association have been in almost every section of the United States. This year we propose to meet in the Northwest, holding conventions at Victoria, Seattle and Portland.

HERBERT L. BRIDGEMAN

Publisher, Brooklyn Standard-Union.

That a better understanding between Great Britain and America is highly desirable and that it can best be promoted by the newspapers of both countries seems to me indisputable.

Not informed of the plans and scope of the proposed co-operative or exchange arrangement, I must ask to be "shown" and in the meantime to preserve a rather conservative frame of mind concerning it. In other words, it seems to me that the freest play of individual interests, opinions and authority would be more useful and effective than any general organized campaign or centralized overhead authority. Individualism has always been a strong point with American newspapers and it seems to me that wholesome rivalry will not only promote better work, but more independent thinking, presentation of all the facts and intelligent study from all angles.

To command public respect and do itself and the international cause real service, the alliance should be absolutely free of suspicion of obligation to any interest, political, financial, other than to tell the truth and think and talk honestly about it.

R. A. CROTHERS

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR, BULLETIN, SAN FRANCISCO

The proposal for an interchange of staff members by British and American newspapers must appeal to all who wish to promote a friendlier feeling between the two countries. To know more of each other is to fear each other less. International enmities are three-fourths misunderstanding, and there is no better means of eliminating mutual suspicion than fuller and more accurate information as to what is happening in each country.

What applies to America and Great Britain applies also to America and the rest of the world, though as a newspaper agency for a better understanding, the suggested interchange is the most practical of all beginnings. Some day the interchange could be extended to France, Italy, Russia, Germany and other countries. In the meantime the proposal promises to vitalize the League of Nations, to give to its statutory skeleton the flesh and blood of a sympathetic popular sentiment. We must know more of each other if we are to work together harmoniously in the cause of international peace.

And on the still more practical side, there should be mutual advantage to the newspaper business of both countries. We have all something to learn from somebody else and the best of all mediums for such learning is the newspaper.

RUTHMAN ADMITTED TO PARTNERSHIP

A. G. Ruthman, who has for some time been in charge of the Chicago office of Gilman & Nicoll, has been admitted into partnership in the firm, which will hereafter be known as Gilman, Nicoll & Ruthman. It is in recognition of Mr. Ruthman's excellent services in Chicago that this step was taken. He will continue to have charge of the Chicago office.

A. G. RUTHMAN.

Gilman, Nicoll & Ruthman will retain New York offices in the World Building, and the Chicago offices in the Tribune Building, as heretofore. They have recently added the Pawtucket Evening Times to their list of newspapers.

W. H. DODGE

PRESIDENT, BUFFALO EVENING LEAGUE OF NEWSPAPERS

The proposed interchange of staff members by British and American newspapers would, in my opinion, be a helpful step forward to the time when the whole world will be united into one great family.

Readers of American newspapers will be enabled to perceive more clearly the motives and ideals of Britain's statesmen, and through this mutual understanding, the two nations will be brought into more friendly relations than any formal treaty could accomplish.

The stage Englishman is just as unlike the true Englishman as the stage Yankee is unlike the real American. Hostility and enmity among nations sometimes rests upon such trifling questions as these.

During the coming years America will have to solve many intricate domestic problems. English newspaper men may have the ability to aid in their solution because these problems are, in a measure, common to both countries, and the influence of the press is a vital factor.

British diplomacy is quite evidently determined to bring about close, friendly relations with the United States and no doubt the proposal for the interchange of newspaper editors had its inspiration in Downing street. If this surmise be correct, we may feel confident that our own government will not be backward about coming forward, and in that ease British and American newspapermen will have the privilege of becoming a valuable auxiliary to those in charge of foreign resolutions.

CLARK HOWELL

EDITOR ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

I have read with interest the article in the recent issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER on the progress of the movement for an exchange between England and American journalists.

I note with pleasure that the movement is receiving the hearty encouragement of prominent English journalists and from expressions already made in your columns from well-known American newspaper men, it seems that interest in the suggestion on this side is no less keen than among English newspaper men.

We can make no mistake in doing everything possible to encourage more cordial relations with our British brethren.

There are a few malcontents in this country, just as there are some over there, who are doing everything in their power to keep the two countries apart. Fortunately, they are in a hopeless minority, and their motives are so well understood that their very activity defeats their efforts in brewing dissension.

World wide peace and human freedom the world over depends upon the closeness of the co-operation of the two great English-speaking nations of the world, and whatever is done to this end benefits civilization that much.

No greater assistance can be rendered than by the press of the two countries.

J. K. OHL

MANAGING EDITOR, NEW YORK HERALD

Mr. Blumenfeld's suggestion for an interchange of editorial writers between English and American newspapers is worthy of serious consideration on this side of the now greatly narrowed Atlantic. Each nation having been a world power from its formation, in the sense of exerting a powerful influence upon world affairs—it is true that the war has added greatly to America's responsibilities and has put us in a position with regard to old world affairs which we have not held before.

It is of vital importance, therefore, that the American people in the mass should be better informed concerning European matters—economic as well as political—than they ever before have been, and it is manifest that the agencies to furnish that information, and to carry forward the desired education, are the newspapers.

As we on this side of the Atlantic need a right understanding of our brothers across the seas, so also do they need a right understanding of us. In the past this has been enjoyed by only a favored few. For the current misunderstanding, or lack of understanding, of one another the newspapers have been largely responsible. Mr. Blumenfeld has suggested one way to better a situation in which all of us should be interested.

When the great war came upon the world, the question most often heard in this country was, "What is it all about?" The American people then were brought to sudden realization that so closely had most of them devoted their thoughts to home affairs that they had remained ignorant of the currents of conflict which had been working toward the undermining of civilization—their civilization—and which, they were soon to know, would inevitably involve their own country. They felt their lack of knowledge of old world affairs and being rather ashamed of it, they said to themselves, "never again." They are in the never-again frame of mind today.

Such an exchange as Mr. Blumenfeld suggests would operate to furnish American newspapers, the educators of public opinion, with men equipped with that more intimate knowledge of European affairs which would enable them to give their readers the help that they have the right to expect. It would result, particularly, in bringing about a better relationship between this country and Great Britain—and that is of greatest importance to both countries.

The American or Britisher who does not see that the working together of our two countries is the prime essential to the preservation of peace and the promotion of civilization, is blind indeed. For that working together, the most essential requisite is a better understanding of each of these peoples by the other. The one sure way to bring that about is for the newspapers of one country to deal fairly and intelligently with the affairs of the other.

As I understand Mr. Blumenfeld's plan, there seem to be no serious obstacles to its being put into effect; certainly none that are insurmountable.

Music Trade Association Has Advertising Censor

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 6.—The Cleveland Music Trades Association, which has membership consists of the retail piano, player piano and several talking machine dealers, has appointed A. L. Maresh, secretary, as "official advertising censor." Mr. Maresh's duties consist in looking over newspaper advertisements with a view of eliminating false statements made by certain dealers whose methods of exploiting "bargain sales with profits" have been severely condemned.

Some of the dealers were "cornered" and told they would have to analyze their newspaper statements before printing them. One advertising writer admitted that he used "catchy" terms and phrases so his copy would make "more acceptable reading" for the public.

Mr. Maresh has the co-operation of a police prosecutor in prosecuting any violators of the Ohio law, and the piano dealers say they are determined to put out of business concerns which dupe the public into paying high prices for used instruments, purchased with the understanding on the part of buyers that the instruments are new.

The members of the Talking Machine Dealers' Association of Northern Ohio are also backing up the piano dealers.

Wanted—Information for Discussion at A. A. C. W.

Officers of Newspaper Department Issue Questionnaire as Aid in Formulating New Orleans Program

By WALTER G. BRYAN, Publisher Atlanta Georgian and American and President of Daily Newspaper Department, A. A. C. W.

DO you believe in a flat rate?
Do you believe in free publicity for auto advertisers?

Do you believe you or the advertiser should pay the cost of sending out circulars and letters to the trade?

Do you advocate the amusement or commercial rate for movies?

Do you believe in the same rates for local and foreign advertisers?

Do you pay the full agency commission on automobile advertising sent you on the fifty-fifty basis?

Do you believe the advertiser should pay the agency for their work instead of making the newspaper allow 15 per cent. commission?

There are dozens of problems like the seven above that should be thoroughly discussed behind closed doors by the men most interested—the advertising managers of daily newspapers.

We want you to send your advertising manager (or the man who supervises your advertising department) to the meetings of the Daily Newspaper Department to be held in connection with the coming convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in New Orleans, September 21 to 25.

We need his help and in turn believe we can help you by sending him back home with a lot of new ideas, enthusiasm and "pep."

At the San Francisco convention last year many advertising managers obtained information and ideas that were worth hundreds of dollars to their papers.

Buford Goodwin, general manager of the Birmingham News writes me that Charlie Miller, the News' advertising manager, brought back one idea, "Shopping with Polly," that has already been worth over $5,000 of revenue to the News, besides coming back fully rested and refreshed, ready to do a big year's work.

What Miller did, your advertising manager can do and I most sincerely urge you to send him to our meetings in September.

Please

Fill out the following questionnaire and mail it immediately to:

Charlie Miller, secretary-treasurer, Daily Newspaper Department, A. A. C. W., care the Birmingham (Ala.) News.

DO YOU BELIEVE A CENTRAL OFFICE FOR DAILY NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING MANAGERS WITH FOLLOWING SERVICE COULD BE HELPFUL TO YOU:

FIRST:
Do you favor this idea?
Say Yes or No.....

To work with the Association of Advertising Agencies in eliminating the necessity of newspapers having to go out to sell merchandise in order to obtain contracts for advertising.

SECOND:
Do you favor this? .....

To make the advertiser bear the expense for help, printing and postage to send out circulars and broadsides and for putting up circulars in n tipsters, dressing windows, etc.

THIRD:
Do you favor this? .....

To work for the elimination of agency discounts by showing the advertiser the advantage of his paying the agency for the service rendered him.

FOURTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To work for a uniform rate card and above all a flat rate the same for local and foreign advertising.

FIFTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To work for the elimination of all oil, copper and mine stock advertising, which cannot stand the most rigid investigation, also for the elimination of clairvoyant, fortune-telling, matrimonial agency, and other forms of known fake advertising.

SIXTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To furnish you with information regarding the various advertising matrix services—to help you buy the best for your use at the lowest price charged by the makers in cities of your size.

SEVENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

A new idea department to send you copies of campaigns, feature pages, sections or editions that have been worked successfully in other cities. Every new idea developed by a member of our department to be sent in to the central office where descriptions or reproductions are to be made and sent you immediately. This should mean a new idea or feature at least every week if we secure several hundred members. For instance, one advertising manager recently sold a campaign to the coffee roaster in his city which was successfully copied in 15 or more cities while the same men copied a campaign from an Oklahoma paper which he sold to the electricians of his city.

EIGHTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To furnish a series of selling talks on newspaper advertising—not any particular newspaper but showing the most successful newspaper campaigns as compared to bill boards, street cars, magazines, etc., and other forms of advertising usually sold in competition with local display advertising.

NINTH:
Do you favor this? .....

A series of clever newspaper advertisements written by experts to help develop the lines you are weak in—for instance, a campaign addressed to the Florists one week, to the Shoe dealers the next week, etc., to show them the advantages of newspaper advertising. This properly illustrated and printed in your newspaper will help you land them.

TENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To have a complete list of advertising solicitors who might be termed black sheep through having made fake contracts, jumping bills and in other ways being undesirable and in that way protecting members of our division from dishonest or unreliable solicitors.

ELEVENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

A research department to classify special success in various lines —for instance, if you are shy on jewelry advertising, to find and send you the best methods adopted in cities where newspapers have succeeded in educating jewelers to advertise with good results.

TWELFTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To standardize a rate that would be fair to the movies as compared to the legitimate and vaudeville house.

THIRTEENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To arrive at a basis of giving a certain number of lines of advance publicity for each inch of amusement advertising paid for.

FOURTEENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To work for the elimination of all so-called automobile publicity.

FIFTEENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To furnish you with information on how to arrange rates or service to secure more small regular advertisers. Firms who should use several inches several times a week, year in and year out.

SIXTEENTH:
Do you favor this? .....

To work for a uniform style of mark-up (such as the pyramid) so as to give the newspapers a more readable appearance.

Which of the preceding Items are especially attractive to you? Give numbers.....
.....
.....
What other ideals or improvements can you suggest for a central bureau (if one is established) to work in behalf of the daily newspaper advertising manager? .....
.....
.....

WOULD your paper be willing to pay a small sum weekly or monthly, say 50c. per week in cities below fifty thousand and a sliding scale based on population up to $2.00 a week in cities over five hundred thousand for the establishment and maintenance of a central bureau in charge of a competent manager to serve you along the lines outlined above?.....

STORY OF PERSHING TO BE SYNDICATED

Harold F. Wheeler Has Spent Much Time Gathering Data for Human-Interest Narrative of the Man Whose Career Is the Pride of All

Reports that a book giving the human interest story of the life of General John J. Pershing, Commander in Chief of the A. E. F., who is returning from France in September, would shortly be offered for newspaper publication reached Editor & Publisher early this week. Yesterday they were confirmed by Irwin Barbour, manager of the Wheeler Syndicate, who said:

"We have obtained newspaper rights to the story of General Pershing by Harold F. Wheeler. In gathering the material for this work, Mr. Wheeler traveled to every part of the United States in which General Pershing was known. He went to the General's old home in Laclede, Mo., and talked to the men and women who had known the General there since his babyhood.

Knows Pershing Intimately

"He went to West Point, to Washington, to the border where he talked with soldiers who knew the General—and besides getting a great story which covers every point of General Pershing's career, he has turned out a book which puts the General in an entirely new light before the country. He makes us understand that Pershing is not a hard-boiled caste-bound military driver, but a real human being with a heart as big as a watermelon, and a fund of human kindness and understanding which will make him even more loved by the people when they learn to know him as he is.

"The first release on this work will be made early in September, and samples of the work will be available shortly. It will be both a daily and Sunday feature."

With definite assurances from the War Department that General Pershing will return from overseas early in September, newspaper campaigns have been begun in a number of cities for a series of tremendous welcomes to the man who led America to victory in the field.

Full Title of General

General Pershing, as Congress recently decided, will be the only officer in the United States Army to bear the full title of General—a rank vacant between the days of Grant and the World War—in recognition of his great services to his country.

General Pershing's life, especially of late, has been in his work, though no less so of his son, little Jack, the only survivor of the tragic loss which General Pershing sustained when his wife and two other children lost their lives in the burning of his home at the Presidio, San Francisco, at a time several years ago when he was on the Texas border.

G. C. Rice Indicted Again

George Graham Rice, well known as a get-rich-quick stock broker, promoter and publisher of a financial weekly in New York, was indicted July 28, by the Grand Jury on charges of assault and grand larceny. This is the third indictment returned against him in the last year. One of the previous indictments was for grand larceny, while the other, returned by the Federal Grand Jury, was for using the mails to defraud. Rice's real name is said to be Jacob Simon Hersig.

Fairbrother Recuperating

GREENSBORO N. C., Aug. 5.—Al Fairbrother, who recently sold the Daily Record to Parker, R. Anderson and associates because of a breakdown in his health, writes from Redondo Beach, Cal., where he is now domiciled, that he has gained twenty pounds in weight, much of his indisposition and lassitude has passed away, and that he expects to return to North Carolina in the fall ready to take up business again.

Association Changes Name

With the approval of new by-laws by the committee on organization, the name of the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers has been changed to the Publishers' Association of the American Press in Foreign Languages. The officers remain the same, headed by Jacob Ginsburg of Philadelphia as president. Headquarters are at 120 Broadway, with Frances A. Kellor, vice-president, in charge.

A. E. BRAUN HEADS PITTSBURGH POST AND SUN

A. E. BRAUN

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Aug. 6.—A. E. Braun has been elected president of the Post Publishing Company and the Sun Publishing Company of Pittsburgh to succeed the late T. H. Given who died the last of June. Mr. Braun will continue to act as general manager, which office he has held for the last six years.

J. E. Trower has been elected vice president of both companies and will continue in charge of the advertising departments of both the Post and the Sun.

H. H. King has been elected secretary and C. H. Irvin treasurer.

All of these officers have been connected with the Post and the Sun for years, so that their advancement comes to each as a merited promotion. The same policies which have placed these two newspapers in their present strong position in the Pittsburgh field will be continued.

Just Can't Forget the War

BALTIMORE, Aug. 5—Returned war correspondents have been taken with the book fever, and already two histories of Maryland regiments have been published. One is by Raymond Tompkins, of the Sun and Evening Sun, and the other by Lester Mueller, of the American and Star.

Want Movie Ads Guaranteed

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 4.—Authority by an act of the city council to censor advertising of Seattle moving picture houses "in order that patrons will not be misled as to what they may expect to see" has been asked by the board of theatre censors. No action has yet been taken on the request by the legislative body.

OHIO LIST AFFILIATES WITH AD BUREAU

Directors Authorized to Enter Organization—Col. F. S. Van Gorder Elected President—Heavy Expenses Work Hardship on Publishers

(BY TELEGRAPH)

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 5.—Col. F. S. Van Gorder, business manager and one of the owners of the Warren Daily Chronicle, was elected president of the Select List of Ohio Daily Newspapers during the morning, which closed at the Hollenden Hotel today. He succeeded Harry E. Taylor, publisher of the Portsmouth Times, and one of the real five wires of Ohio's newspaper publishers.

Mr. Van Gorder was commander of the One Hundred and Forty-fifth Infantry during its service overseas and made an enviable record.

E. B. Cappeller of the Mansfield News was elected vice-president, and C. H. Spencer of the Newark Advocate was re-elected secretary. The gathering, which was the annual one (the other meetings being usually held in Columbus), was attended by over 30 publishers and editors.

Don't Fear Paper Shortage

Advertising methods were discussed and a resolution pledging the organization to affiliate with the Advertising Bureau of the A. N. P. A., was unanimously adopted.

The publishers took an optimistic view of the newsprint supply, despite reports that production has increased not more than a few per cent over the output last year in the face of greatly increased consumption all over the country.

Though fine advertising conditions prevail, increased labor and other overhead expenses are still telling heavily on many of Ohio's smaller dailies, it was found.

"I think we will see better days in a newspaper way," said Mr. Taylor in retiring from the presidency. "I see better advertising rates coming and more circulation is in sight, but it will take hard licks to overcome other burdens publishers must carry in the face of the advancing price of labor, material and food prices."

See Better Times Ahead

The publishers gave their sanction to the movement now at high tide to cut the cost of food prices, all pledging their co-operation and that of their papers in aiding city, state and federal authorities in trying to stop profiteering.

The directors were instructed to plan a campaign of much advertising among advertisers and agencies and also to figure on a publicity campaign in one of the leading advertising trade papers.

At the election the following named directors were chosen: E. B. Cappeller, Mansfield News; Fred S. Wallace, Coshocton Tribune; J. B. Sedgwick, Martin's Ferry Times; J. A. Chew, Xenia Gazette.

The list, which numbers 55 members, in as many Ohio counties, will hold its next meeting in Chicago on October 4th. Bi-monthly meetings are held, usually in Columbus. Robert E. Ward, the List's foreign advertising manager, and Mr. Ward's eastern representative, W. E. Jewett, of New York, attended the Cleveland meeting, which ended in an outing.

H. Roscoe Bailey, advertising manager of the Roscoe (Miss.) Daily News, is making a study of the Texas oil fields for a series of investment articles.

ENGLISH FIRMS ARE BUSY PLANNING AMERICAN SELLING CAMPAIGNS

Special Advertising Service Has Been Established—Many New Publications Established in England—French Journalists Complain About British Methods

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT,
London Editor, Editor & Publisher

THE American Chamber of Commerce in London is at present engaged in the education of British manufacturers and producers regarding the American market, and its promotion work is of such a far-reaching character that it cannot fail to have its effect in ultimately benefiting American newspapers by creating advertisers among British commercial houses. The last Bulletin of the Chamber reveals an activity in this direction that I know has struck a number of old-established British houses as being altruistic in the extreme.

Founded in the belief that the best commercial interest of the two countries in every way demand a full exchange of goods between them on the broadest possible basis, the Chamber, with its 500 American and 500 British (non-voting) members, has arranged to give practical assistance to British firms entering the United States.

"Sell to America!" Is England's Cry

Of particular interest to American newspaper men is the fact that special service is given in advertising, as the Chamber's advisory committee in advertising has a most practical and useful method of supplying prompt information and advice.

It has been arranged, too, that each of the twenty other committees of the Chamber shall be ready with special assistance in this "sell-to-America" campaign, the Trade Informants Committee taking the lead in developing American sources of information.

Victory Loan "Push"

Great Britain has been passing through the excitements of the Victory Loan "push" and the National War Savings Committee Headquarters in London, with Sydney Walton, formerly press associate at the Food Ministry and more recently with the Canadian Mission in Britain, as the head of its Publicity Department, and L. H. Hartland Swann, managing director of Ichima, Ltd., and formerly advertising adviser to the Coal Controller as press advertising manager.

The press has shown a united front in concentrating its efforts upon breaking all previous records and it is an open secret that the one desire of the organizers is to beat the high record of the American Victory Loan. Newspapers have adopted the loan as their leading topic, christening it the Joy Loan, the "Lucky Dip" Loan and other names. Advertisers like Selfridge and the Sir Alfred Butt theatrical enterprises are offering large prizes in lottery form to subscribers who purchase the loan through them.

Newspapers Maintain Prices

Mr. Walton, in discussing the present campaign, acknowledged that the special Victory Loan and Victory-International editions of EDITOR AND PUBLISHER to have been most useful in furnishing many valuable ideas for the campaign.

The British publishing world is by no means inactive. New publications of the most diverse character—newspapers, popular periodicals, magazines and trade papers—are constantly making their appearance, and, generally speaking, are established with every sign of success.

The prices of newspaper show no change, and in no important instance has there been any reduction of price to pre-war figures. Indeed, Lord Horace Brooks-Marshall, the Lord Mayor of London, himself a publisher and distributor of newspaper and periodicals, said recently that he considered the day of the halfpenny paper had departed. Representing the interest of all sections of the distributing trade, he could say that they hoped it had gone never to return. They willingly paid their penny, their three-halfpence, their two-pence, or even their three-pence, they made their choice, and they got more than value for their money.

International Press Relations

Frank R. Bird, the secretary of the British Newspaper Society and editor of the Society's Monthly Circular, is doing a good work in cultivating working relations with similar organizations in other countries. His idea is that the visits paid by American and Canadian editors to Great Britain during the war has enlarged the vision of those responsible for the management of newspapers in both hemispheres and has created a comradeship amongst individuals which ought to be equally active among organizations. For many years a regular interchange of information has been operative between the Secretary of this society and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, with considerable benefit to their respective organizations.

It was felt that this was only a beginning, and that other channels were untouched. Mr. Bird accordingly got into communication with other bodies in the United States and Canada with the happiest results. The various bulletins and other information regularly received from the Canadian Press Association, Inc., Toronto and the A. N. P. A. are filed at the office of the Newspaper Society for the use of its members.

French Journalists Complain

Whether from crassitude or inadvertence on the part of officialdom the correspondents of French newspapers in London are smarting under the disabilities which, they complain, British methods compel them to endure. They have secured the ears of their British press colleagues, who give wide and sympathetic publicity to their statement. The correspondents point out that throughout the war they submitted without demur to the restrictions imposed upon the British authorities, but they now enter an emphatic protest against preferential treatment being accorded to the press representatives of other nations while they, as they allege, are still obliged to work under the old difficulties.

Jolly Well You Know H'it

The editor of one of England's greatest daily newspapers, on his way to the office one day last winter, stopped at a strange barber shop just off Fleet street for his morning shave.

"I 'ear the h'influenza h'is in the h'air," remarked the man with the razor in an effort to make conversation.

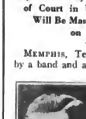
"I hope you are careful as to the brushes you are using, in that case," volunteered the Great Editor.

"H'oh! You don't h'understand me, sir. You're thinking about the 'air on the 'ead and I'm talking about the h'air of the h'atmosphere," was the hasty rejoinder of the worker as he stroked his customer's chin.

All Christian-Science Editors Evidence Is In

Arguments Will Be Made on September 8—Dittemore Action Set for Hearing October 6

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Evidence in the suit of the trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society to restrain the Board of Directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, from interfering in their conduct of the society's affairs, was closed today. The hearing, which has been held before a Master, has been in progress for 27 court days. Arguments will be made on September 8.



An opinion given the directors on September 4 by General Frank S. Streeter to the effect that it would be illegal for them to increase their salaries from $2,500 to $10,000, which was introduced by counsel for John V. Dittemore, a former director, was the principal feature of the evidence today. It was shown by records also that Dittemore and Archibald McLellan had opposed increasing the salaries.

The action of Mr. Dittemore against the directors, in which he claims he was removed illegally as a member of the board, will be heard on October 6.

BAND ESCORTS EDITOR LEECH TO JAIL

Begins Ten Days' Sentence for Contempt of Court in Unusual Legal Case—Will Be Mass Meeting of Citizens on His Release

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Aug. 4.—Preceded by a band and accompanied by scores of prominent business men who paraded the principal streets of the city, Edward T. Leech, editor of the Memphis Press, an afternoon newspaper, entered the Shelby County Jail today to begin serving a sentence of ten days' imprisonment imposed for contempt of Chancellor Israel Pere's court.

EDWARD T. LEECH

The contempt charges grew out of an editorial written by Leech during a local political campaign last year, as was told in detail in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, last week.

Friends of Leech, who organized the parade today and accompanied him to jail, are planning a mass meeting next week when the editor is released. Former Mayor Litty, who was a leading figure in the parade, addressed a group of several hundred persons at the jail just before Leech was locked up.

On beginning his term, Mr. Leech said:

"I enter the county jail for a ten-day sentence because the Supreme Court of Tennessee has ruled that a general political editorial, containing no references to any judge or any case, can be construed in contempt of a judge who was himself a candidate in a pending election. This, I believe, is the big point at issue in my case.

"This attack on the right of newspapers to discuss judicial candidates, and this ruling that the strictures contained in an editorial can be held contemptuous without the necessity of showing interference with the court's procedure, can, if accepted as precedent, be used to silence other editors under similar circumstances. I do not believe the law ever intended such a condition, and I will be satisfied if my imprisonment will help only a little in preventing a recurrence of such decisions."

Newspaper Man Heads Deaf Assn.

SPOKANE, Wash., Aug. 6.—James H. O'Leary, the new president of the Washington Association of the Deaf, is a well known Spokane newspaper man, going West in 1902 from Minnesota. He was born September 27, 1870, in Hennpin County, Minn., and owned and operated a number of small newspapers in the East before settling in Spokane. In 1901 he was elected delegate to the State Democratic Convention in Minnesota. He is at present employed in the printing department of the Spokane Chronicle.

Presented Complete News Record

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 4.—During the general strike recently in Winnipeg the newspapers were out of business for six days. On resuming publication the Free Press carried a page devoted to a summary of the day's news for each of the days it had missed publication. This was done in order that its record of events might be complete.

TO FEATURE EXHIBIT AT NEW ORLEANS

Associated Ad Clubs of World Will Show Complete Advertising Campaigns, National, Territorial and Local—More Sustaining Members

Information of a most valuable character will be available to those who visit the National Advertising Exhibit, to be held as a part of the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, at New Orleans, September 21 to 25, says a bulletin from the advertising association.

In addition to the fact that this year's advertising exhibit will take a new form, embracing complete showings of several actual advertising campaigns, it is also announced that at stated hours those who planned and executed the campaigns shown will be on hand to explain them and to answer any questions which are not answered to the complete satisfaction of the visitor by the exhibits themselves.

All Media Covered

Several campaigns are to be shown. There will be national, semi-national, territorial and local campaigns in the showing. Advertisements from publications, and from all other mediums used, as well as "follow-up" matter employed in the campaigns will be shown and explained, and Joseph S. Potsdamer, of Philadelphia, chairman of the exhibit committee, has declared that it will be such an exhibit and explained in such interesting detail as to bring notebooks from the pockets of those who see it.

In addition to these campaigns, two other features of importance are being planned.

One of them, following the chief theme of the convention, will show campaigns which have been used by manufacturers, merchandising establishments and other employers in gaining the cooperation of their employes.

This section will be supplemental to the plan to have a labor leader and a man equally representative of capital present what they believe to be the terms upon which capital and labor can agree, so as to insure increased production, and thereby insure continued prosperity. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, has accepted a place on the program.

Neosho Plan in Detail

The other feature of importance will be a complete exhibit showing how the Advertising Club of Neosho has built up the business of Neosho through a plan of co-operative advertising, and by co-operation among the merchants to insure that all of the advertising done is so truthful as to insure that the customer who comes to Neosho will desire to make Neosho his regular trading point.

The Neosho plan has attracted national attention and was explained in Editor & Publisher last week. For years the business men of that community, through the advertising club, have continued to build steadily, with the result that the little Missouri city quite frequently entertains business men from other communities who go there to make a first-hand study of the methods successfully employed in Neosho, with the idea of adapting them to their own cities.

Recognizing the wide interest which this co-operative work has attracted, the advertising clubs conceived the idea of "taking Neosho to the business world," in furtherance of the association's work in behalf of making all advertising absolutely truthful.

Among representative firms which have recently expressed an interest in the work of the Associated Advertising Clubs by becoming sustaining members, the association announces, are the following: Bearings Service Company, Detroit; Exchange National Bank, Spokane; Dayton Wire Wheel Company, Dayton; Phoenix (Ariz.) Republican, Phoenix, Ariz.; Macfarlan Advertising Agency, Minneapolis; LaSalle & Koch, Toledo; A. O. Smith Corporation, Milwaukee; Liberty Motor Car Company, Detroit; Old Colony Trust Company, Boston; Greenebaum Sons Bank & Trust Company, Chicago; Superior Savings & Trust Company, Cleveland; Purity Oats Company, Boston; National Spark Plug Company, Rockford, Ill.; National Association of Accredited Commercial Schools.

In addition, it is announced that the Houston Post, the Pennsylvania Rubber Company, Jeannette, Pa., and the Ketterlinus Litho. Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, have materially increased the sums of their memberships.

CHALONER PRESSES POST SUIT

Court Grants Him Immunity from Molestation Until August 2

Judge Ford in the Supreme Court of New York has declared John Armstrong Chaloner, who recently won a libel suit verdict from the New York Evening Post, to be sane and competent to manage his own affairs and business.

The jury which heard the evidence in the libel suit gave Mr. Chaloner a verdict for $30,000, which was reduced to $18,500 by Judge A. N. Hand on condition that the defendant did not appeal. The appeal has been taken from the $30,000 verdict and not from the reduced amount.

IF YOU DON'T KNOW ABOUT KANSAS CITY, YOU WILL!

Do you know that 26 per cent of the total railway mileage of the United States is in Kansas City's trade territory?

DO you know Kansas City?

No—— We thought not. But don't worry, neither did Mr. Kansas Cityan until a few weeks ago. Then the Kansas City Star started something with a punch that primed all good citizens with a multitude of condensed facts about his own home town and made a legion of good citizens and boosters.

Now they are going to tell it to you. One hundred and twenty of the leading daily newspapers in the country are going to be used for the telling, and for thirty-five consecutive days they are going to drive home to the people of America facts about Kansas City that will fix securely in the public mind the importance of that Mid-West metropolis.

A public fund of $75,000 has been created by subscription for this unusual home pride campaign, and the Star is justly proud of the fact that nothing that paper has done before has aroused so much favorable and enthusiastic comment among the men interested in the welfare of Kansas City.

The campaign of the Star, which has just closed, has already inspired similar campaigns in a dozen or more other cities.

On the first page of the Star for fifty-five consecutive issues, morning and evening, there appeared in a double-column box, of which the one above is a reproduction, a pointed fact about Kansas City. Each fact, written in bold script, was introduced by the words, "Do You Know?"

The people of Kansas City are so proud of the superiorities of their city as residential haven and industrial center, of which they learned through the Star, that they now want to tell them to the world.

"Do You Know?" has been issued in booklet form by a printing firm that is making free distribution. "Do You Know?" postcards can now be found at all Kansas City newsstands. Letter beads of business firms and the backs of envelopes coming from Kansas City carry the little fact sermons, and after a 24-hour canvass of the membership by the Chamber of Commerce that the people had subscribed $75,000 to tell the story of the city to you through the daily press.

Rogers Establish Agency

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 4.—The Roger Business Building Service has opened offices in the Mutual Life Building to handle advertising and sales promotion. Joseph S. and John L. Rogers are the organizers.

N. Y. Selects the Grunewald as New Orleans Quarters

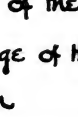
Chairman John Budd Organizing Strongest Delegation Ever—Urges That Early Reservations Be Made

The committee in charge of the New York Advertising Club's delegation to the meeting of the A. A. C. W. in New Orleans has selected the Hotel Grunewald for headquarters, and Chairman John Budd is urging that all who intend going make reservations immediately. In an announcement just sent out Mr. Budd says:

"We want to take to the New Orleans Convention the largest and strongest delegation we have ever had at any of those conventions.

"The trip down and back by rail or steamer will be delightful. The problems that are to be discussed at the Convention will be of vital importance. If you do not get from the addressed information that will be worth at least $25,000, it will be your own fault. A member of this club who attended the St. Louis Convention says that one idea he picked up at that meeting had resulted in a saving to his firm of $10,000.

"As we must at once reserve rooms for our delegation at the Hotel Grunewald, which is to be our headquarters, we ask that you tell us at once what accommodations you will need either for yourself or for your representatives.



"Time of trip—By rail, 42 hours. By sea, 3 days. Leave New York Friday, September 19th, at 3:30 p. m., arrive in New Orleans at 10:30 Sunday morning, September 21st. Returning, leave New Orleans Thursday evening, September 25th, arrive in New York, Saturday afternoon, September 27th. By taking the rail route those who attend the convention will be away from home 9 days.

"The trip by sea—Leaving New York, Wednesday, September 17th, the steamer is due in New Orleans, Monday morning, September 22d. Returning leave New Orleans, Saturday morning, September 27th, arrive in New York Thursday, morning, October 2nd."

ISSUES "FRONTIER DAYS" EDITION

Albert Hearst Makes Advertising Sales Record for State Leader's Number

The Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Leader broke all records this year with a "Frontier Edition" that contained 96 pages, which is looked upon as an unusual achievement in the smaller city journalism of the Far West.

ALBERT HEARST

The paper contained 47 full-page advertisements, mostly of local merchants, and more than sixty pages of the advertising contained in the number were sold in less than three weeks by Albert Hearst, the associate manager. He also wrote most of the copy contained in the advertisements.

The special edition, which is an annual event, marks the twenty-third annual "Frontier Day's" celebration, and the fifty-second birthday of the State Leader. Incidentally, when the State Leader was founded in 1867 Cheyenne was Crow Creek and Wyoming was overrun with buffaloes and wild Indians, according to a story by Frank Walter Sylvester.

Grute Locates in Cincinnati

CINCINNATI, O., Aug. 4.—Nain Grute, for eighteen years with the New York World and more recently with the Times, is now with the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune in the double capacity of news editor and Sunday editor. The Commercial Tribune's news bureau will be in direct charge of Mr. Grute. At one time he was connected with the Kansas City Star, and was one of the founders of the Kansas City World.

PLAN WARM WELCOME IN OREGON FOR N.E.A.

Four Days of Unalloyed Pleasure Await Publishers—$6,000 Trip from Portland to Medford and Return Is Outstanding Entertainment

By E. E. Brodie
Publisher Oregon City Morning Enterprise and Member N. E. A. Executive Committee

Four days of unalloyed pleasure have been alloted for the approaching convention of the National Editorial Association which comes to Oregon and the Pacific Northwest in August. Portland will be the first convention city, and the editorial party will arrive on a special train on Friday, August 8, at 5.05 P. M. Nothing has been left undone for the comfort of the guests, estimated at nearly 300.

E. E. Brodie.

At Seattle, hotel men from Portland will join the train and assign rooms, so that upon arrival at Portland, there will be no delay nor confusion, and after a bath, the members of the party will be motored to the spacious grounds of the Waverly Country Club for dinner, arranged and served by the Portland Caterers' Association, on the lawn at the club by the banks of the beautiful Willamette River, near Portland.

Welcome by Mayor Baker

There the usual preliminaries will be held, such as an address of welcome by Mayor Baker of Portland and the responses, so that the decks will be clear for the business session next morning. Portland's crack municipal band will furnish music at the club grounds.

Saturday, August 9, will be given over to the business of the convention, at the Elks Temple, and at noon luncheon will be served in the dining room of the Portland Press Club in the Elks Building, through the courtesy of the Home Industry League of the Portland Chamber of Commerce. Adjournment will be taken at 4 o'clock and by arrangement of the Commercial Club of Oregon City the party will be taken on interurban cars to the pioneer city of Oregon, at the Falls of the Willamette, and the association officers will formally dedicate a monument there being erected by W. P. Hawley, president of the Hawley Pulp & Paper Company, of Oregon City, to mark the establishment of the Oregon Spectator, the first newspaper on the Pacific Coast, in February, 1846.

The visitors will then be taken back to Portland and the formal banquet held at the Chamber of Commerce, through the courtesy of the Portland Oregonian and the Portland Telegram.

Famous Columbia River

Everybody is expected to be up and about early Sunday, for it will be a busy day, and guests are expected to get a cup of coffee before leaving their hotels, for breakfast will be along toward noon.

Automobiles will take the party up the famous Columbia River highway, over 60 miles of paved road, through the wonderful gorge of the Columbia, around Crown Point, with its 20 miles vista, and down past succeeding waterfalls, going as far as Eagle Creek, where the Oregon Fish and Game Commission and the U. S. Forestry Service have arranged to provide a bear and trout breakfast.

The return will be made to bring the party into Portland in time to go to their hotels and take a special train out of the Union Station at 4:30 P. M. for Salem, where at 6:30 P. M., dinner will be served by the courtesy of the Salem Commercial Club, and Governor Olcott will welcome the visitors.

Leaving Salem at 8:30 P. M., the night will be spent in Hallmann and the Easterners will waken at Medford at 6:30 and will have breakfast there, the Medford Commercial Club arranging it. Then the long day's run will start by the Crater Lake, "eighth wonder of the world." Basket lunches will be furnished, to be eaten at any point on this wonder highway, and the lake will be reached about 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

I shall not attempt to give a description of Crater Lake. No pen has ever been able to do justice to its elusive blue.

Next day the party will leave the lake right after lunch and return to Medford and it is hoped that arrangements will be perfected to go over the Pacific highway to Ashland, where dinner is to be served at Lithia Park, famous for its mineral water and its beauty.

Special Train to Mt. Rainier

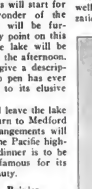
At 8:30 P. M. Tuesday, the special will pull out for Portland, arriving at 7:30 A. M. Wednesday, August 13, taking a little better than an hour for breakfast at the Multnomah Hotel and then start on the Northern Pacific special at 8:45 for Tacoma, Washington, and the trip to Mt. Rainier.

The Portland Chamber of Commerce has agreed to finance special train from Portland to Medford and return, at a cost of something like $6,000, and the Medford Commercial Club will care for the party from arrival at Medford until its departure, with the single exception of the expense at Crater Lake lodge, an item for the compon book of Secretary Scholfield. Chairman Wilke of the transportation committee.

Committee in Charge

The committee in charge of arrangements in Oregon is as follows: W. J. Hofmann, Mayor George L. Baker, John M. Mann, J. E. Wheeler, John M. Scott, Philip S. Bates, Fred Lockley, George M. Cornwall, George H. Himes, Oscar Overbeck, I. N. Fleischner, Mrs C. F. Jones, C. C. Chapman, Robert E. Smith, C. S. Jackson, W. P. Strandborg, Edgar B. Piper, C. C. Cage, Henry L. Corbett, Dr. Henry Waldo Coe, R. A. Stewart, Sidney B. Vincent, Thomas Sherrard and H. W. Kent, all of Portland; W. P. Hawley and Lloyd Riches of Oregon City; B. T. McBain of West Linn; F. J. Simpsin of North Bend and Will G. Steel of Medford.

Oregon to be on hand in August to extend a warm welcome to the editors of the nation.



GOV. HART TO WELCOME N. E. A.

Seattle Has Made Big Preparations—State Association Meets, Too

Seattle, Aug. 4.—In conjunction with the convention of the National Editorial Association, the Washington State Press Association will hold its annual meeting in Seattle during the week of August 14. With the editors of the nation assembled in Seattle, this year's state gathering is expected to be one of the largest in the history of the organization.

Governor Louis F. Hart will welcome the N. E. A. editors to Seattle at the opening session here. An elaborate program of entertainment has been arranged in honor of the visitors under the direction of Frank P. Goss, of the Post-Intelligencer staff.

LET HOFMANN DO IT! PORTLAND FOLKS SAY

W. J. Hofmann.

When anything is to be done out in Portland, Ore., they don't say: "Let George do it." They say: "Let Hofmann do it!" meaning W. J. Hofmann, advertising manager of the Oregonian and office holder extraordinary.

And Hofmann does it. He does it so well that there is hardly a civic organization in the city that does not appeal to him when there is real work to do. Hofmann has tackled so many hard jobs and put them over so successfully that he has made a reputation that there is no hope of living down; consequently new duties are always being added. Hofmann hasn't shown any signs of weakening as yet.

There is a more or less general impression that the advertising manager of a city daily has a full-sized day's work ahead when he goes to the office in the morning. His office duties, however, are only a sort of appetizer for W. J. Hofmann, as may be appreciated when one glances over the following list of offices, all of which he is occupying at the present time:

President of the Pacific Coast Daily Newspaper Association.

President of the Pacific Northwest Tourist Association.

Director-general of the National Editorial Association convention, which meets in Portland next week.

Chairman of the entertainment committee for returning Oregon soldiers.

Potentate of Al Kader Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

President of the Irvington Club, a community social and tennis club of seven hundred members.

Director of the Trails Club, which is making Oregon's mountains more accessible.

Director of the newspaper division of the Advertising Clubs of the World.

Rather a formidable list, but, of course, it does not take into account other titles that he has but recently dropped.

For instance he is an ex-president of the Portland Ad Club, and up to a short time ago had been for ten years a director of the Portland Chamber of Commerce. He is also credited with organizing the Royal Rosarians, a body of 100 Portland business men who act as the official entertaining committee during Rose Festivals, body-guarding the king and queen, receiving outside delegation.

Oregon Association to Meet In Portland, Aug. 8-9

Business Sessions Will Be Held Jointly with N. E. A. Meeting—Members to Be Guests of Local Publishers

Eugene, Ore., Aug. 4.—Lloyd Riches, secretary, announces that the Oregon Editorial Association will meet August 8 in the Portland Press Club, just preceding the opening of the National Editorial Association convention sessions. The first will adjourn in time to join in the reception of the N. E. A. members, who will arrive in Seattle by special train at 5 p. m. that day.

Following is the tentative program of the State association gathering, as prepared by President C. E. Ingalls, of Corvallis:

THE tabulation here printed affords to buyers of newspaper advertising space data on which either national or state campaigns may be planned with a considerable degree of exactness.

It is a summary of the facts presented in detail in the complete list of English-language daily newspapers of the United States, with their circulation figures and advertising rates, in the issue of July 24.

The agate line rates, covering 5,000-line contracts, show total costs for using either all of the Morning, Evening or Sunday newspapers in each state, and also in the United States as a whole. Figuring groups of states, major market groups, for campaigns in either of the three classes of newspapers is a matter of simple arithmetic.

For example: Colorado has 28 Evening newspapers, with a total circulation of 215,876 and a combined advertising rate of .6678581 per agate line. Thus 5,000 lines in all of these Colorado Evening papers will cost $3,067.86.

In Indiana there are 24 Morning newspapers, with total circulations of 280,200 and a combined advertising rate of .7462817 per agate line. The cost for 5,000 lines in all of these Indiana morning dailies will total $2,781.26.

Ohio has 23 Sunday newspapers, with total circulations of 816,668 and a

HOSKINS RETURNS TO HOUSTON

Made Managing Editor of Post After Service on Coast

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 5.—L. A. Hoskins has taken editorial charge of the Post, succeeding Charles Maes as managing editor. Mr. Hoskins is an old Houstonian, but for the past nineteen years has been living in California. Before going west he was employed on the Post for two years as Associated Press telegrapher and for a shorter period as telegraph editor.

Mr. Hoskins associated himself with the Los Angeles Examiner when that publication was founded. Eight years ago he became managing editor of the Los Angeles Tribune and later took on the editorial management of the Los Angeles Express, merging the editorial management of the two papers under one head. He left the Tribune-Express connection in 1917 and became assistant to S. A. Perkins, of the Perkins Press at Tacoma. When the Perkins papers were sold to the Baker interests, and the Tacoma News was merged into the Tacoma News Tribune, Mr. Hoskins renewed his Hearst connection, going to Atlanta as day editor of the Georgian.

Geraghty Managing Irish Press

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 4.—The Irish Press, a weekly devoted to the interests of Ireland, has moved its headquarters to 24 Filbert street, and John B. Geraghty is now general manager. He is preparing plans for a circulation contest, with scholar ships and trips to Ireland as the prize and prizes. Joseph McCarthy is editor.

CROIX DE GUERRE FOR McDONALD

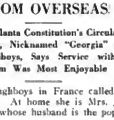
Chicago Newspaper Man Cited by Marshal Petain Personally

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—Nicholas McDonald, for five years a staff photographer of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, and now a captain in the United States army signal corps, has received the Croix de Guerre on the direct citation of Marshal Petain. The medal was sent direct from France to the safe-keeping of Lieutenant Harry Lee, of the International News Service, an old friend. McDonald still is somewhere in France and has not yet learned of his new honors. The official citation reads:

"Capt. Nicholas McDonald, photography service American army. Officer in charge of photographic and motion picture film service of the division. An officer possessing initiative and extraordinary courage. Always accompanying an attacking unit, he took part in all battles. While engaged in recording valuable data for the history of the division, he displayed the utmost care of danger in the midst of enemy bombardments and machine gun fire."

"Petain."

"The Marshal of France,
"Commander of the French Armies of the East."



Captain Fawcett Returns West

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 6.—Capt. Roscoe Fawcett, former sports editor of the Portland Oregonian, has been released from the Walter Reed Hospital at Washington, D. C., and has returned to the West. After two months' leave he will enter the Letterman General Hospital at San Francisco for further treatment. Capt. Fawcett was seriously injured last October when his airplane fell, after he had become lost in a fog over England.

MRS. J. T. TOLER HOME FROM OVERSEAS

Wife of Atlanta Constitution's Circulation Manager, Nicknamed "Georgia" by Doughboys, Says Service with Them Was Most Enjoyable

The doughboys in France called her "Georgia." At home she is Mrs. John T. Toler, whose husband is the popular circulation manager of the Atlanta Constitution and past president of the International Circulation Managers' Association.

MRS. JOHN T. TOLER

Back from six months' active service with the American soldiers in France as a Y. M. C. A. canteen worker, "just to have done something for my country," Mrs. Toler brings home a war work record of which she can well be proud and the thanks of thousands of "her boys"—who will never forget her.

Mrs. Toler, young, handsome and charming daughter of the South, in her smart "Y" uniform, arrived in New York on the U. S. S. Mt. Vernon last Saturday on her way down to Atlanta, just bubbling over with praise and admiration for the work and conduct of the American soldiers in France.

She took up her work with them just after the armistice was signed (although it was not her fault that she did not get overseas sooner), at the time the boys were beginning to come back from the front, yearning for home and loved ones.

South and North Were One

It was the critical period of morale maintenance, and the war workers realizing it concentrated their efforts on making the boys as happy and contented as possible until the arrival of their embarkation orders. This was Mrs. Toler's duty, along with others, and she was assigned to the "Blue and Gray" Division, composed of men principally from New York, New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia.

"Once I was the only woman in the camp for a period of five weeks," she related to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, "and in that time I had a wonderful opportunity of studying the American soldier and his spirit.

"There wasn't anything they wouldn't do for me. I was the first American girl they had seen for as long as eighteen months—some of them—and there was nothing too good for me. They would confide in me and ask my advice, while many told me, with tears streaming down their bronzed and beaten faces, of mothers, sisters, wives, brothers, fathers and sweethearts back home whom they were so anxious to see and be with again.

Soft-Hearted Boys Again

"O! the spirit of those boys was wonderful — just soft-hearted youngsters again, transformed from fighting demons who only a few days before were battling the bocche to death in the fight for human rights.

"When they found out I was from Atlanta, they promptly nicknamed me after my native state, and I was 'Georgia' to them thereafter, losing entirely for the time being my true identity.

"When I received orders to move on, to erect and take charge of another hut, what a protest those boys made. They threatened to appeal to generals, colonels, and every other authority in the army and the Y. M. C. A. to keep me with them, but orders were orders with us and I had to move along, hard as it was to break away.

Respectful and Courteous Always

"It was the same in the next camp and wherever else I went. Kindly respect and courtesy marked my reception and labors. It was most enjoyable work and f wouldn't have missed it for anything."

As the soldiers were gradually sent home and the camps broken, Mrs. Toler was assigned to duty in Paris and opened up and managed the first American ice cream soda parlor in the French capital. She served ice cream, sodas and sundaes over the counter, crushed the fruits for syrups and did everything else possible to make the doughboys feel at home, and "Didn't they appreciate real American ice cream and sodas," Mrs. Toler exclaimed. "To many they were the first they had had since leaving home."

Asked what impressed her most in France, Mrs. Toler said it was a visit to the American cemeteries at Belleau Wood and Chateau Thierry, where a number of unidentified dead are buried.

Graves of Unknown Impress Deeply

One cannot describe the feeling of sorrow and emotion that arises when meditating above those graves," Mrs. Toler said. "To think of those poor fellows lying dead under unmarked mounds, thousands of miles from dear ones at home, who perhaps are expecting their return daily, and how they made the supreme sacrifice for their country, brought tears to the eyes of all of us as we made a pilgrimage to decorate the graves with flowers. I will never forget the occasion as long as I live."

Luxuries of Life Forgotten

Asked if she didn't enjoy the Atlanta Constitution every day from home, a merry twinkle came into her eyes. "Indeed we did," Mrs. Toler replied. "We didn't get much time to read it, but it was fine for making fires in the morning when wood was too wet to light. Many a time I thanked my husband from my heart for sending it to me. Mr. Toler must have felt badly at first at the treatment of his daily love letter, as he called the Constitution, but I made him understand he could not send me anything of greater use, so he kept up the supply."

As for toilet luxuries, Mrs. Toler laughingly admitted that for a long time cold cream had to take the place of water very often.

When it was suggested that she must have had home training and experience in work to enable her to make such a success of her Y. M. C. A. mission, Mrs. Toler said: "No, I never did a stroke of work worth while before I went overseas, and f don't know what I'll do when I get home again and won't have anything to do. I'll just have to find something I guess.

"Best of all now I'm going back to the best man on earth, and I just can't get down to Atlanta soon enough, but f have never forget my boys of the A. E. F."

Waterloo Evening Courier

AND WATERLOO DAILY REPORTER

Waterloo, Ia., July 29, 1919.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Yesterday I received your edition of July 24th, and read it with even more interest than ever.

A. W. PETERSON

I am moved to express my appreciation of the wonderful paper you are issuing. This last number seems to me to be the most complete and instructive issue of the kind that I have ever seen.

This is surely a very remarkable era of willingness upon the part of the public to come out in the open with thoughts for the purpose of exchanging views and benefiting the public in general. You are playing your part well in printing and distributing information which you are bringing out for the welfare of all who will read.

What is true of the reading matter pages of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER is also vividly illustrated as true of the advertising pages. The advertiser seems to have caught the spirit of the times, and is telling his story in a very commendable way.

Very truly yours,

A. W. PETERSON, General Manager.

Mr. Peterson is President of the Inland Daily Press Association and Chairman of the important Grievance Committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. He has made a wonderful record in building up the Inland Association and the Evening Courier.

N. Y. TRIBUNE DROPS OWN DELIVERY

After Year's Trial ft Goes Back to American News Company's Joint Delivery and Raises Dealer Price to $140 Per Hundred

After a year's trial of independent delivery service, the New York Tribune has abandoned the plan and returned to American News Company's joint distribution along with the other daily newspapers of the city. At the same time the Tribune also raises its dealer price from $1.20 to $1.40 per hundred copies. The changes were made effective Monday of this week.

Last summer, when newsdealers demanded a reduction in price of all New York dailies to $1.20 per hundred copies and attempted to enforce their demands by boycotting the Hearst newspapers, the Tribune management met the dealers' rate, but the American News Company refused to handle the papers at the lower figure.

The Tribune declined to withdraw from its stand and formed its own system of dealer delivery in charge of Berthold Yokel, long with the Hearst papers. Mr. Yokel retired from the Tribune several months ago, and the circulation department was placed in charge of Frank W. Ball, who announces the latest change in policy.

NEW FIRM IN NATIONAL FIELD

Heaslip, Getz & Batchelor, Publicity Councillors, Open New York Offices

Charles T. Heaslip, Carl H. Getz and Bronson Batchelor have become associated in business as councillors in national publicity and in commercial and civic problems affecting public relations under the firm name of Heaslip, Getz & Batchelor, with offices at 366 5th avenue, New York.

Mr. Heaslip is a newspaper and magazine man of years' experience and recently was director of publicity for the United War Work campaign, the Y. M. C. A. and the Centenary movement of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Mr. Getz is a newspaper man who has worked in nearly every state, was formerly with EDITOR & PUBLISHER and was associated with Mr. Heaslip in the United War Work, Y. M. C. A. and Methodist campaigns.

Mr. Batchelor was formerly Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune and has been associated with Ivy L. Lee in publicity campaigns in addition to being director of the Red Cross campaign in Washington.

G. F. Johnson in Complete Control

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Less than one month after purchasing the Binghamton Republican-Herald, in cooperation with George F. Johnson, Representative in Congress William H. Hill has resigned as vice-president of the Binghamton Publishing Company, severing all connections with the newspaper and leaving Mr. Johnson in complete control. Differences over political issues the cause of Mr. Hill stepping down. He will continue as editor of the Johnson City Record.

Norfolk's Population Claims

Norfolk claims a greater gain in population during the last four years than any other Southern city. In 1914 the population was 90,000, and it is claimed that 200,000 people now live in the city.

MARKETS OPENING TO AMERICAN GOODS

Our Manufacturers Face Great Opportunity for Winning British Favor—James Keeley Tells of English Advertising Methods and Media

James Keeley, editor of the Chicago Herald before its consolidation with the Examiner and who has just established himself as advertising counsellor in Chicago, on his recent return from a year's visit to Europe, nine months of which was spent in England, gave an interview to the New York Times, in which he analyzed with his usual keen insight the present possibilities for developing markets for American goods in Great Britain.

He believes that during the reconstruction period our manufacturers may find the time particularly propitious for winning British favor for any good product. He warns against the folly of trying to force American selling and advertising methods over there, suggesting that campaigns should follow the accepted British policies.

Advertising Medium

"The American merchant and manufacturer who wishes to introduce his goods to the British market has not a difficult problem in advertising his products," says Mr. Keeley. "By using about two dozen papers he can secure a good market, the character of his product governing the character of the papers selected for his campaign.

"I looked into this question thoroughly and then secured from one of England's leading advertising agents his judgment as to the leading mediums, their circulation and pulling powers. The circulations given are approximate, as English papers rarely guarantee circulations. We divided the papers into three classes: (a) Those that appeal to the best class of the thinking public;

"The fifteen leading dailies of London have a circulation of 6,665,000, ranging from the 'million a day' Daily Mail to the 35,000 of the ultra-conservative evening paper, No. 2 in circulation is a picture paper, No. 3 is the evening sister of The Mail, No. 4 another picture paper. Six of the nine morning papers have half a million and over, while the three leaders in the afternoon field have 900,000, 600,000, and 300,000, respectively. The three morning papers, classed A, each has less than 200,000, and the other six are marked B. Of the afternoon papers four are A, one B and one C.

Enormous Sunday Circulations

The Class A mornings get, roughly, $100 a column per 100,000 circulation, while the big fellows average from $375 to $400 per column on the basis of a million circulation. The evening rates, with the exception of one rate of $250 for 300,000, are much lower for the bulk and somewhat higher for the class 'A'.

"In the Sunday field the circulations are enormous. Thirteen London papers have a gross circulation of 9,420,000, ranging from 2,500,000 for a sporting paper. Number 2, a picture paper, has 2,300,000, with two others with 1,250,000 each, one of these being a picture paper. There are two class 'A' Sunday papers, neither of which quite reaches the quarter of a million mark. The cock of the walk, with its 2,500,000, is classed 'C,' but its close rival is placed in 'B' category. Curiously enough, all picture papers are in the 'B' class, and they are all tabloid in form. The class 'A' Sundays get a measurably higher rate than the class 'A' dailies, namely, $250 for 220,000 circulation, as against $250 for 150,000 daily. The 2,500,000 circulation one pays $1,100 per column.

"In the weekly field circulations are small, with the exception of John Bull, with 1,200,000, and Punch, with 300,000. Of fourteen weeklies, 11 are in 'A,' 2 in 'B,' and 1, John Bull, in 'C.' The latter gets $1,650 a page, and Punch gets $750.

"In England advertising has not reached the pinnacle of success attained in America, but it is a growing and potent force. Recognition by the Government of the paid announcement as a vital factor in raising armies, in supplying the Treasury with funds, and recently in informing the public of the difficulties of and the reasons for the delay in demobilization, has placed a half mark of value on advertising that is bound to be of great benefit. One of the byproducts of the war has been this cause of education in publicity. The real business man is taking advantage of the situation thus created, and the astute American manufacturer and merchant who is willing to play the game according to the rule will gather his share of the harvest."

DOES NOT BELIEVE IN EXECUTIVES BURYING THEMSELVES

HARVEY W. WHITE.

NOT many newspaper makers are better known to the members of the craft, especially in the city of his adoption, than Harvey W. White, editor of the Buffalo Commercial; and there's a reason. Men who sit inside at a desk meet comparatively few of their fellows in the same line of work, but the reporter meets everybody—and Mr. White served many years in the capacity of a reporter.

Mr. White's home town is Elmira, N. Y., where he was born February 6, 1867. He comes of old Pilgrim stock, and on his father's side traces his descent from Peregrine White, famous as the first male child of white parents born in America. His mother, also, carries his origin back to New England, being of the Adams stock, which came to this country from Devon, England, in 1632. None the less, he chose Knox College, at Galesburg, Ill., for his alma mater, and pursued the classical course there.

He came home after taking his degree, of course, and began his newspaper career on the Elmira Daily Advertiser, then owned by J. Sloat Fassett. He afterward made a brief visit to Lockport, N. Y., where he took the city editor's desk on the Union, but returned to the Advertiser as its city editor. That was when Edward L. Adams, now U. S. Consul at Dublin, was the Union's managing editor. Buffalo seemed to offer attractions to him, however, and he went to that city in 1897 and served the Times there in various reportorial and editorial capacities. Six years later he joined the staff of the Commercial as a reporter, and rose steadily from one position to another until he became managing editor. When the Warren family sold the Commercial to Charles A. Finnegan, Mr. White was confirmed in the office of editor of the paper, thus reaching the apex of the editorial pyramid.

While some men permit themselves to be buried by the duties of supervising the editorial conduct of a newspaper, Mr. White is of different mental calibre. He has never lost personal touch with the world's activities, and always finds time to contribute the leader on the editorial page, daily. He is a master with the pen, and his writings have contributed not a little to the prestige of the Commercial in Western New York.

Perhaps his chief source of pride is his family. He is happily married and has six children who vie with their parents in family devotion.

Business Men May Lay New Pacific Ocean Cable

Present Service So Bad That Drastic Steps to Remedy Conditions Are Needed, Says Davis

Unless there is an improvement in the Pacific cable service soon large business interests will unite to establish adequate means of communication in competition with the existing company, according to O. K. Davis, secretary of the National Foreign Trade Council, 1 Hanover Square. Mr. Davis says that the long delays in transmission of cables have become so frequent and serious that business was being seriously interfered with. In a statement this week he said:

"There are three rates of charges for cable messages across the Pacific. One is the commercial rate, which is the standard; another is the press rate which is usually one-third of the commercial rate, and the third is the urgent rate, which is three times the commercial rate. Ordinary business messages are usually paid for at commercial rate. Such messages submit precedence to all Government business. The urgent rates takes precedence over commercial business, and in normal times would require from thirty minutes to an hour in transmission.

"I have repeatedly sent urgent messages from Manila to New York by way of London when only forty minutes were required for transmission, but now from two to three days are required for the transmission of an urgent message.

"I think it will be admitted that business of such importance as to warrant communication at a rate of from $4 to $5 a word is entitled to have that communication made effective without delay. That certainly is the feeling among the business men concerned. They know from costly experience what the situation is, and are not seeking explanations of its causes, but means of relief."

HAUBRICH FIELD SECRETARY

Colorado Editors Follow Lead of Iowa and Utah

DENVER, Aug. 4.—The Colorado Editorial Association is to have a field secretary looking after the state newspaper's commercial interest and has named George T. Haubrich, secretary and treasurer, for the work.

Among his duties will be to secure foreign advertising for the Colorado papers; try to obtain an equal distribution of political and quasi-public corporation advertising; settle circulation and advertising disputes, and establish uniform rates for advertising and job work.

Mr. Haubrich's position and work will be similar to that done by field secretaries in Iowa and Utah.

A. P. NEWS WIRES SPAN 50,000 MILES OPERATION COSTS OVER $2,500,000

Story of Gradual Development Shows How Mechanical Genius Has Been Applied—Automatic Printers Hasten News Delivery—Wireless Is Logical Next Step

By Milton Garges.
ACTING CHIEF A. P. TRAFFIC DEPARTMENT.

SOMETIME back in the early part of the Nineteenth Century a Commissioner of Patents wrote to the Secretary of the Interior that he wanted to resign. The reason he gave was that everything that could be invented had been invented, and that he didn't want a job that was a sinecure.

Quite a few things have been invented since then. None has been of greater service than those which have made for the rapid dissemination of information. Our people have become so accustomed to the world's news served hot from the press that it is hard to realize that it is not such a far cry from the pony express to the automatic telegraph. Not so many years ago the news from Europe came by sailing vessel or slow steamer, the vessels on arrival being met down the bay by reporters who, after preparing their budgets, sent them off to the editorial room by carrier pigeon. In those days, too, New York got its news from the seat of government at Washington by pony express riders.

Made Press Associations Possible

With the invention of the telegraph and the stretching of the Atlantic cable the development of press associations became possible, and while it is not the purpose of this article to detail the many steps in the gradual march to present-day efficiency, it may be interesting to point out some of the mileposts.

When The Associated Press was founded, in 1885, to lease its wires instead of depending upon the commercial companies to handle its dispatches through the regular channels, probably the most important forward step was made. It became possible greatly to increase the service given to its members, both as to quantity and quality. It made available a wire connecting the principal cities which could be devoted entirely to the transmission of news dispatches.

Enter the Typewriter

It made possible the employment of a corps of efficient telegraphers whose skill with the dots and dashes made for speed and accuracy. It involved, of course, that in those days seemed a tremendous increase in costs, and the newspaper members in only the larger cities could undertake the innovation. It soon proved its worth. The amount of news delivered by this method was immense as compared with the meagre, abbreviated service which had come through by the commercial lines.

For some years prior to 1908 a telegrapher here and there had been experimenting with the typewriter as an aid in receiving press dispatches. The great advantage of this method soon became obvious, and when the Associated Press established its leased wires it required its telegraphers to learn to use the typewriter.

The men were quick to respond, the typewriter relieving them of the strain of the old time stylus and flimsy method which had put so many of them out of commission with "telegrapher's arm"—a form of writer's paralysis. The man who had to handle the copy on the telegraph desk of the newspaper also rejoiced. Now he had clean, typewritten copy, every word spelled out in full, and all the punctuation marks in their proper places. It made his work easier; it enabled the printers to handle the copy faster and with fewer errors; when nearing the "deadline" he found that the copy could be "railroaded" to the printer, something impossible with the flimsy.

The telegraphers soon found that with increasing familiarity with the typewriter they could copy much faster than the best Morse operator could transmit the news and dashes; also that it was easier to work at a higher speed. Having increased the speed capacity of the receivers, the next thing was to find a way to utilize this increased capacity by increasing the amount of matter the sender could produce.

Walter P. Phillips had evolved a code system which he originally used as a method of shorthand reporting. This consisted of a series of abbreviations, more or less arbitrary, but which were easily acquired. It was found that this could be adapted to the more rapid transmission of press dispatches. The sending operator, instead of spelling out the words, letter by letter, as previously had been necessary, could send the abbreviation corresponding to a word or group of words, the receiver would recognize the combination and transcribe it in its proper form on his typewriter.

Code System in Use

For example, the sender would transmit a dispatch like this:

"LD. Mar 22—T fs ac is nw olly pud o a rmkb lg dsc flite ov t Nt Za wh wa pfnd by a Br man-rgrid aisp, the US11, dur t pst fu dys. T vyj took t form o a ekt, mbcg t coast o Denmk, Schleswig-Holstein, Heligoland, Nt Ger & Holland. T trip wa chrd bi xmy ufb wea T trf is rgdd as rnkg as ph t ms notbi flite f k dv nthn."

And as it would be turned out by the receiver, it would read:

London, March 22.—The first account is now officially published of a remarkable long distance flight over the North Sea which was performed by a British non-rigid airship, the US11, during the past few days. The voyage took in parts of seven countries, embracing the coast of Denmark, Schleswig-Holstein, Heligoland, North Germany and Holland. The trip was characterized by extremely unfavorable weather and therefore is regarded as ranking as perhaps the most notable flight of its kind ever undertaken.

It really may be seen that the use of this code, with which the telegraphers soon familiarized themselves, made it possible to handle a greatly increased volume of dispatches and at a much higher rate of speed, but without imposing any hardships on the operators themselves.

WANT MAIL PRIVILEGES

United Amateur Association Selects Birmingham for 1920

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 5.—Two hundred delegates from all parts of the United States attended the annual convention of the United Amateur Press Association of America held here this week. Birmingham, Ala., was chosen as the 1920 convention city.

Roy Erford of Seattle was elected president; J. H. Hasemenn of Brooklyn, N. Y., was elected first vice-president, and Anita R. Kirksey of Havana, Cuba, second vice president. Dottie N. Florance of Snohomish, Wash., was elected to the secretaryship. Other officials chosen were Henry Cremer, Seattle, treasurer; D. Z. Gourman, Seattle, official editor; L. Adelaide Sherman, Coniocnock, N. H., historian; Lenora Pearl Brace, New York, laureate reporter.

A resolution was passed to petition the postoffice department for a second class rate on the amateur publications of the organization.

A Chinese Bureau of Information

A "Bureau of Information" has been organized in Shanghai, to disseminate news of China, free of cost, to the newspapers of America. Dr. F. C. Tong is chairman and George F. Sokolsky is manager. Their post address is Box 2001, American Post Office, Shanghai. It is announced that "the expenses are covered by patriotic merchants and students in China," and the request is made to "please put us on your exchange list, as we want the Chinese to know what America is doing."

Spencer Heads Journalism School

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 4.—Matthew L. Spencer, who rose from reporter to chief editorial writer on the Milwaukee Journal, has been chosen director of journalism at the University of Washington. Mr. Spencer will succeed Colin V. Dyment, head of the journalism department for several years who has accepted a similar position at the University of Oregon. Mr. Spencer was recently a member of the faculty of the University of Wisconsin.

Carter-Johnson Engagement

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—The engagement of Miss Helen E. Carter, their founder and president, to Ralph Gerhardt Johnson, Western representative of the Merchant's Trade Journal, is announced by the Women's Advertising Club. Miss Carter will retire from advertising work after her marriage, which will take place August 28.

New Paper for the Men of Occupation Army

Amaroc News Launched at Coblenz and Will Operate on Plan of "Stars and Stripes"

The Amaroc News, a new third army daily newspaper, has been launched. It will be printed at Coblenz, the Army of Occupation headquarters. It is planned to run four pages daily and eight pages on Sunday and to distribute the paper to the most outlying points of the advanced area on the day of publication, says the Stars and Stripes.

The paper has been authorized by Major-Gen. Joseph T. Dickman, commanding general, Third Army, who himself selected the name. It is made up of the first two letters of the words American Army Occupation. Lieut. William J. Corcoran is the editor.

The paper will be printed at the plant of the Volksreitung, American soldier printers supplementing the German workmen. There will be a daily cartoon strip and a page of illustrations every Sunday.

The paper will come off the presses at noon to be delivered to its readers by mess time.

Urges Patience with Correspondents

CAZENOVIA, N. Y., Aug. 4.—More than 100 members and guests attended the summer meeting of the Central New York Press Association held here and in Chittenango Falls. A. P. Bradt, of The Fulton Observer urged editors not to lose patience with correspondents because copy is poorly prepared, but show them how it ought to be done. He declared much of valuable news is lost into the wastebasket because editors will not take time to edit copy, and the paper loses good will and prestige as the result.

Michael Joins Reciprocal Service

Lieut. William K. Michael, who was business manager of the Stars & Stripes in Paris, has joined the Reciprocal News Service organization, as promotion manager. Like George T. Bye, K. Walter, Margaret Walter, all London staff correspondents of the R. N. S., Lieut. Michael is an alumnus of the Kansas City Star. He will make his headquarters in Kansas City and New York. He went overseas as an officer of the 121st Machine Gun Battalion.

"Smitty" Glad to Get Back

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 6.—Josef Schmidt who has just returned from a year's military service overseas, is back on his old job as automobile editor of the Plain Dealer. "Smitty" was a motor truck driver and saw a lot of the war zone. "You bet I'm glad to get back," he said. "I got enough of that country. I would rather live in the United States."

FOREST WASTE HARMS PAPER INDUSTRY

Embarrassment of Pulp Mills, Due to Lack of Supplies, Causes Increasing Uneasiness, U. S. Forest Experts Say—Industry Is "Unstable"

"The main problem of the lumber industry is a forest problem," declares William B. Greeley, assistant forester, of the United States Forest Service, in a bulletin entitled "Some Public and Economic Aspects of the Lumber Industry."

"Beginning as a widespread industry of small units, like farming," he continues; "lumber manufacture has run more and more to groups of large mills which move from region to region and use up the forests of each in turn.

"The industry seems to have been built up beyond the needs of its market, for at least a third of its saws are idle.

Pressure on Mills

"The very abundance of timber itself —taken into private ownership in too large quantities and capitalized too highly—weakens the lumber industry through its pressure upon the mills. It now seems clear that holding the great stumpage surplus of the West should have rested with the public. The present difficulties of western lumbermen thus are partly the outcome of too liberal a disposal of the public lands."

"Largely from unavoidable economic causes, lumbering and private land ownership have used up forest resources section by section without restoring them. Parts of the United States are suffering from timber shortage and depleted industries in consequence.

"Progress toward an adequate forest policy rests mainly upon co-operation between the public and the lumberman. Little can be done by either single handed."

No Let-Up on Waste

In another bulletin, entitled "A National Lumber and Forest Policy," Henry S. Graves, chief of the U. S. Forest Service, writes:

"The policies of the Government and the States during the next few years in matters relating to forests and lumber will be of far-reaching importance.

"The fundamental economic situation that has heretofore kept the lumber industry in a state of unstable equilibrium still exists. Labor problems, in considerable part due to the unsound industrial situation, loom up with no permanent adjustment in sight. The dissipation of our forests goes on with no let-up.

"Exhaustion of local forest supplies, the closing of industries dependent on them, the embarrassment for supplies of the pulp mills and other consumers using special classes of forest products, the generally mounting prices to consumers, are other factors which are calling sharp attention to the effect of forest destruction, and are causing increasing public uneasiness."

Mills Are Well Supplied

All the American mills, for the present at least, are well supplied with wood, according to R. S. Kellogg, assistant of the News Print Service Bureau.

"Early last Fall, when it seemed the war was going to last a good deal longer than it did the mills put in heavy orders for winter delivery," he said. "The labor supply was good and the winter was a good one for logging, so the mills now have on hand more wood than they will need for a long time to come."

CHANGES IN CHARLOTTE

Groome, Miller and Sims Leave News—Hutto, City Editor

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Aug. 6.—Bailey T. Groome, who, since February 1 a year ago has been city editor of the News, an afternoon paper, has resigned, and will establish here on August 8 a weekly to be known as the Review.

Julian S. Miller, who has been editor of the News for two years, has resigned to become a rural welfare agent.

Also leaving the News is J. V. Sims, circulation manager, who will head a company handling a farm light proposition. The News' new city editor is J. C. Hutto.

THEODORE S. FETTINGER
ADVERTISING AGENCY
KINNEY BUILDING

Newark, N. J., July 29, 1919.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I was glad to read your editorial on "The National Game." Like you, I believe in baseball—have in fact been a fan of the virulent type since boyhood—but never for the life of me could I see why the newspapers of to-day devote so much space to the boosting of the baseball business.

THEODORE S. FETTINGER

No wonder baseball clubs do not advertise. Why should they when the newspapers not only record the games played as we might expect them to do, but write columns of dope, more or less insane, on the most trivial subjects?

One would think that, even through the war, the sporting pages were sacred and not subject to the curtailment that was made in every other department of newspapers.

I hope that the jab you gave the newspapers will bear some fruit and that more adequate news reports of things vital to the people will take precedence over the idle gossip about ball players and the game generally.

And the same may be said of the boxing game, for which there is less excuse for the inordinate space devoted to it by even the respectable newspapers.

Sincerely yours,
THEODORE S. FETTINGER.

The editorial referred to by Mr. Fettinger has aroused widespread commendation from readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, especially from buyers of advertising space. The views of Mr. Fettinger are reproduced as a composite opinion, and coming from the head of an advertising agency should bear especial weight with newspaper publishers who give free publicity to boosting business ventures masqueraded under the guise of sports.

"S & S" Men Mustered Out

CAMP DODGE, Ia., July 26.—The following newspaper men connected with the A. E. F newspaper, the Stars & Stripes, have been mustered out of service at this camp: Harold H. Herman and Lewis W. Norris, Kansas City Star; Raymond F. Walker, Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman; Peter G. Miller and Walter O. Gill, Minneapolis Journal; W. J. McCollum, Sioux City, Ia.; Sigmund Bergh, Minneapolis Tribune; Clayton M. Ryder, Review of Reviews, Minneapolis; Herman Shine Miller, Dubuque (Ia.) Telegraph-Herald. Miller was one of the original staff of four to found the paper.

BIG STAFFS ON PACIFIC COAST

Many Publishers Exceed Quotas to Take Back Service Men

SEATTLE, Aug. 5.—With the discharge of men from the army and released from the Naval Reserve Force, the newspaper field in the Pacific Northwest is becoming overcrowded. There is no serious surplus of newspapermen out of work, but all of the newspapers are carrying unusually big staffs in order to care for former employes returning from the service.

Newspapers generally in the Pacific Northwest have made room for those who answered the country's call while serving on their staffs, although in many instances it has meant exceeding their quotas.

Sherman Leaves Hartford Courant

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 2.—Clifton L. Sherman, managing editor of the Courant, has resigned and will retire from newspaper work. Mr. Sherman began work on the Springfield Union. He came to the Courant in 1889 and has been with that paper since then, with the exception of five years on the staff of the New York Sun. Mr. Sherman's successor is Emile Gauvreau, who has been assistant managing editor for some time.

DETROIT, Aug. 4.—Wilbur Brotherton and Gage C. Tremaine have established an advertising agency here.

JURY SOON TO GET FORD CASE

Evidence All in Record Now and a Verdict Will Probably Be Rendered by Next Tuesday—Will Have Lasted Three Months

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich., Aug. 5.—A verdict in Henry Ford's $1,000,000 libel suit against the Chicago Daily Tribune is expected by next Tuesday night, just three months from the day the hearing began here before Judge James G. Tucker.

The evidence was all in the record today. Great importance is attached by the attorneys to what definitions of "anarchy" and "anarchist" Judge Tucker instructs the jury it may consider.

The hearing is one of the longest on record. It produced a searching analysis of libel laws and precedent and an immense amount of testimony. Approximately 120 witnesses were heard, including Mr. Ford himself and the publishers and several editorial writers of the Tribune, and 408 exhibits were put in.

Arguments will begin Thursday and continue Friday, Monday and Tuesday.

Vigorous methods were required to complete the presentation of testimony today. Details were fought out in argument without first being read and cross-examination was virtually abandoned. Four witnesses placed on the stand by counsel for the plaintiff were not permitted to testify, Judge Tucker ruling that the subjects on which they were called already had been adequately covered.

William J. Cameron, co-author of "Ford's Own Page" in The Dearborn Independent, was sworn to refute the insinuation that Mr. Ford, who refused to do any reading while a witness, could neither read nor write.

"I have heard him read and seen him write," said Mr. Cameron.

PORTLAND TELEGRAM PROMOTES

Cannon Assistant to Publisher—Captain Scott Managing Editor

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 5.—Richard D. Cannon, for many years city editor of the Telegram and for the last year managing editor, has been made assistant to the publisher.

Capt. W. S. Scott, who went to the Telegram several months ago from the Chicago Tribune, where he had served in various capacities for twenty years, is the new managing editor.

William H. Raymond is the new news editor, and Herbert J. Campbell has been made head of the city desk. Charles L. Buiman, formerly night editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, has taken charge of the Telegram's new automobile and farm section.

Three Wisconsin Bodies Elect

WAUKESHA, Wis., July 31.—The Wisconsin Press Association has elected President Kuypers, and chosen Miss Laura Dow of Palmyra secretary and treasurer.

The Weekly League re-elected President Kuypers, vice president H. E. Howe, Prairie du Chien Courier, and J. Walter Strong, Elkhorn, secretary-treasurer.

The Franklin Club re-elected President, Walter Mayer; vice president, George Nash, Eau Claire; secretary-treasurer, H. C. Hansen, Marinette.

Dr. Jose Santiago Rodriguez, special commercial agent for the United States of Venezuela, has arrived in New York to promote the growth of mutual trade.

even if that is done now there is still likely to be a shortage next winter.

"Some publishers seem to be resting easy because they have contracts, but what will their contracts amount to if the mills cannot manufacture fast enough to supply their demands? Even now many mills are looking with apprehension on their coming deliveries.

"The International Paper Company has sent men all through Canada and met every demand for increased money for wood, but the piles at the mills are still continuing to diminish.

"Increasing the selling price of papers to force down circulation will not help so long as the present volume of advertising continues. Circulation has already fallen off but the consumption of paper has increased. You must bear in mind that four pages added to a 20-page paper, on a circulation of 500,000, will eat up a circulation reduction of 50,000, with an added 10 per cent of white paper."

Blames Publishers

Under the head, "Sun of Prosperity Shining on Pulp and Paper Mills," the Paper Mill and Wood Pulp News, of August 2, says that newsprint paper is today selling in 200-ton lots at $4.90 and $5 per hundred pounds with very few takers, "for the reason they cannot get it." The Paper Mill says that a paper shortage now exists and places the blame upon the publishers for refusing to contract at the prices which the manufacturers were asking some months ago.

There is no surplus of paper for emergencies, according to the Paper Mill, which adds that the reserve usually carried was almost entirely wiped out during the strike of sulphite and ground pulp makers.

Government Alarmed

Alarmed at the conditions existing in the paper market, the United States Department of Agriculture has issued the following statement:

"Nearly all of the American newsprint manufacturing industry is located in the Northeastern States—half of it in New York. Forests of wood suitable for pulp-making are being exhausted in the Northeastern States. At the present rate of depletion none to speak of will be left at the end of ever twenty years. But in the Pacific Northwest—Washington, Oregon and part of California—and the Inland Empire of Sweet's western Montana and Northern Idaho are great forests that have been no more than touched by the few pulp mills in that section of the country. And in Alaska are enormous areas of forests, the annual growth of which would supply pulp enough for half of the newsprint paper used in the United States. No pulp mills are there.

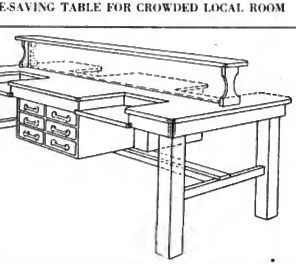
Few Mills Established

"Few pulp mills have been established in the Northwest, and none have been established in Alaska, in part because of the disadvantage in freight rates in reaching the eastern markets. The Panama Canal is believed to have removed much of the reason for this disadvantage, but other obstacles—such as the disinclination of business to pioneer in new fields—remain. Development of newsprint product in these regions is also retarded, it is believed, by the lack of authoritative knowledge of the extent and character of the available supply of forest material, their location and accessibility, available water power, and the general situation which confronts the industry.

"The practice of forestry, which is now the only possible means by a permanent supply of domestic pulpwood in the East, it is believed, would be greatly stimulated by such a survey, which would develop in detail the seriousness of the situation.

"The sum of existing conditions is that American newspapers are becoming more and more dependent upon foreign sources of the raw material from which newsprint paper is made; the raw material is being exhausted in the section where the domestic industry is concentrated, and mills are moving from this country to Canada; while at the same time the United States contains forest resources in the Northwest and in Alaska that promise abundant supply equal to the annual growth. This part, of the program would require Federal and State legislation.

"As soon as practicable, development of the pulp-making industry in the northwest and in Alaska."



NEWS PRINT PAPER VIEWS OF NEWSPAPER MEN

Baltimore Protected

Herbert Wyle, business manager of the Baltimore News, said:

"Baltimore is not going to suffer any shortage of news print this year. The newspapers are fairly well covered, but there is no question in my mind but what prices will go considerably higher. I don't believe publishers will be able to

SPACE-SAVING TABLE FOR CROWDED LOCAL ROOM

THE sketch shown above is of a reporter's table in use in the office of the Wausau (Wis.) Daily Record-Herald. It has attracted a great deal of attention among visitors to the local room and should prove of interest to other publishers whose office space is limited.

J. L. Sturtevant, president and manager of the Record-Herald Company, describes the table, which was designed by George D. Derby, secretary of the company, as being 7.6' x 3.6', with accommodations for four men. It is built of birch with mahogany finish, has drop shelves for typewriters and ample drawer and working space. A telephone is conveniently located on the top shrlf for use of all four workers.

for many years, and indefinitely under proper regulation, if the industry can be built up in these regions.

"A condition of dependence upon foreign supplies of newsprint carries with it serious possibilities not only for consumers of newsprint (chiefly our newspapers), but also for other business interests and the public generally. It would afford a dangerous opening for covert interference with the freedom of the press and with untrammeled development of business through advertising. That such a danger is not imaginary has been evidenced abroad.

Dependent Upon Imports

"A permanent domestic newsprint industry is therefore a matter of public importance. Its maintenance is believed to be entirely practicable if the proper public action is taken.

"The Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture, to prevent American newspapers from becoming totally dependent upon a foreign supply, recommends:

"Immediately, an adequate governmental survey of American resources in this field.

"Immediately, steps to bring about the practice of forestry and the conservation of forests in the pulp-producing regions, to the end that the annual inroads upon the forests will be lessened, and eventually will be no more than protect themselves against 1916 prices at all, mostly for the reason, however, of the few hoarding hogs at an insane panic, buying more than they need and paying any price at all for it, that is, of course, the rich ones. They could protect themselves against shortage by having an intelligent paper committee, one that the publishers would have confidence in, look after the needs of the publishers, who don't seem to know how to look out for themselves, and to prevent any publication from hoarding paper.

"Of course, there was a big contract. The committee also should be made a permanent one and one also that the manufacturers would have confidence in so that they could be encouraged in increasing production, rather than feel, as a great many of them do now, that there is no use of making any effort toward increase, when their whole market is finding a way, or trying to find a way, to keep them out of legitimate profits. I understand that there are vandals in the manufacture of news print the same as there are vandals in the publishing of newspapers.

"I believe that the willingness of publishers to pay a decent profit over cost of manufacture will do more to stimulate production than anything else and with the increase in the size of papers from an advertising standpoint, and the increase in circulation, naturally causing an increase in the use of news print, and with no appreciable increase in the matter of news print, something is bound to snap.

"The only course for the coming season is coolness in action, buying only such paper as will be needed and the 'let-live' policy not alone toward the publishers, but toward the honest manufacturers as well. Right now it is deplorable to get into the New York market and find big publishers bidding higher and higher, in many cases, one against the other, for paper which they don't expect to use."

Ample Supply in Seattle

C. A. Hughes, business manager of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, says:

"The news print supply in this territory seems to be ample for present requirements, although a strike at one of the mills, which however has been adjusted, interfered quite seriously with production for a few weeks.

"As to future prices, we are unable to offer an opinion. In common with practically all Pacific Coast publishers, we are operating under a contract for paper supply covering a period of years.

"Have no suggestions to offer with reference to 1916 conditions to which you refer.

"Our circulation is averaging about fifty thousand net paid daily; sixty-two to sixty-five thousand Sunday—or slightly in excess of the output twelve months ago for like period."

WORLD GIVES WAGE INCREASE

All Departments Are Affected by 10 Per Cent Raise Dating from August 1

All employes of the editorial, report al, editing, art, clerical, advertising of the York World, its fourteen branch offices and several news bureaus, earning less than $5,000 a year and whose wages have not been increased during the last year, have been given an advance of 10 per cent.

Warned of News Print Shortage

LYONS, N. Y., Aug. 4.—Members of the Western New York Newspaper Publishers' Association were the guests of Charles H. Betts at their annual meeting here. Reports of satisfactory business by those present were unanimous, but it was realized that advertising rates and selling prices must be raised to make any profit in spite of the large income from business. Warning of a news print shortage was sounded by Frank Gannett of the Rochester Times-Union. Unless paper rates were kept small. Another meeting will be held in Rochester, October 18.

Pulpwood Prices Go Up

OTTAWA, ONT., Aug. 6.—The high cost of limits will doubtless be advanced in the near future as one of the contributory causes of the high cost of newsprint. Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines in the Ontario Government, announces that limits recently sold brought the highest prices ever received. One berth brought $50 per 1,000 feet on the stump, while several brought $20 per 1,000 feet on the stump.

Rate Up in Augusta

AUGUSTA, Me., Aug. 5.—An advance of six cents an inch, effective August 1, is announced by the Kennebec Journal to "partially meet the recently greatly increased price of labor, paper stock and other materials entering into the cost of publication."

LETTERS OF AN EDITOR TO HIS SON

About six months ago a young newspaperman undertook the management of a somewhat slow going country town daily. His father, an experienced editor, has written him many letters of practical advice. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has secured extracts from these actual letters for publication in several chapters, the first of which follows.

I CANNOT forbear one little 'I-told-you-so. You will remember that I warned you that you had undertaken the biggest contract of your young life in tackling that rundown daily, and that it would make that shave-tail lieutenant's job of yours look like carrying 15 hours in college, by comparison. I am glad, though, the enthusiasm of youth, and its self-confidence led you cheerfully and hopefully into the job. And I am sure that that same enthusiasm and self-confidence will land you a winner, if you will but add to them patience, persistence and perseverance, not always the attributes of youth.

Never for a moment have I regretted the advice I gave you to enter the small town field at the beginning of your newspaper life, although there would have been advantages in a year or more of city experience. The danger I foresaw was based on my own experience, for as you know, I started in the city, met a modicum of success which in a way proved my undoing, at least as far as breaking away for a chance at independence. Promotions and salary increases came rather fast, and carried me over the time when it might have been easy to make a change. I mean by that that I stuck to the city game, and rose as far as I could as an employe, with never a chance of being my own chief.

Introspection

When I used the word independence a few lines back, I sounded the keynote of this little sermon, the hope and equally the disappointment of many a capable newspaper man, who is inclined to introspection, and we all are that at times. And introspection usually leads to a sort of cynicism among newspaper folk, introspection and inevitable knowledge of the weaknesses and selfishness of humankind. When newspaper men foregather you are sure to hear them grumble about their hard lot, traceable chiefly to the alleged fact that they are slaves to a whip-cracking city editor or other boss who in turn is the slave of someone higher up. Most of them are, of course, looking ahead to the time when they can hold the whip and make some other poor devil dance.

Much Yet to Be Done

Really these chaps are hoping for the day of independence, but, of course, many of them will never be fitted for independence, just as you will agree that all soldiers are not fitted for shoulder ornaments, even if they do think they are. The real chance for independence for these grumbling newspaper men lies in the small town field, which, as you know, I have been preaching to every congregation that would give me a hearing, and some that wouldn't. As I have grown older I have repented by own mistakes and have endeavored to rectify them by precept and example. You have given me the example. This is my opportunity as it is yours.

As I lay before me a copy of the paper as it was when you took hold of it, and compare it with one of a few weeks later I see many notable improvements, and yet so much to be done. I recall some of your remarks about whipping into shape a bunch of raw rookies, a comparison that no doubt comes to your mind many times. You got one man straightened out, only to see how much more awkward another fellow appeared. You make one betterment in the paper, only to bring into bold relief a dozen glaring faults. In my suggestions and criticisms from time to time you are likely to find me forgetting the fact that my own experience has been largely on newspapers which had plenty of material, human and otherwise, to work with. Having seen your plant I know your handicap, but I must insist that there are a thousand things you can do to clean up and make better your paper even with the tools you have at hand.

Turning Capital into Dividends

Your paper has been losing money because it did not have circulation. Not having circulation it has not enjoyed advertising, and what it has brings only ruinously low rates. With these, your only two sources of revenues, at such a low state, how are you going to improve your product?

That's your problem, and in a measure mine. Putting the case in another way, how are you going to turn your little working capital into dividends? Your efforts to improve your paper is your answer.

It is far better printed than it was, but don't let up for a minute on your pressman, for he can ruin your work as an editor and as an advertising solicitor. Your readers will not stand for a smudgy page, particularly when your competitor is giving them a clean one. Find time to familiarize yourself with that pressroom, know enough of the machinery to understand its limitations and possibilities, giving the pressman what he actually needs to get results.

Watch Proofreading

Quite as bad as smeary printing is dirty proofreading. Four pages a month ago was as full of errors as a bush league box score, and the worst of it was the, editor did not see them, neither did he care. Hardly a head without a type mix-up, some of them, of course, due to the printer, but many, I am sure, due to bad copy. Heads and stories were "railroaded" to the form without proofreading, but I doubt if galley proofs would have made much difference to that editor, who was both careless and carefree. Errors now are the exception, whereas they used to be the rule, but don't relax for a minute, or you are lost. Appeal to the pride of your printers, for even the poorest of them must have some self-respect. Mark the errors as you see them in the paper, and run down the culprit by proof and copy. I know of one small paper whose smaller editor rather proudly told me that he never saved even to the next day copy and proof. He was a lost newspaper soul then, I know, has received his reward.

Wake Up

Rotten is not a pretty word, but it means a lot, and it fits so well the make-up of many a newspaper. I read not long ago of a western country editor who resented in harsh words what he called this new-fangled higher criticism on the part of city newspaper men and teachers of journalism who urged an orderly and attractive arrangement of news and symmetrical and informative heads. He wrote any old kind of a head, and shoveled the stories into the form without rhyme or reason, and still made money. Maybe so. I know of a storekeeper who boasts that he keeps no books and yet makes money, but these incidents prove nothing except bull-headed luck. Your make-up now has a batting average of about 200, a gain of about 200 over a month ago, but you have quite a spell to go before you can break into the big league. The old editor had an idea, about the only one he ever had, that six or seven stories was enough for the first page, and on these he put big sprawling heads, poorly composed and unsymmetrical, and thought he was fooling the reader into believing that he was getting big and important news, whereas all the time he was losing subscribers. Now you have 18 or 20 items on the first page, with heads that are at least human. You are learning how to trim your show window.

Post, Standard and Telegram, and Miss Ann Orr, co-star in "She's a Jolly Good Fellow," were married in the Church of the Transfiguration, New York, on Monday noon. Lieut. McNeil is a former Connecticut state senator and was in active service in the Navy until June. He is now in the wholesale coal business.

Preparing Wounded Soldiers For Advertising Careers

FORT DODGE, Ia., Aug. 4.—A complete and practical advertising course has been opened by the educational department of Fort Dodge, at Hospital Ward No. 1, and already nineteen men have enrolled. Another class opened in Ward No. 13 had seven men enroll the first day. Miss Elizabeth Canaday is one of the instructors.

The soldiers are enthusiastic about the work. The men are returned soldiers from France, who have been wounded, and are being educated for rivil life before being discharged.

Juniors Elect Officers

The Junior Advertising Club of New York has elected Jack Goldstein, of Harry C. Michaels, Inc., president; Maxwell Bruckenstein, New York City Car Advertising Company, vice president; A. J. Quinby, United States Rubber Company, treasurer; Charles Forbes, Automotive Exporter, secretary. In addition to the four officers, the following committee chairmen were elected to make up the executive council of seven members: E. L. Sullivan, publicity; S. Rybeck, membership; P. J. Baietti, cooperation.

Mr. Manufacturer—put yourself in the place of the retailer who stocks your goods.

The retailer receives an attractive folder announcing a big national campaign, each advertisement to be seen by millions of people!

True!—But millions of people in that retailer's territory will not see this advertising.

If you were the retailer, what would you care about the gross circulation of any campaign? You would want to know how much circulation is in your territory.

Is that the truth?—The Solution? —Localize your advertising. Give the retailer a square deal.

CUSTER'S LAST BATTLE WAS ALBANY SCOOP

Argos Carried Story Exclusively Although Opposition Received Same Wire Service — John Talman Tells Happenings of '70s

Imagine a newspaper today "scooping" its rival, in regular publication hours, on the most important news for over ten years, both papers having the Associated Press dispatches! But just this did happen, in the experience of John Talman of St. Paul, newspaper librarian of the Minnesota Historical society, who for thirteen years was in daily newspaper work.

JOHN TALMAN

The big story in question announced the killing of Gen. George A. Custer and his entire command by the Sioux Indians under Sitting Bull in battle on the Little Big Horn river in Montana.

"It was about midnight on July 5, 1876," Mr. Talman tells EDITOR & PUBLISHER, "that the news of the tragedy, which was enacted on June 25, first reached the newspapers. It was brought to Salt Lake City, Utah, by courier. I was telegraph editor of the Albany (N. Y.) Argus, and, of course, made the proper front-page display of the meager details then at hand. The next morning our contemporary, the Express, had not a word on the subject and the public was inclined to regard the story a hoax until the afternoon papers confirmed it.

"First" Once Too Often

"This lapse on the part of the Express, which went out of existence several years ago, was due to its habit of shutting off arbitrarily before the press report was all in and going to press. The Express prided itself on being the first on the street, but for once it got there too soon, and it was understood that some employes had a most villainous quarter of an hour because of this awful break.

"I had a personal reason for feeling unusual interest in Gen. Custer. In Civil War times the subordinate officer he chose for companion in the brief interludes of relaxation in the desperate fighting in the Shenandoah Valley in 1864 and 1865 was my brother, Byron Talman. Byron, who died in 1909, was first lieutenant of Company M, Twenty-second New York Cavalry. He was in command of his company practically all the time it was in the South and in several engagements acted as major.

"Byron was a year older than Custer, who at that time, though a major-general, was only twenty-four. With his yellow hair streaming over his shoulders and with his fiery energy and daredevil-

Staffs Were Limited

"The manager of the Argus was Daniel Manning, political 'boss,' and a few years later Secretary of the Treasury under Cleveland. The managing editor was Stephen C. Hutchins, a crochetty, irascible man, forceful writer and enterprising newspaper man. He was succeeded in 1878 by the late St. Clair McKelway of the Brooklyn Eagle.

"The political editor was the smooth, silent, ever agreeable Daniel S. Lamont, Secretary of War during President Cleveland's second term, and afterward president of the Northern Pacific and heavily interested in New York city traction lines. For several months while Col. Lamont was ill I took care of his work as political editor.

"To show the sharp contrast between the newspaper work of those days and this, let me state that for years and years I, single-handed, edited all the telegraph and the vicinity and state news, wrote the obituaries, reported afternoon lectures, did not a little editorial writing, and, with the city editor, read all the proof but the advertisements. And once I labored nineteen months without a 'night off.'

Mr. Hill Changed His Mind

"This was 'going some,' I thought, as did others; but in after years my work on St. Paul and Minneapolis papers was such that I used to sigh for a fortnight of my old Albany job as a vacation.

"In 1877 David B. Hill, subsequently governor of New York, United States senator and a formidable candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, was a member of the legislature. He controlled and managed the Elmira Advertiser.

"Mr. Hill's political interests were increasing so rapidly that he decided to drop the more onerous of his newspaper cares. He asked Mr. Manning to find him 'a good managing editor.'

"Messrs. Manning and Hutchins recommended me for the post. Then Mr. Hill changed his mind and concluded to go on running the paper himself, which he did. Many a time have I speculated upon what my future would have been if David Hill had not changed his mind."

Barry Writes from Brazil

J. F. Barry, who formerly was New York manager of the A. B. C. and later assistant advertising manager of the New York Evening Post, writes EDITOR & PUBLISHER as follows: "Have just got back from a two weeks' cruise along the coast as far as French Guiana. The weather here is perfect—not hot as I expected. We start our up-the-river trip in a few weeks. I hope EDITOR & PUBLISHER is still forging ahead merrily. Kindest regards to all."

Tom Downey Injured

BOSTON, Aug. 6.—The many friends of Tom Downey, veteran circulation manager of the Boston Globe, will regret to learn that he is confined to bed in the City Hospital with a broken hipbone, the result of a fall last Saturday.

Congratulated by Officials

Congratulations have been bestowed by Governor Smith, Mayor Hylan, Police Commissioner Enright and other police officials on William J. Murray and Charles E. Seelig for their successful publicity work for the recent New York Police Department Field Day games which drew some 250,000 people. They turned out enough police field day stories that were printed to fill four clipping books of the fourth deputy police commissioner. Mr. Murray and Mr. Seelig are both veteran New York newspaper men. The former is now in the insurance business and Mr. Seelig is now with the Tribune.

Bar Reporters from Police Stations

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., Aug. 6.—A petition for a mandamus writ to compel Mayor Walton and police officials to allow reporters of the Times and the Daily Oklahoman access to the police and public records was filed in the district court here Monday. The Mayor ordered on July 25 that no representatives of these papers be allowed in the police station unless under arrest. An order for police not to discuss matters with reporters was later rescinded.

Building contracts totaling $790,000 have been awarded at Tulsa, Okla. They include a high school building to cost $300,000.

MEN AND MILLIONS

Seeking Oil Create a Giant Industry and a Great Market

When an oil "scout" in the Texas fields flashes into the home office the news that another "gusher" is adding its thousands of barrels to the section's wealth, the glory of that tense moment has its background of weeks of ceaseless toil, careful management and treasure spent.

Oil production in Texas today represents the peak of high-pressured human endeavor.

It demands the best products for its work-money can buy. Prices are seldom reckoned. Time is the vital factor.

When you see the exploration of the Texas oil fields summed up in figures you are, perhaps, amazed. But the material demanded and consumed by development makes a really staggering total.

One hundred million dollars each six months—the average drilling period for a well being three to six months—is now taken by the actual drilling operations. The organization back of this vast expenditure and the preparation for the care of the crude oil takes millions on millions more.

The great oil industry today is literally demanding things which make good in its business. Trucks, motor cars that stand road punishment, steel products, tools, modern machinery, all classes of building material, mill supplies, laboratory supplies, electrical equipment of rugged type and dozens of other industrial products have a greedy market awaiting them in Texas.

Finding the safe, sure road to this new era of insistent demand is the real task for the sales manager. Oil men do not waste time. They expend every ounce of energy in an eternal race with the clock. They demand the same spirit in those who deal with them.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram, a great daily in the heart of the oil fields, takes you there most adequately. An impressive percentage of oil men read it to the exclusion of all other daily papers. Its general news service and its special oil pages satisfy in every respect their need for a "regular" newspaper.

NO SUMMER SLUMP THIS YEAR.

The Star-Telegram carried 388,958 lines more advertising in July, 1919, than it carried in July, 1918.

CIRCULATION NOTES

Street newspaper venders in Indianapolis were ordered by city authorities recently to remove all of their newsstands from the streets, but they appointed a committee which induced the officials to change their ruling so as to permit them to maintain movable stands that may be folded up and put out of sight when not in use.

The Rocky Mountain News and the Denver Times entertained 300 newsies at a picnic at Eldorado Springs, Sunday, July 27.

The Texas Daily Times entertained the Ranger newsboys at a special showing of the "Masque of Life" at a local movie theater.

The fife and drum corps of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Newsboys' Association marched in its first parade July 19, being guests of the Moose convention. There are 65 pieces in the corps and the association numbers more than 100.

The July 19th edition of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star was delivered to Ballston Lake and Burnt Hills subscribers by aeroplane. Plans are being made for permanent air routes of delivery.

Robert E. Mattice, former assistant circulation manager of the Schenectady Times-Union, has taken charge of the Rochester (N. Y.) office of the Crowell Publishing Company.

P. N. Blake, former circulation manager of the Omaha Daily News, is taking charge of a new branch office opened in Omaha.

Earl H. Diggs, formerly connected with the circulation department of the St. Louis newspapers and recently a second lieutenant in the army, has been placed in charge of the new office in Fort Wayne, Ind.

J. J. Maguire, formerly connected with Chicago newspapers, is now in charge of a new Grand Rapids (Mich.) office.

The Des Moines Evening Tribune is promoting an annual swimming contest to be held August 16. Medals will be given to all winners of first places.

Attempts of radical leaders of the Seattle Central Labor Council to sustain news vendors who discriminated against other Seattle newspapers in favor of the Daily Union Record, organized labor's organ, in violation of an agreement signed with all of the publishers of the city, were overridden when delegates from the Seattle News Boys' Union threatened to withdraw from the council unless it stood by them in the agreements their officers had made. The newsboys' representatives bitterly opposed any discrimination in favor of organized labor's paper.

H. V. Parrart, late circulation manager of the Oakland (Cal.) Daily Tribune, and with the El Paso Morning Times, and San Antonio News, is now with the Salina (Kan.) Daily Union.

J. A. McNeil, formerly manager of circulation for the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post Publishing Company and the Evening Herald, has made a connection with the New Haven Times-Leader, where he will conduct a subscription canvass for the next two or three months.

About fifty Dallas newsboys left the city last week under the direction of W. A. Zischang, secretary in charge of the Dallas Newsboys' Home, for a week's outing at Camp Dallas, near Lancaster, on the Trinity River. Funds for the outing for the newsboys were contributed in a "Big Brother" campaign conducted by the Rotary Club.

A. A. C. W. Recognizes Work of Advertising Women

Women members are soon to enjoy all the privileges of the oen in the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, according to the intentions of President William C. D'Arcy and the executive committee of the organization who plainly express their views in the following letter addressed to the advertising women of the clubs.

"The executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs met in New Orleans on June 2, 3, and 4, adopted a report of rules, and I hasten to give you the word that we will make plans to change our Constitution at our next convention (September 21-25) to provide for a woman member of the executive committee.

"Admitting precedent to party, creed or color, it is the valuable servant of all, the property of civilization, and the instrumentality for making, molding and sustaining the right-minded world as well as commercial.

"The women of the world have long since demonstrated their capacity in many fields and they must certainly have indelibly impressed their personality on the field of advertising.

"Therefore, it is the hope of the executive committee that with this increase in our executive personnel the affairs of the clubs and the affairs of women in particular may be advanced and that we may all be better and that the profession and business of advertising be more definitely established and modernized.

"It is our further hope that your club will send a large delegation to the New Orleans convention and from those present honor one with a nomination which will then be confirmed by all the delegates assembled."

BUYING CONTACT WITH PUBLIC

Automobile Manager So Characterizes Daily Newspaper Advertising

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 6.—Newspaper advertising was advocated by William C. Reinhold, Western manager of the Vim Motor Car Company, Chicago, in an address before members of the advertising section of the Milwaukee Association of Commerce. "When you buy newspaper advertising you do not buy space —you buy contact with the public," said Mr. Reinhold. "It is like buying from railroad ticket agents; you do not buy tickets but transportation. A 40,000 circulation of a newspaper is the same as a city of 1,000,000 inhabitants."

After Mr. Reinhold's address the remaining assets of the Advertisers' Club of Milwaukee were sold at auction. They included pictures and office equipments. The club formerly was a separate organization, and maintained club rooms. Later it was merged with the Milwaukee Association of Commerce.

INCREASES AGENCY COMMISSIONS

Louisville Courier-Journal and Times Sets 15% and 2% as New Basis

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 2—Bert N. Garvin, advertising manager of the Courier-Journal and Times, announces a change in commission to recognized advertising agents and cash discount from 10 per cent and 5 per cent to 15 per cent and 2 per cent, effective on all advertising contracts accepted on and after August 1.

This action is taken "in recognition of the splendid creative work being done by American advertising agencies in the realization that they, like we, are laboring under vastly increased operating expenses."

Sues for Life Insurance

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 5—Suit has been filed by Mrs. Mabel W. Bragdon against the General Accident, Fire and Life Insurance Company to recover on a policy for $7,500 on the life of her husband, the late Dudley C. Bragdon, vice-president of the D'Arcy Advertising Company, who shot and killed himself in his home October 1, 1917. Mrs. Bragdon alleges her husband's death was an accident. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of suicide. In addition to the value of the policy she sues for $2,500 attorney's fees and $750 damages for delay in settlement.

Roberts Just Couldn't Stay Away

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 4.—Those connected with the automobile industry of Atlanta are greeting their oldtime friend, Kelly Roberts, in his best role—that of automobile editor of the Georgian and Sunday American. For several months past Mr. Roberts has been on Auto Row as manager for the retail department of Patterson Auto Sales Company, but he could no longer withstand the temptation to go back to his old calling, newspaper work.

Leave Schenectady for Syracuse

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Aug. 4.—Clyde D. Wagoner, managing editor of the Schenectady Union-Star, has resigned last week to accept a position on the copy desk of the Syracuse Post-Standard. He is succeeded by Raymond Mowers, former telegraph editor. Frank J. Early, police reporter, has gone to the Syracuse Herald. J. E. Davidson has retired from the newspaper field.

CHARLES FELD AND ED DANFORTH have returned from naval service to the Atlanta Georgian.

Place Your Advertising in the Big Convention Number of Associated Advertising

The monthly circulation of Associated Advertising which is 15,500 A. B. C. will be increased by the distribution of several thousand copies of the September issue at the New Orleans Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World September 21 to 25.

The delegates and visitors to the Convention, who will spend $200 or more each in expenses, will read every line of the program, plans, day-to-day happenings, entertainment features, etc. These all appear in the September number.

Space taken in the September Convention number will have greater publicity and actual result bringing value than in any other issue.

The remarkably enhanched editorial value of the publication has attracted such a volume of advertising in the past four months that it has been necessary to increase the book from

36 to 52 to 60 to 68 to 72 Pages

Business already scheduled forces the September issue to more than 100 pages. To get a good position, wire your reservation for this number at once.

One page, $150; $5 an inch. All advertising next to reading matter. (Page 8 x 10; 3 cols. 2½ x 10).

NEW YORK STATE

A MARKET FOR FOOD PRODUCTS

7,157,506 people in New York state are "city folks."

They do not grow their own food—but must buy what they eat—and 7,157,506 people eat a lot of food.

This, of course, does NOT include the hundreds of thousands of people from all parts of the country who go to New York on frequent trips—and who are also eaters of foodstuffs in large quantities.

There are 29,758 retail grocery and delicatessen stores in the state of New York, and 233 wholesale grocery houses.

8,852 of these retailers are in New York City. The other 10,906 are scattered throughout the state—1,530 at Buffalo, 814 at Rochester, 608 at Syracuse, 440 at Albany and so on.

It would be hard, indeed, to imagine more ideal market conditions for food products of all kinds.

The market is there. The demand is there. Dealers are there. Jobbers are there. Transportation is there. Money is there.

All kinds of people are included—those who buy because of price as well as those who buy in spite of the price.

Just as New York state is an ideal market for food—so is it an ideal market for any product that bears a trade mark.

New York daily newspapers, as listed here, cover the state in a splendid manner—and reach two out of every three people in the state.

Link your product up with the local dealers in the city in which it is sold and get and give the cooperation that results in sales.

LITTLE TRAGEDIES OF A NEWSPAPER OFFICE

GEORGE C. DIESTEL, cartoonist for the Buffalo Commercial, is comparatively a newcomer in the newspaper world, but his work is making a hit in Buffalo.

Asked for a few facts about himself by EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S representative, Diestel replied:

"Don't you know I'm a cartoonist—a fellow who is supposed to get oodles of cash every paynight for performing the simple process of transcribing ideas on a piece of white paper, and making them look like something they are not?

"But listen. Get this right in your EDITOR & PUBLISHER. I may be a cartoonist, but I am not an artist. No, sirree. When I was about seven years old I overheard my father and mother discussing my future.

"'I guess we'll make an artist out of this priceless gem of ours,' said mother.

"'I guess we won't,' said father, and for those words I love father.

"But I honestly did try to fulfill my mother's wishes for my future welfare, and started along the lines tradition has laid out for an artist to follow. Then I went to work in a commercial shop. From there I advanced to a place on a newspaper. I stayed there until the business office felt that the paper couldn't afford a staff cartoonist any longer.

"From then it was just one thing after another. Now, I am on the Commercial and when I pull something made out of rags, or drawing paper, in other words, that gets by "Bill" Hippler, city editor of the Commercial, I walk home full of good cheer and feel as if mother was right."

AMATEURS MEET IN CLEVELAND

Discuss Launching Chapter of N. A. P. A. —Northern Body Launched

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Aug. 4.—Amateur writers and youthful publishers of Ohio held a meeting at the Hollenden Hotel today to organize a Cleveland chapter of the National Amateur Press Association. The Northern Ohio Amateur Press Association was also launched during the meeting.

Samuel Loveman is at the head of the Cleveland amateurs. Harry E. Martin, of the Mountain Union College and Mount Union Press Club, and past president of the national organization of amateur publishers and writers, was a speaker.

Sells Great Tract to Japanese

LIMA, Peru, Aug. 3.—It is reported that Dr. Augusto Durand, a prominent landowner and proprietor of the newspaper La Prensa, has sold about 800,000 acres of land near Huanuco, on the Amazon watershed, to a Japanese syndicate.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 6.—Earl Craven has sold his interest in the Marquette (Mich.) Chronicle and will come to the Dispatch-Pioneer Press, August 11, as editorial writer

If It's Worthwhile It's In West Virginia

West Virginians—because they are prosperous—are up to the minute and they enjoy the benefits of all the new and worthwhile things that are put on the market.

They know what is meritorious and what is not because they have the happy faculty of seeing into things quickly. They understand what it is that a manufacturer is trying to tell them about when he advertises in their daily local newspapers. If he has a worthy product and gets the facts before them through their newspaper, he is pretty close to making a sale.

In West Virginia, the farmers have their own electric lighting systems and they first learned of this convenience through their local daily newspaper.

West Virginia has about 60,000 automobiles and yet you will rarely see a make of car here that is NOT advertised in the West Virginia newspapers.

West Virginians respond so readily to the advertising of worthwhile articles in their local daily newspapers that there is keen competition among the merchants and dealers to handle those products that are advertised over the dealer's name. On the other hand, a canvass of 40 merchants showed that 28 of them would not be influenced in the lines they handled by the so-called "national advertising" in magazines and metropolitan papers with only scattering circulation in the merchants' territory.

"GREATER FRANCE"

NUMBER OF

EDITOR & PUBLISHER

WILL BE ISSUED ON THANKSGIVING DAY, November 27, 1919

IN cooperation with M. Henri-Martin Barzun, head of the French Press Bureau in America, and former editor of Premier Clemenceau's newspaper, L'Homme Libre, EDITOR & PUBLISHER will issue, on November 27, a notable SPECIAL NUMBER devoted to the cultivation of closer press and commercial relations between the peoples of the great French and American Republics.

This effort will be on the same scale of completeness and impressiveness which characterized the recent Victory-International Number of EDITOR & PUBLISHER—an issue which has attracted world-wide attention and interest.

The "GREATER FRANCE" Number will present authoritative reviews of the French Press, not only in the homeland itself, but in European countries of French language—Belgium, Luxembourg, Switzerland and French North Africa—as well as in French Dominions and Protectorates throughout the world and also in Latin Europe,—countries of French interests and culture, such as Italy, Spain, Portugal, Roumania, Greece, Egypt, Asia Minor, South America, Mexico, Canada and the United States. The publications issued in the French language total more than six thousand.

The "GREATER FRANCE" Number will have for its chief purposes the strengthening of the immemorial ties of friendship which bind together in common ideals and aims the two peoples—comrades in war and cooperators in peace; the establishment of mutual understanding and amity between the newspapers and newspaper men of the world's greatest Republics; the promotion of closer trade relations through the presentation of essential information about market opportunities in "Greater France" now awaiting American manufacturers.

American business men, seeking trade expansion, will find in this "GREATER FRANCE" Number the fullest information as to how to win their places in the French markets—facts as to ways and means of developing these markets and the planning of advertising campaigns in connection therewith.

THE "GREATER FRANCE" NUMBER WILL SET A NEW MARK OF ACCOMPLISHMENT IN CONSTRUCTIVE TRADE JOURNALISM

It will commemorate fittingly the first Thanksgiving Day after the signing of Peace, and will link more closely than ever before the cultural and commercial interests of the two great nations that have best typified, for more than a century, the ideals of freedom and liberty—of "Government of, by and for the people."

NEWSPRINT OUTLOOK

MANUFACTURERS of newsprint are, as usual, delegating to publishers the task of worrying over the present and prospective conditions in respect to supply and price. In substance the attitude of the manufacturers is:

"We are producing as near to the maximum capacity of our mills as is possible under present conditions. We have labor difficulties to meet and growing costs of every kind. Our product must be sold at a price which will yield a profit commensurate with the hazards of the industry. We can sell to other countries at a greater profit than at home—so we must take the utmost possible advantage of that fact. Publishers know that our present shipments equal, and sometimes exceed, our current output. They must know that conservation is necessary if they would avoid trouble in securing the paper that will be needed for the months of heavy advertising."

As to prices, it is freely predicted that we shall have, in the course, four-cent paper—that is to say, four cents a pound at the mill under contracts for large tonnage. In what is called the open market—the sources of supply for extra tonnage and special needs—the four-cent price has already been passed. Recent inquirers have been quoted prices above four and a half cents on limited quantities. Emergency purchases are often made at prices much higher than this.

The advertising volume this year has been very great, and many newspapers are using now reserve or excess tonnage which should be held for the needs of October and November. These present necessities are being met at the cost of future trouble. Publishers generally realize that the problem is not, after all, one of price—but of supply.

In war times the readers of newspapers were content with a smaller proportion of text matter than they now expect. They submitted, for patriotic reasons, to the curtailment of feature matter—the need of which in the present emergency is self-apparent, is so vital that, in the public interest, it should be met. There was never before a period in our history when it was so essential that the people should have the fullest light on all problems confronting mankind. Economic conditions should not be allowed to interfere with the great tasks now entrusted to the press. The larger interests, the common interests, are paramount, and must be served.

But how is this to be accomplished? Surely not through any revival among the newspapers of the old, discredited "circulation wars." Not through practicing waste of white paper to meet the same kind of "competition" on the part of rival newspapers. Not through selling newspapers for less than the cost of white paper and distribution expense. Not through accepting advertising at rates which spell loss.

Nor can the interests of the press as a whole be safeguarded by adhering to old traditions as to the necessity of allotting big space to such topics as baseball, the movies, automobile gossip, etc. If these things were treated on their comparative news value, cutting out precedent and all outside considerations, a space saving of tremendous proportions would result. Of course, in the process of conservation of space for worth-while matter, the press agent must be eliminated altogether.

It is the belief of many well-informed students of the situation that conservation of newsprint will be most effectually attained through a general increase of price to three cents. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has frequently pointed out the logic of a movement to this end. The chance to the two-cent price has much to do with saving the situation during war time. The result on circulations was wholly for betterment. That is a recent history, and familiar to all. The three-cent price may become necessary throughout the country.

Newspaper advertising rates, generally speaking, are lower than publishing conditions warrant. Everybody—including the advertiser—knows this to be true. The reason rates remain too low is one that, on its face, seems so unsound as to be almost absurd. It lies in the fear that the other fellow will adhere to the losing rate, and succeed in capturing the business of the space that adopts the sound rate policy. Advertisers, however, are not fooled by rates. They buy factors of value in advertising mediums—not merely space. They will always pay a fair price for space in the newspaper which can best serve them, irrespective of competitive rates.

The wise publisher will protect the value of his product by cutting out trivial matter to make room for the vital, both in news and features. He will practice every possible economy in white paper—that he may be able to take care of the increasing volume of advertising. To do less—to be stampeded by the spectre of wasteful competition into reprisals in kind—would be to court avoidable trouble.

ON TO NEW ORLEANS!

PUBLISHERS will find it highly profitable to arrange for their advertising managers to attend the New Orleans convention of the A. A. C. W., September 21-25. This year special efforts are being made to bring to the foreground the meetings of the Daily Newspapers Department, and there is in process of making a very notable program of topics for intimate discussion at these sessions.

W. G. Bryan, publisher of the Atlanta Georgian, is chairman of the Newspaper Department and Charles Miller, advertising manager of the Birmingham News is Secretary-treasurer. These live wire executives propose to make the New Orleans convention one long to be remembered by the newspaper men in attendance—and to see to it that there shall be such an exchange of ideas as to fundamental advertising policies and practices that every man feels genuine enough participate will go home with "pep" and enthusiasm to spare.

It has always been a matter of regret that the daily newspapers have not been adequately represented in the activities of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. It has been felt that the great primary medium for advertising should play a more conspicuous part in the big annual conventions of the association, thereby conserving the obvious "fitness of things."

It is to be greatly hoped that the attendance of newspaper advertising men at New Orleans will be fully representative. It is to the interest of all publishers to see that this is so.

THE Association of Foreign Press Correspondents in New York, whose membership is limited to authorized representatives here of overseas newspapers, is an organization of which much may naturally be expected in the way of furthering that international good will which the war has helped so mightily to create. These men interpret us to the world. They give to the people of our neighbor nations a daily picture of American events and affairs. There should be, in the common interest, close and friendly relations established between their association and our own organizations of newspapermen.

MR. DOCKERY'S REASONING

HON. A. M. DOCKERY, Third Assistant Postmaster General, in explaining the department's ruling that book reviews, in which prices are given, must be classed as advertising, says:

"All advertising must be considered, regardless of whether it is paid for or inserted free, and must be charged with postage at the zone rates applicable to the advertising portion."

A strict adherence to such a ruling would place a great deal of current news matter in the category of advertising. A glance through a New York evening newspaper, of August 4, reveals a good many news stories in which prices of things are discussed.

On the first page we note that stocks have slumped, and the story names a long list of stocks affected, with their selling prices. The financial pages of the same newspaper are given over largely to news in which commodity and stock prices are freely quoted.

There are news stories about the army's surplus food stocks, quoting prices. The racing chart quotes the prices bookmakers accept for wagers on horses. In a Senate debate wheat prices are discussed in detail. The price of gas in New York is advertised in a court ruling. Hotel prices in Scranton have been advanced ten per cent. A story about Naval recruiting emphasizes the fact that hospital apprentices, second class, will receive $35.90 a month and expenses. An editorial names the amount being sought by different Universities and Colleges as additions to their endowments. Merchants, we read, have formed a Thrift League, to sell bonds in denominations of $10 and $100, in co-operation with the Treasury Department.

If the mention of the price of a hook, in connection with a review of it, turns that review into advertising, then the news stories mentioned above are advertising, too. They are not paid advertising, of course. In fact they are news stories and features paid for as such by the newspaper—just as are book reviews. But they could not escape the advertising classification under Mr. Dockery's reasoning.

That the absurd zone rate for advertising sections of publications carries with it the possibility of such an interpretation as is now given to it by Mr. Dockery is simply one more reason why it should be repealed altogether.

IF you rent a store or office, you rent by the year. Why not plan your advertising campaign in the same way—on the yearly basis? In the long run the "frequency of insertion" advertiser derives the largest possible return from his investment. Obviously, therefore, the "every week" plan is a "short cut" to success because the rate is lower and the impulse to buy is impelling.

KING ALBERT of Belgium has conferred upon Marse Henry Watterson the Order of the Crown in recognition of conspicuous services to the cause of the martyr nation. If Marse Henry could receive from his fellow newspapermen individual tokens of the esteem in which they hold him—mementos of their debt to him for worthy inspirations—he would be swamped with keepsakes.

ONE of the reasons for the present era of Southern prosperity is the fact that the South is advertising her resources and her newspapers. She is compelling attention—and attention means interest, for the South spells opportunity for all who seek a market for worth while products. Thus advertising is not a result of the big development of Dixie—it is one of the causes of that development.

THE merchants of the country find no particular difficulty in refraining from giving away merchandise. Why should the newspapers find it so hard to resist giving away space to press agents?

NO press agent can hold his job unless he succeeds in getting for nothing that for which an advertiser buys.

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Cary Dowd, managing editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, may be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress. Mr. Dowd is one of the most popular and influential editors in the state and he is expected to make a strong run.

Leo Thomas Heatley of the United Press cable desk is very proud. An eight-pound girl that arrived July 30 is the cause.

Steven Philip Verner, former Washington correspondent and now editorial writer on the Colon (Panama) Star-Herald, was a visitor in New York and Washington during the past week.

W. C. McGinn, formerly on Dallas Morning News, is home after service with the marines. He was wounded at Chateau-Thierry, having come out entirely shot away, but after speeding nearly eighteen months in hospitals, by processes of skin and bone grafting, his arm has been rebuilt and he is able again to work as a cartoonist.

Basil E. O'Meara, recently returned from overseas, has been made sports editor of the Atlanta Journal, one of our papers. W. M. Gladish, former occupant of the desk, becomes automobile editor.

Elmer Lockwood of Ithaca, Dennis O'Connell of Rochester and Glens Falls, and William Lippman of Schenectady are new additions to the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star staff.

Keith Clevenger, formerly editor and publisher of the Osawatomie (Kan.) Graphic, is now managing editor of the Salina Union.

Victor Ross, who gave up the financial desk of the Toronto Globe to become assistant to the president of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, has been vice president of that company and a director of the Imperial Oil Company.

Ralph H. Turner, formerly with the New York Evening Post, is now on the staff of the United Press as cable editor. For two years Turner was United Press correspondent in Tokio, Japan.

Joseph H. Shea, on the Standard-Telegram staff for nearly a year, has resigned to join the staff of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post.

Lieut. John W. Shaver, until his enlistment with the 18th Engineers, a reporter on the Portland Oregonian, was married in New York on his return from France to Miss Margaret Maginnin of Portland. Lieut. Shaver now has a position on the Engineering News-Record staff.

Margaret St. Vrain Sanford, former music critic of the Rocky Mountain News, has returned to Denver after several months' service abroad with the American Red Cross.

Frank E. Nolan is again sports editor of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post, following the resignation of Jackson J. Donovan. He has been also made official scorer for the Americans in the Eastern League.

Capt. William Marquat has returned to the Seattle Times as assistant automobile editor.

Lieut. Thomas A. Hendricks, formerly a member of the Indianapolis News staff, has been appointed to the United States courier service, which will involve much traveling in Europe.

Miss Lois Willoughby, formerly with the editorial department of the old Chicago Inter-Ocean, was married on July 26 to Edwin B. Stillman, of Westerly, R. I. The couple will reside in New York city.

Parke F. Hanley, formerly with the New York Press and Sun and more recently an ensign in the Navy, was married last Friday to Kathryn E. Baermann by City Clerk Scully in New York.

Raymond Mowers, managing editor of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star, is father of a new son.

Arthur K. Purington, city editor of the Bath (Me.) Times, was honored with the following "personal by the Lincoln County News: "Arthur K. Purington, of Bath, the talented newspaper man and efficient automobile inspector, was in town Saturday. As he drove out it was noticed that he had no tail light."

Carlton J. Ketchum, who was a "sub" on the Ottawa (Ont.) Citizen when he enlisted in the early days of the war, has returned with lieutenant's stripes and the Military Cross.

Harold Place, sports editor of the Des Moines News, is the father of a seven-pound boy.

Miss Daisy McGregor, formerly of the Ottawa Journal, the Calgary Albertan and the Calgary Herald, was recently married to Mayor Hanson Mitchell, of Calgary.

Marshall Crosby Rogers, an editor at Fall River, Mass., has filed intentions of marriage with Marion Stetson Brown, at Boston.

Earl E. Evans has returned from eighteen months' service overseas and resumed work as news photographer of the Fort Dodge (Ia.) Pioneer Press. After the armistice was signed Mr. Evans made historical pictures in France, Belgium and Germany.

Alex Sayles, sports editor and photographer of the Albany (N. Y.) Evening Journal, has received the Republican party endorsement for supervisor in Albany county. This is his first start in politics.

H. B. Crozier, assistant managing editor of the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, representing his papers on the tour of St. Paul business men through South Dakota. Howard Kahn represented the St. Paul Daily News, of which he is financial editor.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

Fred B. Robinson, vice president of the Waco (Tex.) Times-Herald, with his family, is spending the summer in Los Angeles, Cal.

Charles D. Ocain, who has been advertising manager of the Santa Ana (Cal.) Register, assumed a similar position with the Tucson (Ariz.) Citizen, August 1.

Harry Watts, advertising manager of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, is spending his vacation in the wilds of northern Minnesota, fishing and hunting.

Ralph M. Henderson has returned to the El Paso (Tex.) Herald organization as advertising manager.

Lieutenant John I. Rancourt, formerly connected with the Providence Journal advertising department, has been awarded a Distinguished Service Cross by General Pershing for gallantry in action at Flanders, France, August 9, 1918, and also a French war cross from the French Marshal.

Wesley McCurdy, assistant to the general manager of the Manitoba Free Press, recently won fame in Winnipeg golfing circles by making "a hole in one" on the Bird's Hill course.

Harry J. Bennett, of the Easton (Pa.) Express business staff, and Miss Marjorie M. Pritchard, were married a few days ago at Camden, N. J.

Robert Lipsett, former news editor, has been appointed assistant to the general manager of the Winnipeg Telegram. He is succeeded as news editor by Vernon Knowles.

Claude R. Sanagan has left the advertising staff of the Toronto Globe to join the Overland Sales Company, Toronto.

Jacob A. Triller, until recently of the advertising staff of the Galt (Ont.) Reporter, has joined the Ottawa Citizen's soliciting force.

H. W. Sierichs, president of Press Illustrations Service, New York, was married July 11, to Miss Callie Thornton Cornell; formerly instructor of art in the Galveston public schools.

J. G. Lloyd, who was for many years private secretary to Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, has been commissioned a first lieutenant in the U. S. A. engineers.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

John Sullivan, secretary-treasurer of the Associated National Advertisers, is spending his vacation at Nantucket, Mass.

Prof. C. M. Sembower, of the department of English in Indiana University, has resigned to join the Homer McKee Company's staff at Indianapolis.

Lieut. H. F. Bauerman has joined the Chicago office staff of J. P. McKinney & Son, newspaper representatives. He is well known to Chicago general and special agency circles.

Miss Edith Sampson, advertising manager for the Daniels & Fisher Stores Company, Denver, has been added to the staff of the University of Denver, where she will lecture on advertising problems.

George S. De Rouville, head of the De Rouville Advertising Agency, Albany, N. Y., has entered the theatrical field and will head a corporation erecting a new playhouse in Albany. The De Rouville agency will be continued.

F. A. Wilson-Lawrenson, president of the New York Advertising Club, has been elected vice-president of the Prest-o-light Company, one of the subsidiaries of the Union Carbide & Carbon Company, of which he is sales manager.

George B. Sharpe, of the Cleveland Tractor Company, paid a visit to his old friends in New York last week, and the Advertising Club took the occasion to present him with a beautiful Roycroft leather bound volume of letters written by members last spring when Mr. Sharpe retired as president and moved to Cleveland.

PRINTER'S DEVIL STUCK TO VIRGINIA AND WON

L. E. Pugh.

L. E. Pugh, the new president of the Virginia Press Association, is no rolling stone. He was born in Virginia in 1875 and has stayed right there near his home town folks since. Twenty-two years ago he started to work as a printer's devil and stuck for promotion and self-made prosperity.

His upward march has been steady and sure. In turn he has been a successful printer, linotype operator, foreman of the composing room, advertising solicitor, advertising manager, and now when he takes a run over to Waynesboro the grown-up kids that played with him in his bare-legged days point him out as the enterprising business manager and one of the principal owners of Newport News' only two daily newspapers.

Pugh believes in Virginia and himself and does things. In December, 1917, the plant of the Newport News Sunday and morning Press and evening Times-Herald was destroyed by fire and put a man-sized job up to him. He bought new equipment under the existing market difficulties and in the face of the scarcity of labor caused by the war and the high wages paid at the Newport News shipyards installed it in record time. Not the least of the things that he had to overcome was the embargoes then in force.

Mr. Pugh is a leading spirit in the Newport News Rotary Club, a director of the Chamber of Commerce, and when a progressive movement for betterment of his city is underway he is usually found in the midst of it with his coat off and his sleeves rolled up.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

John Sullivan, secretary-treasurer of the Associated National Advertisers, is spending his vacation at Nantucket, Mass.

Popularizing Ice Cream Cones Through Ads

New Kind of Advertising Begun by Consolidated Wafer Company Through Mallory, Mitchell & Faust

CHICAGO, Aug. 5.—Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Security Building, Chicago, have begun placing fairly large-space campaign in newspapers in and within a 200-mile radius of Chicago for the Consolidated Wafer Company, Chicago, on ice cream cones. The campaign is at present restricted to those territorial limitations in the way of an experiment, but it is expected that by next year it will be extended through leading newspapers all over the country.

"This advertising," stated Mr. Mitchell, who is handling the account, to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, "is, to my knowledge, the very first to exploit ice cream cones to the general public. It is estimated that the ice cream cone manufacturing business of the United States amounts to approximately $20,000,000 per year, whence may be gathered some idea of the magnitude of this hitherto-unadvertised industry.

"Heretofore, cones has been a sort of outlawed product, suitable only for the consumption of children or the very poor. The advertising campaign now under way is doing everything possible to create an impression of dignity to rehabilitation in public respect for the cone.

It stresses numerous uses for the cone by adults as well as children. It forces consideration of the tasty edibility of the cone, and takes it out of the class of a mere doughy container for the cream. With the country about to go dry, we anticipate possibly the greatest development of the cream business the country ever has seen."

Ohio Woman's Annual Outing

BOWLING GREEN, Ohio, Aug. 4.—The summer meeting of the Ohio Newspaper Woman's Association will be held at Lakeside Saturday and Sunday, August 23 and 24. W. K. Matthews, chief editor of the Dayton Journal and Herald, will be the principal speaker. Mrs. Lida Keck Wiggins, Springfield, and F. Romer of Pep and the Newspaper Enterprise Association of Cleveland, are other principals on the program. The association membership is speeding along rapidly and boasts of the most prominent women writers and reporters in the State.

Will Handle Army Food Sale

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Aug. 6.—The management of the Press has informed Mayor Barnes that it will provide the financial guarantee necessary to allow Binghamton to participate in the benefits from the sale of unused Army food supplies. The offer was immediately accepted. This overcomes the difficulty caused by the New York State Laws not allowing a municipality to enter into commercial undertakings. The Press will take over the entire proposition.

Publishers Pick Jury

HOUSTON, Tex., Aug. 4.—The August Grand Jury of Harris County will be made up of men picked by the publishers of three daily newspapers of Houston, Judge Robinson of the Criminal District Court having appointed M. E. Foster, publisher of the Chronicle; Roy Watson, publisher of the Post, and G. V. Sanders, editor of the Press, as jury commissioners.

UP IN MICHIGAN EDITOR TOUTED FOR GOVERNOR

HAVING been born on March 22, 1884—the same day that the JOURNALIST, grandaddy of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER, made its first bow to the world—and ehoset newspaper work as a life activity, Arthur H. Vandenberg, who has just been elected president of the Herald Publishing Company of Grand Rapids, Mich., was bound to succeed.

A. H. VANDENBERG

His newspaper training has been thorough. His upward trend has been by slow degrees from an "office boy" beginning and covers a period of twenty years. For many years now he has been vice-president, editor and manager of the Herald, and when ex-United States Senator William Alden Smith decided to retire as president, after nearly a quarter of a century of service, it was only natural that Mr. Vandenberg should be chosen to succeed him.

Mr. Vandenberg is very earnest in his belief in the responsibility of journalism. He is one of the few newspaper publishers in America today who insist upon writing their own editorial columns. He is the original author of the plan known as "The Right of Industrial Petition" for establishing industrial peace and industrial justice—a plan we are liable to hear something about in Congress shortly.

The Herald was one of the first newspapers in the United States to swing out for a program of "League of Nations" reservations. Upon the occasion of Mr. Taft's visit to Grand Rapids, the Herald presented him with a questionnaire upon the subject, and as a result was able to print a Taft reservations letter ten days before the disclosure of the Taft correspondence on this same subject with William Hays, chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Being one of the most popular orators in the Northwest, it was not unusual that Editor Vandenberg should be called upon to try for a speech-making record, then record during the various Liberty Loan drives. With "Jacky-Band" trains he swept up and down the state of Michigan and scored a total of 340 war speeches in less than two years of hostilities, besides serving as a first lieutenant in the Michigan State Troops.

Mr. Vandenberg is married and has three children. In addition to other activities he is vice-president and treasurer of the Newspaper Engraving Company of Grand Rapids and Kalamazoo, and a director in the Grand Rapids Savings Bank. His only public office was on the Grand Rapids Charter Commission, but for years he has been a member-at-large of the State Republican Central Committee. He was chairman of the commission that put "Zach" Chandler's statue in the Hall of Fame under the dome of the Capitol at Washington.

A Michigan governship fight now looms in the offing, and there are many people up that way who say that Editor Vandenberg's hat will be tossed into the Republican "ring."

Forty-seven magazines — the pick of the entire country. Good magazines all of them. They are the popular sellers, the magazines that cover the country so thoroughly.

Well, in the state of Illinois, for instance, the newspapers listed in this advertisement, alone, have MORE circulation than ALL of these magazines COMBINED.

The COMBINED circulation of ALL of these magazines IN ILLINOIS is 1,276,485 copies. The COMBINED circulation of the daily newspapers listed here is 1,892,449 copies.

The COMBINED rate for ALL of these newspapers is $2.3304 per agate line.

There are 250,000 FARMS in Illinois, and they are the most valuable farms in the United States.

The annual grain output of these farms approximates 692,-800,000 bushels. That is wheat, corn and oats alone.

It is harvest time in Illinois NOW. Farmers on 250,000 of the most valuable farms on earth are cashing in. They ALL read daily newspapers. Get me? Sure thing you do!

RECORD YEAR FOR OIL PROMOTION SCHEMES

Estimated That Credulous Will Part with $200,000,000 in 1919 for Worthless Shares—Many Newspapers Ban Such Advertising

That hundreds of thousands of hopeful, but sadly credulous people, will be parted from their money—and their Liberty bonds—to a total of two hundred million dollars this year by adventures in "oil" investments is the estimate of the New York Sun.

The army of fakers, whose lifelong business it is to capitalize the greed for easy profits which rules so many men and women, has now turned its attention to "oil," and to the advertising and selling of shares in mythical or worthless claims.

A western publisher said, in a recent conversation with a representative of EDITOR AND PUBLISHER:

"Everybody out our way knows that an investment in oil is a gamble. They know that it costs so much to drill a well, and that there is only a chance that oil will be found. If it is found, they win—sometimes in a big way. If it is not, they lose. They do not buy shares on any assurance that they will win out. They like to take the chance of winning, or of losing. It is human nature. We feel, therefore, justified in accepting such advertising, with proper limitations of the style of copy and the claims made."

This publisher voices the attitude, in a general way, of all publishers who accept such advertising. It is their belief that with proper censorship, the elimination of absolutely misleading claims, etc., such advertising is legitimate.

To Stampede the Credulous

It is, of course, conceivable that there are honest concerns engaged in promoting oil ventures; that they use moderation in their appeals to investors. But it is obvious that the bulk of the oil share advertising is intended to stampede the credulous into making investments which have little or no chance of producing anything.

The aim of a great deal of this oil shares advertising in the newspapers is to produce inquiries, to be followed up by circular literature of the most alluring kind. Thus, while the newspaper advertising may be moderated to suit the scruples of the business manager, the concern has usually in view the obtaining of an up-to-date "sucker list," in which rich possibilities exist. What the newspaper will not permit the promoter to say in his advertising he is thereby enabled to say in direct letters and circulars.

Once on a "sucker list" the victim is a target for such onslaught, by letter, night telegrams, etc., as would turn the head of all but the most cautious investors.

Newspapers which try to safeguard their readers from misleading advertisements of all kinds are drawing the line stoutly against oil promotion schemes.

MODERN WOMAN DEMANDS WIDER READING SCOPE

A VISITOR one time asked Frank W. Taylor, managing editor of the St. Louis Star, who was the best man on his staff.

KATHERINE RICHARDSON

"Katherine Richardson," was his prompt reply.

That was several years ago, when Miss Richardson was dividing her time between re-write, fires, murders, eternal triangles, movie write-ups and high-brow dramatic reviews. At the time it was her daily habit to snub the "woman's page" and ignore "best recipes for rarebits."

Having accepted the declaration of war as clarion call to all womankind to "come out of the kitchen," Miss Richardson hailed with joy the feature editorship of the Star, which included complete charge of the comic, the picture and the woman's pages. About the last of these she confessed she knew nothing, which proved of great value to her in making a success with her new responsibilities.

"The general plan I have outlined to pursue on the Star's woman's page is to admit that women have intelligence—that their reading is not limited," remarked Miss Richardson the other day, "and it is on that theory I am working in trying to hold the mass of women readers who were developed by the general discussions of world questions carried on at all women's gatherings, and the daily search for word of their boy that were 'over there.'

"In getting up my woman's page," continued Miss Richardson, "I work on the theory that the home-keeping woman wants to know how to rear her children; how to arrange well-balanced meals; how to preserve her family's health without constant appeal to the doctor; what women in her own and other walks of life are doing; what civic reforms are afoot; the newest departures in methods of education; how the suffrage situation is progressing.

"Working women, I feel sure, want to know how to better themselves. They want to know what professions are open to them and in what lines of work women have made most marked success.

"And the answer to all of these desires and questions can be found in a story about, an interview with, or a signed article from, some person—man or woman—in St. Louis, so you see, our woman's page has a 'home-stuff' appeal in more ways than one."

A. B. P. Changes Convention Date

The date of the convention which the Associated Business Papers, Inc., had planned to hold in Chicago during October has been changed to September 18, 19 and 20. One or more of the sessions will be of especial interest to advertisers and advertising agents. The dates have been selected with reference to the convenience of those who attend the A. A. C. of W. convention.

The purpose of these little talks about Wisconsin is not to sell newspaper advertising directly, but to picture to the reader the actual territory, as he should see it for himself.

He may be a long distance from Wisconsin, and he may not have a correct impression of the territory. He may not realize the development of the "middle west," industrially or educationally.

He may see farms in his neighborhood that would not be farms at all by Wisconsin standards.

He may see shipbuilding in a salt water cove, yet it would not be ship-building in fresh water Wisconsin.

He may see factories, with blazing furnaces and sweating labor, but that would not mean manufacturing to Wisconsin where the percentage added by the MAKING is to materialize into QUALITY.

Picture Wisconsin as the poet has described it, "every mile a mile of beauty or a mile of riches"; its people earnest, ambitious, striving for knowledge as the royal road to wealth by achievement.

And then you will have the vision to plan for your business in Wisconsin. Living at a distance you will no doubt have something to SELL. Well, Wisconsin will buy it, if it is all right, AND you will let them know about it.

Just advertise it in these papers to the home folks, and SEE that it is easy to order and get delivered.

AIDS BETTER BUSINESS IN LOUISVILLE, KY.

PROUDEST of the boasts of Walter C. Hellman, past president of the Advertising Club of Louisville, Ky., is that he was responsible for the formation of the Better Business Bureau, whose activities are having a wholesome effect upon advertising in and about that city.

WALTER C. HELLMAN.

Mr. Hellman had an ambition to be a mining engineer, so he took the full course in the Lane Technical Preparatory School in Chicago, his native city. The newspaper business drew him, however, so he became a reporter, but soon turned his attention to advertising. The wanderlust took possession of him soon afterward, and he "hopped" a cattle boat in Boston and sailed away to Liverpool. He doesn't say much about the pleasures of being nurse maid to a lot of steers, but he'll still talk by the hour of the fun he had loafing through the British Isles, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Switzerland and France for a year.

Back to Chicago then, and into the advertising business again, this time under the tutelage of Thomas M. Bowers, becoming secretary of Mr. Bowers' organization after three years. He saw something in being advertising manager of a commercial concern, so transferred his allegiance to The Hub, on State street, Chicago, in that position, and after two years went to Louisville to attend to similar work for Levy Bros., the large Louisville clothiers. There he is now as chairman of the Advertising Department of the National Association of Retail Clothiers, of which body he is an officer. His brother, Fred W. Hellman, a former member of the Junior Advertising Club of Chicago, was killed in action in France last September.

Required a Neutral Court

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., Aug. 6.—J. M. Elsen, publisher of the Evening Journal, has been acting as police magistrate during the absence from the city of the regular incumbent of that office. A few days ago he got a decided "jolt" as a result of the arraignment before him of George T. Strong, his city editor, and W. Arthur Moore, former city editor of the Journal and now city editor of the Daily Standard. Moore was charged with assaulting Strong. Publisher Elsen decided that the case demanded a neutral court, and adjourned it.

TEACH MERCHANTS TO ADVERTISE

Dealers Went to Co-operate with Manufacturers and Jobbers, But Do Not Know How, Declares Fred P. Mann, of Devils Lake, N. D.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 6.—Fred P. Mann of Devils Lake, N. D., thinks that advertising is the greatest thing on earth. He said so at a dinner given him here July 31 by the jobbers and manufacturers of the city, who talked over their recent "Victory Trade Tours" in southern Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and South Dakota.

Mr. Mann is president of F. P. Mann & Sons and president of the state organization of the North Dakota retailers.

"I know," said Mr. Mann, "that St. Paul dealers desire to co-operate with local merchants in their territory. I am convinced there must be more of this co-operation. On the recent trade tour I think I found the solution of better merchandising. The selling end of the business must be better developed. Advertising must be universally applied. I have found this true in my own business and I believe it true in any line."

Last year, he said, the business over the counters of his general merchandise store totaled $600,000. This success began from a start a few years ago with $1,600 of stock bought on credit from a St. Paul jobber. His success he attributes to advertising.

"Do you put dealers in your papers?" "Oh, we advertise some," was the reply.

"Advertise more and then advertise more," was my advice to them."

Mr. Mann exhibited a two-page advertisement published lately in his home city. It dealt exclusively with the hardware branch of his business.

"The next day after that ad appeared," he asserted, "we saw a great increase in our hardware sales. That increase is still being felt. I talk up this same question on advertising. It has been responsible in great degree for the success of our business. I am convinced that advertising is the greatest thing on earth. Do not lose your enthusiasm. Keep it up. You will get results."

Industrial Feature Makes a Hit

GREENSBORO, N. C., Aug. 6.—The Daily Record (afternoon) has added a page dealing with the personal and industrial activities in the cotton mills. There are three milling districts in Greensboro, Revolution, Proximity and White Oak, the latter being the largest denim mill in the world. The new feature has already boosted the circulation of the Record considerably.

A Unique Employees' Club Formed in Dallas

DALLAS, Tex., Aug. 4.—With the object of bringing about closer co-operation of all departments, A. H. Belo & Co., publishers of the Dallas Morning News and the Dallas Evening Journal, has organized a "Dinner Club" among its employees. This club is composed of two members from the larger departments and one member from the smaller departments, all elected by the employees themselves on secret ballot. Heads of departments are ineligible for election.

This club meets once each week, on Tuesday evenings at 6 o'clock, at some hotel for a luncheon and get-together meeting lasting one hour and a half. The expenses of these meetings are borne by the company. At these meetings problems of the various departments are discussed, and suggestions are made and ideas interchanged. Information gathered at these weekly meetings is to be imparted to others by each member in the assignments by the department's representative in the club.

In order that all employees may serve on the above club, under the rules adopted a member elected serves for one month, when he or she is supplanted by another member elected in the same way, and members who have served on the club for one month are ineligible to serve again for a period of one year, or until all other members of that department have served.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

Advertising a Solution to Labor Troubles

CHICAGO, August 1, 1919.

To the Editor & Publisher: Feeling that it is the duty of every good citizen to devote some constructive thought to the welfare of the community, more particularly at such a time as this, I am submitting an article on a subject which appears to be becoming needlessly alarming.

The issue between Capital and Labor is not fundamentally of such a character as to be long the most difficult of the problems confronting us either industrially or locally. The requirements of both Capital and Labor are substantially readily certain, and can always readily discernible.

Our Government guarantees to each and all the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The realization of this, however, is impossible unless adequate means of subsistence are available. The desirable facts, therefore, are that Labor must (and I use the word "must" in the full sense of the meaning) make the cost of its subsistence plus a fair return for the per-sonal rate (not an effort to invest), and Labor, too, must be reasonable in its interpretation of what this means.

Our nation, as a whole, with its vast resources, can still afford this. It is equally true that Capital must subsist and be compensated. Industry must make the cost of its production plus a fair return on the money invested, or face dissolution, that would mean unemployment and the utter collapse of our entire social, civic and industrial system.

Capital, like Labor, must be reasonable in its interpretation of what this means. These facts, therefore, offer the logical and only permissible basis upon which an equitable conclusion can be reached. It is my conviction that both Capital and Labor, who are so interdependent upon each other, are willing and amenable to reason. The irritation seems to be supplied and fomented by a proportionately small, radical and thoughtless element.

The spirit of Democracy is to give consideration to the wishes of the majority rather than to the minority. It is, then, should an element greatly in the minority be permitted reasonably to dictate to the vital of our industrial welfare? I believe that the practical solution of the present situation is contained in a thought which was successfully executed during the war.

In its entirety it was a thought co-ordinated by all—when and one allies that the authorities of the Federal alliance could not be reached through reason. It was then determined to reach the rank and file of the people. This was done and this propaganda perhaps more than any other one factor was, for ourselves and our allies a signal victory in the greatest struggle the world has ever known.

Why can not this thought be applied to our domestic affairs? Is not the practical solution with which to abrogate these inexcusable unfounded evils which are heaping over Capital and Labor and nothing the people of this, the greatest of all nations, of that real peace and prosperity to which they are so justly entitled, is conscious, intelligent, patriotic link to say mind be the most practical and economic medium with which to dispose of this vexatious problem and to bring together the contending factors. It should be accomplished and both in quick and unpaid publicity. The paid publicity could be wisely expended by the American Chamber of Commerce and by the American Federation of Labor.

Says Ledger Was First to King George

PHILADELPHIA, July 28, 1919.

To the Editor, Editor and Publisher:

Dear Sir—Returning from a vacation I find in your issue of July 26 the excellent London dispatch regarding the sending of newspapers by the British Dirigible R-34. It is so publicity unique and unfair that I cannot help but write to you.

Please understand that I do not consider it any great journalistic achievement to have a newspaper on a dirigible. It was merely a "stunt" and I think the Public Ledger should be treated fairly in this matter. It was the Public Ledger and not the New York Times that was delivered to King George, as the acknowledgment from his secretary to our correspondent in London proves.

The Ledger understood that the only papers carried by the R-34, with the exception of the Public Ledger, were several copies of the New York Times Rotogravure section and Magazine section (Sunday), July 20, printed in advance of the sailing of the dirigible. It is a fact beyond dispute that in the official log of the voyage the R-34, an entry is made that the ship carried copies of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and that no other newspapers is mentioned in the official log.

I am not asking you to correct your item but I merely want to let you know that exclusionally some one outside of New York has an original thought.

Yours very truly,
JOHN J. SPURGEON,
Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Found—A Baseball Magnate Who Believes in Paid Advertising!

NEW HAVEN, Conn., July 25, 1919.

Editor and Publisher: The impossible has happened.

New Haven has a baseball manager who believes in paid newspaper advertising, and is entirely opposed to the principle of baseball magnates grafting on the newspapers. He is George Stallings, owner and principal of the New Haven baseball team in the Eastern League, and he is going to bring baseball advertising to baseball just as any merchant or manufacturer uses items in the columns of his paper. It is easy for a baseball manager to use advertising as the way all of these ought to use it, but I feel sure you will be interested.

Very truly yours,
W. R. HENDRICK,
Publisher New Haven Times Leader.

Washington Star Omitted in Error

To Editor & Publisher: We find that the Washington Star figures for the first 6 months of 1919 was omitted from the lists in the full page advertisement of the Detroit News in the July 24 issue. This was no fault of yours nor of ours, as we used figures furnished us in advance by the Advertising Age of Chicago, and they did not include the Star in their list. It is although the July issue of the magazine did.

The Washington Star carried 3,548,256 lines daily and Sunday and 6,638,251 lines week-days only. This daily average ranked the Star fifth place on the seven day list and eighth place on the six day list.

The standing of your newspaper in your city is measured directly by the extent of your service to your readers. There is little difference in the news-contents and in slight differences in editorial opinions. The service in your readers is largely a matter of entertainment and information aside from the news.
On this principle, the service of The Associated Newspapers has been built. The Associated letters are the answer to a better standing in its community.

LOVES, AND IS LOVED BY, CHILDREN

JUDD MORTIMER LEWIS

JUDD MORTIMER LEWIS, who is known as the editor of the "Tampering with Trifles" column of the Houston Post, the Post's poet and the friend of children, may be honored by the city namin, a school after him. Mr. Lewis' child poems are known all over the world. He has been with the Houston Post since 1900 in one capacity or another and has proved his efficiency in all lines of newspaper work. He began to earn his living when a very small boy in Cleveland, Ohio, where his parents had moved from Fulton, N. Y., his birthplace.

Lewis did not have much of an opportunity for education, for he had to help to take care of the family. But he "read up" in everything and got into newspaper work. About the time of the Spanish-American war he took to poetry and verse writing and made good right off. Nineteen years ago he joined the Houston staff and continued his success there.

Feeling that he ought to do something for humanity, Mr. Lewis conceived the idea of conducting a "baby bureau" through the columns of the Post. This proved a wonderful work and attracted attention all over the United States. Only recently, the Post under his management gave what was called the "Kiddies' Picnic." The Post is still receiving letters from little friends thanking it for the good time they had at the picnic.

Mr. Lewis has two young daughters of his own who are known as "Eyes of Nine" and "Touselhead" through his child poems. He is called upon to tell stories at the various schools and every child knows and loves him.

A. P. WIRES SPAN 50,000 MILES FOR NEWS

Newspaper publishers always have been a progressive lot, and it wasn't long before the leased wire system was further extended until it embraced most of the cities of a hundred thousand population, or more.

The publisher in the small town, who could not afford the cost of a leased wire, but who required a greater volume of news than he could secure over the commercial companies' wires, had to be taken care of. This led to experiments with the long-distance telephone as a method of transmitting news dispatches. From these first attempts eventually was evolved a system which has been highly beneficial to the small town publisher.

The telephone company agreed to lease wires for what it termed PNT and SPT circuits (which mean Public News Transmission and Special Period Talking circuits) at a rate much lower than the usual charge for commercial calls. It also provided a special instrument for the transmitting and receipt of dispatches by telephone.

The reader (who corresponds to the sending operator on a telegraph circuit) talks into a special transmitter designed to increase the volume and carrying capacity of his voice. He is equipped with a head-piece which permits him to hear any "breaks" from the receivers, and also frees his hands for handling the copy.

At the receiving end there is a corresponding instrument. The receiver straps on the head-piece, mimbers his typewriter and is ready for business. The calls come in periods ranging from five minutes at a time to half an hour or more. With three five-minute calls the small town paper can receive from 1,000 to 1,500 words a day, while in an hour as much as 5,000 words can be transmitted by this method.

The newest method of transmitting news dispatches, and the one which it is thought will eventually show the way to the greatest development of press associations is the automatic telegraph printer.

This machine was first experimented with by The Associated Press in 1912, as a method of local delivery to the New York papers. From the headquarters at 51 Chambers street various telegraph lines radiate to the eighteen newspapers which are members of this organization. At the newspaper end of each of these lines is a machine, in appearance much like the ordinary typewriter, which reproduces all news transmitted from the central office. The modus operandi is this:

At the central office there is a tape cutting device by which the operator perforates a strip of tape in a code which, when it is passed through a transmitter, sends on the line a combination of positive and negative impulses. Five impulses in various combinations form all of the letters of the alphabet, the cardinal numbers and punctuation marks. At the receiving end, a series of selectors pick up the varied combinations, and partly by the utilization of the electric current, partly by mechanical operations put into effect by the current, the proper letter or figure on the typewheel is presented, the type is struck against the paper and the wheel stepped forward for the next letter. At the end of a line the line space and carriage return selectors perform the functions indicated.

It is possible to operate these machines at a speed of 60 words a minute, so that one of them can, in ten hours, deliver the equivalent of more than 30 columns of news.

The experiment with local delivery by this method was so successful that the automatic was tried on long line work. It was equally successful here and circuits are now in operation between New York, New Haven, Hartford, Worcester, Springfield, and Boston; between Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Minneapolis and between New York and Philadelphia.

It is expected that soon it will be possible to adapt the automatic printer to the smaller services now carried by telephone, and it is not beyond the realms of possibility that within a very few years every telegraph editor will have an automatic printer at his elbow, unreeling reams of copy ready for his hand.

The rapidity with which transmission improvements have developed press associations may be indicated by the statement that to-day The Associated Press has leased 50,000 miles of leased wires carrying its service into every state of the Union; employs nearly 70 skilled telegraphers; uses a hundred automatic printers and serves about 25 of its 1,165 members by telephone. It expends annually in wire rentals and operators wages more than $2,500,000.

In addition it has linked the whole western world in a network of communicating lines. It serves the great papers of South America which hold memberships in its co-operative organization with a daily news service of nearly 4,000 words. This goes to them on a cable 7,850 miles in length. It serves 17 members in Mexico City by cable working directly from its Galveston bureau to the City of Mexico. It has a leased cable to serve its members in Hawaii, and a half-dozen or more members in Alaska receive a cable service over the government lines.

Members at Honolulu and other cities in the Pacific islands get their daily news budget flashed by wireless from San Francisco, while the whole of Canada is served through the alliance with the co-operative organization known as The Canadian Press. Interesting experiments are being made with the wireless telephone and it is expected that before a great while this marvel of science also will be yoked to the press association chariot.

THERE are some lines of advertising the appeal of which is directed almost exclusively to the class of people financially able to gratify their desires for the best.

In every large city you will find one paper of such a character and so edited that it reaches practically every person belonging to this class.

THE CHICAGO EVENING POST

is such a paper and automobile advertisers find their customers almost exclusively among this class.

For years THE CHICAGO EVENING POST has carried more automobile advertising than any other Chicago evening paper. The figures for 1918 follow:

	Columns
The Chicago Evening Post	1,049.42
The Daily News	891.17
The Journal	550.05
The American	412.22

The Mount Vernon, N. Y. DAILY ARGUS

carries more display advertising than any other paper in Westchester County

This is an acknowledgment of its power that the advertiser should heed, if desirous of reaching the people of Mount Vernon.

TRIBUTE TO MR. FULLER BY OLD ASSOCIATE

D. M. Lord Says World Is Poorer for His Passing—Only Two or Three of the Old Generation of Advertising Men Left

By D. M. Lord.

The world is poorer for the passing of Charles H. Fuller. The advertising fraternity, especially, has lost a leader.

Mr. Fuller belonged to what might be termed the second generation of the advertising fraternity. G. P. Rowell, S. M. Pettinghill and J. H. Bates were the originals in the business in this country. They have long since passed on, and the second generation is now on the borderland, with probably but a few years to remain with us.

Mr. Fuller's conception of the advertising business, was of the highest order. He did not believe in spending money in advertising without hope of return to the spender. He might well be classed as the highest type of promoter of business by advertising. Given a manufacturer with a line of goods that the general public needed, so great was his confidence that advertising would bring success that he would risk his money in promoting the business, which undoubtedly represented the farthest advance of any of the older concerns in this line.

Helped Make Advertising a Science

At the time he established his business, advertising was not recognized as a science, in fact, was looked upon with suspicion. He early realized that it was a science deep and hidden, its development worthy of the thought of the ablest minds.

To place it where it belonged, he devoted much time and thought. It was in Chicago that the first Advertising Agents' Association was formed. He, with two or three others of like mind as himself, spent many hours planning and working to place advertising on a plane with other sciences and force its recognition as one of the most necessary factors in the development of modern business.

It cannot be claimed that the present high standing of the profession is the result of the efforts mentioned, but it cannot be denied that from these meetings started the currents that have carried it to its wonderful position.

Greatest Pleasure Was to Help Others

In character he was high-minded. He believed in standing for what was right, even though it meant financial loss. He believed the ethics of the business were built on the lines of the golden rule. He was known among the fraternity as Uncle Charlie.

His great pleasure was to reach a helping hand to some stumbling advertising man and put new life and hope in one who was headed for failure. There were a number of such cases.

He retired from business early enough in life to enjoy the money he had made, and was not forced to spend the remainder of his life in nursing a body crippled with overwork and nervous exhaustion.

He has passed on to that mysterious beyond to receive the reward of a life well spent and to receive the reward that comes to those of whom it may be said "Well done."

There are now only two or three of what may be termed the second generation in the advertising business, and their call cannot be long delayed.

Willis S. Thompson Passes Away in Indianapolis

Once Owned Indianapolis Sun, Pittsburgh Sun, Syracuse Telegram, and Managed Other Prominent Dailies

Willis S. Thompson, former owner and publisher of the Indianapolis Sun, died of heart trouble on August 1 in an Indianapolis hospital, aged 57 years. He was connected with many newspapers throughout the country, was the founder of the Pittsburgh Sun and at once time was the owner of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Telegram.

For two years he was with the San Francisco Examiner and for twelve years with Denver papers. For the last two years he was in charge of publicity and directory publications for the Central Union Telephone Company.

Andrew Geyer Dead

BELMAR, N. J., July 31.—Andrew Geyer, president of the New York publishing company bearing his name, died here today, aged 70 years. He founded Geyer's Stationer, a weekly trade paper, and was one of the organizers of the Stationers' Association of New York, the Stationers and Publishers Board of Trade and the Booksellers and Stationers' Provident Association, as well as an honorary member of the Association of Stationers and Manufacturers.

Veteran Editor Dead in Brooklyn

Wallace P. Groom, eighty years old, formerly editor-in-chief of the New York Mercantile Journal, died August 4 in Brooklyn of old age infirmities.

Obituary

WILLIAM TAIT, 95, paper manufacturer and former president of the Tait & Sons Paper Co., died in Bridgeport, Conn., July 25. He learned the paper making business in Trumbull as a boy.

JAMES A. MOORE, a reporter for the Watertown (N. Y.) Times, was killed when crushed beneath his automobile last week. He was covering an accident in which there had been several deaths and in attempting to rush one of the victims to the hospital accidentally drove off the road and into a gulley. Other newspapermen with him were injured.

HENRY J. CALNAN, 61 editor and owner of the Troy (Kans.) Chief, died July 29 from apoplexy. Mr. Calnan came to Troy in 1904 to assume the editorship of the paper, following years of newspaper work in Iowa, Colorado and other mid-West States. He later purchased the paper.

EDWARD CONNOLLY, 25 years old, fell from a press in the New Haven Register plant Sunday and died shortly afterwards from a fractured skull.

MRS. EMILY E. CUTLER, mother of Monte Cutler, a New York newspaper man, died of apoplexy in the New Rochelle Hospital, July 31, in her 85th year.

CHARLES O. LAFFERTY, a veteran compositor who had worked on newspapers in Akron, Ohio, Newark and Pittsburgh, died July 25 in the latter city, aged 65 years. He leaves a widow and three children, of whom Joseph E. Lafferty is with the Pittsburgh Sun and Mary is in the business office of the Dispatch.

GEORGE WARD COOK, for 50 years prominent as a newspaper man and politician in Akron, Ohio, died in Haverhill recently. After serving in the Civil War, Mr. Cook learned the newspaper business on the Newburyport Herald and in 1850 founded the Lawrence American. He established the first newspaper in Watertown, also the Everett News, and in connection with Hon. Wilmot R. Evans, president of the Winthrop National Bank of Boston, published and edited the Everett Republican. He later was editor and proprietor of the Beverly Times and editor of the Beverly Citizen. For four years he was the Newburyport correspondent of the Boston Globe, and also worked on the Wakefield Item.

EDWARD MCGOWAN, for 30 years an employe of the New York Press Club and widely known by newspaper men, died in Roosevelt Hospital August 1, aged 63 years.

A. H. STUHLTAUTH, editor and publisher of the Ellensburg (Wash.) Capital, died July 8 of apoplexy. Previously he had been associated with the Salt Lake Tribune and other Western newspapers.

JOSEPH F. SWEENEY, assistant circulation manager of the Brooklyn Citizen and connected with that paper for more than 20 years, died July 30 of appendicitis.

TWO DAILIES QUIT IN TULSA

The Morning Times and The World's Afternoon Edition Cannot Stand High Cost of Operation and the Prohibitive Labor Conditions

TULSA, Okla., Aug. 6.—The Morning Times, established three years ago by Charles Page, owner of the Tulsa Democrat, as the morning edition of the Democrat, suspended Thursday. High cost of operating expenses and the employment situation caused the suspension.

The Tulsa World's afternoon edition also suspended Thursday for the same reason.

NEW EQUIPMENT IN BINGHAMTON

Both Dailies of City Are Planning Extensive Plant Enlargements

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Aug. 5.—The Binghamton Press has just announced the purchase of extra equipment which will amount, it is estimated, to about $15,000, to carry out its policy to enlarge and improve its daily editions. Two new Intertype machines have been purchased and are being installed, making a battery of twelve machines now operating. Other new equipment will be added as rapidly as it can be obtained, it is said.

At the same time it is stated that the Binghamton Republican-Herald will spend about $80,000 on new presses and machines and other equipment to be installed in its new building, which, it is expected, will be ready for occupancy in less than six months.

Ketchikan Chronicle Appears

SEATTLE, Aug. 5.—The Chronicle, published at Ketchikan, is Alaska's newest daily newspaper. The first issue appeared July 23. It is an eight-page evening paper and edited by Edward G. Morrissey, formerly connected with the editorial staff of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, and well known in Alaska journalism. Bernard M. Stone, formerly of the Seward Gateway and other Alaska papers, is business manager.

Enlarging in Schenectady

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Aug. 5.—A new addition is being constructed to the present plant of the Daily Gazette to enable enlargement of the composing department. When the work is completed a number of new linotype machines will be installed and other mechanical improvements added to the present equipment.

Fire in Troy Budget Plant

TROY, Aug. 4.—The plant of the Troy Budget suffered several thousand dollars damage as the result of a fire July 21. Twenty rolls of paper and two barrels of ink were consumed by the flame, which threatened at one time to spread to the editorial and advertising departments.

FRENCH JOURNALISTS HERE

Four Representatives of French Press Welcomed as High Commissioners

Four French newspaper men have come to the United States to serve as members of the French High Commission, and a dinner to welcome them and in honor of two departing commissioners was given at the Vanderbilt Hotel last Friday, with Judge E. H. Gary as the principal speaker.

The toastmaster was Maurice Carcanave, chief of the French High Commission, who paid a glowing tribute to Urbon Gerard, professor of the department studies of the French Commission, and Henri Delmas, of the Havas Agency, who left here on Monday.

He welcomed to America E. Grosclaude, of the Paris Journal; H. C. Delavand, of the Havas Agency; Lieutenant George Dinago, now representing Le Temps in this country, and Captain L. Loewy, of L'Information, of Paris.

In speaking of the making of peace, Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, declared that "it is more difficult to establish a peace than to conduct a war—much easier to destroy than to build up. A child can knock down that will destroy a palace, but that child cannot build a palace. Let us look forward," he continued, "and not backward."

Percy Bullen, treasurer of the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents, spoke of the co-ordination between the press associations during the war, declaring there had been no more harmonious work throughout the great war machine.

Attempt to Unionize News Writers in Seattle

It Is Reported That $42.50 Will Be Demanded as Minimum Weekly Scale—Editors Not Wanted.

SEATTLE, Aug. 4.—A movemeot has been launched to unionize the newspaper mco on the Pacific Coast. Newspaper Writers' Union No. 12 has already come into being, and members of the Daily Record staff, published by orgaoized labor, are fathering the plan, which is making some headway.

Individual letters were sent out this week to every ocwspaper man employed on the Seattle dailies, "except editors who employ and discharge help," calling upon them to attend a meeting to be held soon. It is reported that the union plans to ask for a minimum wage of $42.50 a week for experienced reporters and copy desk men.

All Wages Raised in Binghamton

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Aug. 5.—The employees of the mechanical departments of the Binghamton Republican-Herald and the Binghamtoo Press have won their demands for increases, the publishers agreeing to increase the scale in all departments $7 a week. This gives the compositors and llootypers working on the day shifts $34 and those on the night shifts $37 a week, with time and a half for extra work. General increases are also made in the editorial and business departments, affecting all classes of employes and ranging from $3 to $8 weekly.

Wages Go Up in Lewiston

LEWISTON, Me., Aug. 5.—Sixty union employees of the Lewiston Sun and Journal, respectively, morning and evening papers, received an increase averaging $6 weekly by an agreement reached on July 24. The new scale, effective at once, and in force until July 1, 1920, provides a minimum of $24 for day work and $27 for night work.

Dry Law Hits Chicago Press Club

CHICAGO, Aug. 4.—The boast of the Chicago Press Club to be the only large Loop organization of like nature whose doors never are locked, can no longer be truthfully made. After nearly five decades of distinguished and sleepless history, the directors have decided to, for the first time, close the clubrooms at 12 midnight, from July 17 and throughout the month of August "at least." Attendance has fallen off radically since the dry legislation went into effect.

Portsmouth to Have New A. M. Paper

THE MAN WHO HANDLES DOUGLAS ADVERTISING

FRANK L. ERSKINE

AS an incentive to other young men not to neglect their parents, just see what exercise of the filial spirit did for Frank L. Erskine.

Frank is a Reading, Pa., boy by birth, and the birth occurred July 29, 1874. He got into high school at the usual age, and after school hours worked in an insurance office as an outlet to his industrious proclivities. Then he went to Philadelphia to take a place in the office of the famous lawyer, Wayne Mc-Veagh. Young Erskine intended to study law as he got opportunity, but the fates sent his parents to live in Brockton, Mass. The lad stayed where he was until his next vacation in 1891.

Instead of devoting this spare time to an outing at some resort, he traveled to Brockton to pay a visit to his parents. While he was there he met W. L. Douglas, the famous shoe manufacturer, with the result that he started work in the advertising department of the Douglas Shoe Company the next month—October. It took him only seven years to climb to the position of advertising manager, and four years after achieving that step he was elected a director of the company.

Mr. Erskine was identified with the campaign that resulted in the election of his chief to be Governor of Massachusetts, in 1904. He has served in the Brockton city government and has been on the school board there for six years. Last year he was made sales manager of his company. He is somewhat of a club man, but never allows club life to interfere with his business.

PENNSYLVANIA

AND

Woolen Goods

This year's production $80,000,000

Pennsylvania's chief fame lies in the production of Coal, Petroleum and steel products and we are liable to overlook a mere matter of some eighty millions of dollars worth of woolens which come from Pennsylvania looms this year.

The fact is Pennsylvania is second only to Massachusetts in this most important industry—and woolens amount to practically one third the value of the manufactured products in the state—the second most important state in the Union.

Pennsylvania, ranking second in importance of all the states, ranks equally high as a trading territory, and, when properly cultivated, (that is cooperatively with local merchants and local daily newspapers) produces astonishing results.

These daily newspapers work in harmony with local retailers in their communities, and can do great work for national advertisers in making a mighty worth while market worth a whole lot to them.

The city population of the cities in which this list of daily newspapers is published is 3,204,696.

The combined circulation of these daily newspapers is 678,802 and the combined rate on 2,500 line basis is $1.6323 and on the 10,000 line basis $1.4418.

BEAT JULY BUILDING RECORD

Completed Constructions Here $6,281,930 More Than Highest Figure

Building work started in Philadelphia this month has an aggregate completed construction value of $6,281,930 greater than that for any previous July.

There were 917 permits, for 1,560 operations, taken out at the Bureau of Building Inspection. The value figure compares with $1,137,745 for July last year, $5,195,365 for 1917, and $3,101,385 for 1916, the year before the United States entered the war against Germany.

In the first seven months this year the bureau granted permits for $28,264,920 worth of building, distributed among 8,565 operations. The valuation figures for the corresponding period in recent years were: 1918, $10,269,830; 1917, $25,726,585, and 1916, $28,155,105.

Itemization of the current July report includes 638 two-story dwellings valued at $3,150,300; 74 three-story dwellings, $810,300; 7 factories, $347,500; 92 garages, $232,770, and additions, alterations and repairs to present buildings, $1,233,435.

Home and factory building and construction is going forward with a rush in Philadelphia.

War-time scarcity of houses has led to the formation of many Tenants' Associations, one of them alone planning to put up 6,000 dwellings.

Building construction, alterations, enlargements, renovations, refurnishing and painting are the order of the day. 411,583 buildings of all kinds are now in Philadelphia. Thousands more are under way.

NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS STRIVE TO CONSERVE NEWSPRINT, ANTICIPATING SHORTAGE

They Plan to Profit by Editor & Publisher's Warning That Conditions for Future Delivery of Paper Are Daily Becoming More Critical and United Action Must Be Taken for Their Mutual Protection

WITH a full realization of the seriousness of the newsprint situation in the United States and Canada, as a result of the warning sounded by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, newspaper editors and publishers are now heeding every effort to meet the big problem of supply and excessive demand that faces them.

It is generally accredited that the conditions for the future delivery of paper are growing more critical each day, and that some united action must be taken by newspaper makers at once for the protection of their own business.

In a bulletin, that has just been issued from the New York headquarters, members of the American Newspaper Publishers Association are warned that the utmost possible conservation of newsprint is now necessary. It is pointed out that publishers are experiencing extreme difficulty in securing additional tonnage above contract, and such that can be found is offered at prices well in excess of $375.

Recently some lots of newsprint have been offered at from $4.10 to $4.40 f.o.b. mill, and some small offers are reported as high as $5.20 delivered.

A meeting of the publishers of Louisville has been called for this week to discuss the situation and the same action will probably be taken in other cities.

Hopeful Note from Canada

The one hopeful note during the last week came from Montreal where the Newsprint Bureau is in session. Manufacturers pointed out that an increased production was to be expected and makers of newsprint machinery reported unusual activity in their business.

Some publishers are now advocating a return to government control of the situation as the possible means of overcoming the threatened crisis. The statement of S. S. Carvalho, one of the highest authorities in America on publishing conditions, published in the last issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, in which he declared that paper stocks at the mill had already reached the danger line and immediate steps to bring about conservation are a necessity if actual paper want during the months of December, January and February, is to be prevented.

While the general raising of newspaper sales rates to dealers and carriers seems to be one of the possibilities of the very near future, many American publishers believe that this alone will not be enough, and that other means will have to be taken to save paper.

It is now generally accepted, as pointed out by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, that supply and not price warrants first consideration. During the past week the papers of America have continued to eat into the available supply. The bulletin issued by the A. N. P. A. says:

"It is reported that the mills now have on hand an average of but four days' supply, or less than at any time during 1918, notwithstanding the fact that during the first six months of this year production exceeded that of the first six months of 1918 by approximately 6 per cent. The Federal Trade Commission reports show that on June 30 there was on hand and in transit an average of about 37 days' supply against the supply of 56 days on June 30, 1918.

Supply Is Low

"There seems to be less surplus newsprint available for use at the present time than at any time during the war, and any interruption of production or transportation would result in even increased prices because of the absence of reserve stock or any margin of safety.

"There seems to be no hope of relief through increased production of newsprint being secured at the expense of the production of specialties because the specialty market is reported to be at the present time as high or higher comparatively than newsprint.

"There is reason to believe that the quantity of advertising will increase in the near future and the only visible hope of relief for the present seems to be in universal and thorough economy on the part of consumers.

"It is suggested that publishers immediately cooperate with other publishers in their city with a view to taking steps to reduce consumption, and thereby lessen the danger of largely increased prices and unequal supply."

The Paper Mill, current issue, says that all mills are now running to capacity and are having a hard time to supply the daily demands made upon them and are absolutely unable to accumulate the surplus being demanded to prevent a shortage next winter. Newsprint will reach a price of not less than $75 a ton at the mill according to R. B. Maltby, secretary and treasurer of the Remington Paper and Power Company, in an interview in the same publication. Reports to the Paper Mill show great activity in the establishment of new mills but no assistance can be expected from them for one year at least.

All figures on the prices of newsprint are based on the possibility of paper going to 5 cents a pound, or $5.00 delivered in the press room. Sunday paper weights are figured at the rate of 70 pages, or one pound to the paper issued, and the daily paper weights at 24 pages to the paper.

Canadian Exports

Canada's exports of paper, pulp and pulp wood continue to increase. In the month of May exports amounted to $8,418,000 as against $8,407,000 in May, 1918. Paper (newsprint) showed the largest gain; its increase being $1,410,000. Chemical pulp fell off $483,000, mechanical pulp $76,000 and pulp wood $828,000.

In the first two months of the present fiscal year newsprint exported gained $1,893,000. The figures show that Canada is manufacturing more of the finished product and sending less of the unfinished product abroad. In the fiscal year closed March 31, 1919, Canada exported over $99,900,000 worth of paper, pulp and pulp wood.

Higher Prices Will Not Solve Problem

While the belief is growing that 3-cent dailies are a possibility of the near future, it is the general impression that this alone will not meet the needs, in itself, of the present great crisis.

Canadian manufacturers are making every effort to increase their output and reap returns during the present emergency. Paper makers say the present conditions will continue in the paper market for several years at least.

DODGE HEADS BUREAU

News Print Makers Choose Him to Succeed the Late G. H. P. Gould

MONTREAL, Aug. 13.—P. T. Dodge, president of the International Paper Company, was elected president of the Newsprint Bureau with headquarters at New York, at a session held in Montreal this week, succeeding the late G. H. P. Gould.

Reports on production for the first six months show that Canada manufactured 388,924 tons of newsprint and the United States 671,141 tons, an increase of 6 per cent over the figures for the corresponding period last year. It was also shown that the demand for newsprint was never greater than at present, while the supply on hand was never smaller. Advertising in the United States is 46 per cent heavier than at this time last year.

On the other hand, it was pointed out that an increased production of newsprint was to be counted on and that makers of newsprint machinery reported great activity.

WHAT NEWSPAPER MAKERS SAY ABOUT NEWSPRINT SITUATION

T. R. Williams
[Business Manager, Pittsburg Press]

All the important war-time regulations have been and still are in effect in Pittsburg. In addition, the Pittsburg publishers adopted many additional conservation measures and economies not required by the War Industries Board, and these also are still in effect.

You will recollect that Pittsburg was the pioneer in the matter of starting economies and in making news print conservation rules—in fact, the regulations of Pittsburg were taken as a model for the War Industries Board to work on, when the latter made regulations governing news print during the war.

Pittsburg has also been pioneer in the matter of increasing subscription and retail prices, having advanced to 2c. in 1916 on dailies and a little later to 10c. on the Sunday issues. The Sunday price is the highest, we believe, in the United States for any city of the size of Pittsburg.

print consumption that was established during the war period. We are sticking to the no returned basis despite the handicap put on us by the Philadelphia papers in going back to the return privilege.

Baltimore papers are united in their intention to maintain strict economical policy.

Erwin R. Davenport
[Manager, Rochester Times-Union]

The Rochester publishers are carrying out war time regulations, but in spite of that fact, we are running ahead of our contracts, and it is probable that by united action, we will make further restrictions as regards news matter and may even limit the amount of advertising carried.

W. F. Wiley
[General Manager, Cincinnati Enquirer]

Cincinnati publishers are already making a concerted effort to conserve

Advertising Revenue Above Paper Cost If Newsprint Goes to 5 Cents a Pound

Total Circulation	Pound-Weight per Page	Rate Agate Line	Advertising per Page	Paper Cost per Page	Return Above Page Paper Cost
250,000	10,714	$0.50	$1,680.00	$578.56	$1,101.44
500,000	7,143	.65	2,560.00	785.72	1,174.28
400,000	5,714	.60	1,440.00	308.56	1,131.44
300,000	4,286	.55	1,320.00	231.44	1,088.56
200,000	2,857	.50	1,200.00	154.28	1,045.72
100,000	1,429	.45	1,080.00	77.12	1002.93
50,000	714	.40	960.00	38.56	921.44

The above figures on weight are based on 70 pages to the pound; the page return on advertising is based on a count of 2400 agate lines to the page; the paper cost is figured at the possible charge of $5.40 per hundred pounds delivered in the press room.

In view of the news print shortage there is no disposition, that we know of, among Pittsburg publishers to annul any of the conservation measures, nor to relieve the price of the daily and Sunday papers.

J. H. Higgins
[General Manager, Boston Herald]

No action has as yet been taken by Boston publishers in relation to the curtailment of consumption of news print except that the no return policy is still effective. Personally I believe a limitation of matter other than advertising should be put into effect.

H. L. Rogers
[Business Manager, Chicago Daily News]

Do not believe possible paper shortage condition can be adjusted through publishers' co-operation nationally or locally. It was necessary for the War Trade Board to act in order to get conservation during war and I believe that only a body with similar authority could help situation except in isolated cases now.

Marcellus E. Foster
[President, Boston Chronicle]

The Chronicle will be very glad indeed to co-operate in all matters pertaining to conserving of news print. We do not allow returns, do not issue any free copies and we hold down on the size of our papers.

Paul Patterson
[Business Manager, Baltimore Sun]

Baltimore publishers have maintained the conservation policy regarding news news print. Advertising demands, however, militate against a large saving and publishers are imposing Government war time restrictions upon themselves.

H. G. Grant
[Publisher, Milwaukee Journal]

Until publishers can be made to understand that careful editing and not volume of white space used make for a successful newspaper policy, it will be impossible to eliminate wasteful competitive practice and effect logical savings in news print consumption.

Victor Rosewater
[Editor, Omaha Daily Bee]

I do not know any way to conserve news print unless by resuming the plan urged by the paper conservation committee prior to the close of the war, and actually living up to it.

AIRPLANE MAIL FOR LINER

Shock Absorbers Will Be Used to Deliver Newspapers at Sea

Shock absorbers and a flexible cable will be used to land newspapers and other mail aboard the steamship Adriatic from an airplane in the first Government test of marine mail delivery by airplane. It was pointed out by naval aviators that the mail pouch if dropped might hit the deck with a destructive force, so it was decided to land it by wire cable.

Postmaster Patten received word from Second Assistant Postmaster-General Praeger to-day that special mail carried via aeromarine flying boat need bear only the regular rate of postage required to the country to which it is sent. •

THIRTY YEARS A BUILDER OF CIRCULATION

Ernest A. Scholz

ERNEST A. SCHOLZ has just rounded out thirty years of continuous circulation work, all of it under two owners, and he is not much over forty at that. The twig was bent early and the tree has inclined to grow into one of the foremost and highest paid circulation managers in this country. As an office boy nosing around the circulation department of the Chicago Daily News, thirty years ago, he started to add to his fund of information and to make friends. He has been doing it ever since. Thirty years' circulation experience have only added to his ability to grasp facts and to use them, to make friends and keep them.

Under the ownership of Victor F. Lawson, Ernest Scholz worked first in the circulation department of the Chicago Daily News and then became circulation manager of the Chicago Record-Herald, later becoming business manager, which post he held until Mr. Lawson sold the Record-Herald.

A quarter of a century in Chicago newspaper work prepared Mr. Scholz for the place he now holds, circulation manager of The American Magazine, Woman's Home Companion and Farm and Fireside—the Crowell group. Since the acquisition by the Crowell Company of Collier's Weekly, his capacity for organization finds additional opportunity for work.

His ability to produce fits him to handle a big job in a big way. It is claimed that today Ernest Scholz directs the largest number of men and women engaged in circulation work in any single concern in the world. In the Crowell Company alone he probably directs as many circulation men as the number who attended the annual meeting of the International Circulation Managers' Association. He holds conventions once a year of his own organization, very much similar to the I. C. M. A. meetings. A large number of newspaper circulation managers and members of the I. C. M. A. are now included in the Crowell circulation organization.

A graphic chart of the Crowell Circulation Department looks like a massive oak tree spreading its branches in every direction, so multitudinous are the branches of the work. Twenty-eigh branch offices, each with a manager in charge, employing crew managers, canvassers, collectors and clerks, are each in reality circulation departments in themselves.

Yet, so thoroughly is the work organized that the branches in the principal cities of the United States move along under perfect control from the home office like well-oiled machinery, and the branch office department is only a small part of the job which requires trained men of character and selling ability. Even Mr. Scholz's best personal friend do not know how or where he gets them all.

Perhaps that puzzle explains a pre dominating characteristic. It is a maxim of Ernest Scholz that, "if you are a friend of a man, stick to him and let him know that you are his friend," which implies sincerity, also willingness to inspire and develop. Many men now holding important positions under him formerly worked for him on the Chicago papers. They are glad to come back to him.

They seldom leave his employ, for there is a certain pride in being able to hold a job under Ernest Scholz. He is a father to all of them and yet not old enough to be, for thirty years of circulation work such as he has been doing have somehow or other kept him young —learning something new and useful —and with the good judgment and stability that comes to the young man of forty.

Canadian War Daily Ends Useful Career

The Record, for Four Years, Kept Dominion's Fighting Men Informed About Affairs at Home "With the Regularity of Rations"

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 13.—After a picturesque and useful career, begun in the Spring of 1918, the Canadian Daily Record has ended its existence as a purveyor of news to the Dominion's fighting men. During the period in question it enjoyed the reputation of keeping Canada's soldiers informed about events at home, even in most strenuous times, with the regularity of rations.

The Record began as a news slip, issued with orders of the day. It received such an enthusiastic reception that the Canadian War Records Office in London decided to expand it into a four-page daily.

For a time, the cost was borne by the Canadian Government, but it was not long before the unique paper was put on a self-sustaining footing, with the result that in latter days the only government assistance necessary was the half cent per copy paid for distributing it without charge to the units in C. E. F.

In the early days, cable news amounted to only a very brief summary of fifty words sent by the Press Gallery. This steadily increased until the Record carried up to two thousand words daily.

The editorial staff of the Record was composed of Canadian newspapermen who had served in the line, and under whose direction it was made a "live" paper of from four to eight pages, carrying both "home' and army news.

The International war veterans' publications that have sprung up in Canada soon will have their number increased by the Imperial Veteran, official organ of Canadians who have fought with the British regulars. Captain G. C. F. Wheeler, president of the association, is making arrangements for the issuance of the first number.

GOVERNMENT TO RELY UPON FREE PUBLICITY IN GETTING HIGH PRICE FACTS TO PEOPLE

No Plans Made for Use of Paid Advertising in "Supplying the Public With Information Regarding the Actual Supply of Particular Commodities"—Newspapers, in Face of Threatened Paper Shortage Expected to Shoulder Burden

(FROM OUR REGULAR CORRESPONDENT)

WASHINGTON, August 12.

IT'S the same old answer: "We hadn't thought of that."

The Federal Government does not, at least, at this time, intend using the advertising columns of the newspapers in its fight for price publicity.

The President's assurance that the best results toward reducing the cost of living may be obtained through publication of "fair prices" is taken here to mean nothing more nor less than that the Federal departments will collect and publish the information as "news." In other words, in this as in most of the things it has been doing for years, the Government does not comprehend that advertising has any connection with publicity.

"Publicity can accomplish a great deal," the President said, and proceeded to tell how the Government proposed to handle that publicity. "The Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor and the Federal Trade Commission can do a great deal towards supplying the public, systematically and at short intervals, with information regarding the actual supply of particular commodities which are in existence but not available because of hoarding and with regard to the methods of profiteering which are being followed by dealers in certain food stuffs and other necessaries."

Government Heads Self-Satisfied

EDITOR & PUBLISHER's correspondent has been running into the blind alleys of bureaucratic self-satisfaction and immobility in the effort to find out if Government head or "economic expert" who thinks it is the function of the Government to make the information referred to by the President available to the American consumer through the medium of paid advertising.

Here is what will be done:

The Administration will get further appropriations from Congress to fight the cost of living. Those funds will be devoted to the mobilization of additional clerks in Washington and the printing of reports. When these reports have been mailed to newspaper offices in Washington and through the state and county food administration organizations, which have been created for the purpose, to local papers, the Government will have considered its work done and well done.

Army and Navy Advertising Pioneers

If it should occur that the papers operating in the face of a possible or threatened shortage of newsprint, are forced to omit or curtail one of the reports out of the numerous ones which will be forthcoming from four or five different sources, then we may expect to hear something more about the necessity of "cooperation by the public press," in this "crisis." It may even happen that some complacent little mind entrenched behind a bureau desk may fling something about the newspapers being subservient to "interests engaged in profiteering."

All of this traces to the fundamental lack of appreciation here in Washington of the proper relationship between the Government and the press. It is true that some strides have been taken toward changing this. The Army and the Navy and one or two isolated bureaus in other departments have taken the bit in their teeth and gone ahead with advertising campaigns, but that happened solely and chiefly because it had been brought home to them that they could not longer expect the papers to continue donating millions of dollars of space.

Investment for Common Good

The answer now to inquiries relative to the Government advertising its price reports in newspapers as a direct investment for the common good, is that there is so much interest in these reports that they possess great news value and the papers "will be glad to get them." It means simply that the newspapers must conduct the fight against the cost of living. They will get the information from the Government, but it will be the papers and not the Federal departments which must carry the fight to the people. Of course, if any good should come of it in the form of lower prices, the Government will take—and doubtless get—all of the credit. Some kind-hearted bureau chief may issue a statement thanking the papers for their "splendid patriotic cooperation," and pat himself on the back for his forethought and broad vision. The publishers then can add those thanks to the thousands they already have and turn to the consideration of meeting rising production costs and the new wage demands of the composing-room chapel.

Government Advertising Should Follow President Wilson's Attack on Profiteering

By JAMES O'SHAUGHNESSEY

Executive Secretary, American Association of Advertising Agencies

PRESIDENT WILSON offered a solution to the problem of living costs in a single paragraph of his message. It is to be desired above all else that his suggestion should be properly considered by Congress and by the public at large. The words of the President, however, on this point, need amplification and should have re-iteration in every newspaper. Here is what he said:

"And publicity can accomplish a great deal. The purchaser can often take care of himself if he knows the facts and influences he is dealing with; and purchasers are not disinclined to do anything, either singly or collectively, that may be necessary for their self-protection."

By publicity the President means proper publicity.

Proper publicity translates into adequate paid-for advertising.

Proper advertising is a cure and a preventive of profiteering.

Properly advertised goods are not and have not been profiteered.

The cellar of the profiteer are possible only in the darkness which advertising alone has the power to dispel.

If this suggestion of the President is acted upon, in the wisdom of the President with the counsel of advertising agencies, the abnormalities in the high cost of living will be absolutely eradicated. The evils in the high cost of living will be positively removed. The disturbed mind of the public will be put at ease.

This does not mean that prices will go back to 1916. It means that prices will go where they properly belong, in justice to the consumer and to the producer, and in fairness to the dealer.

Official Washington knows advertising today and has an appreciation of its value.

Since President Wilson has thus specifically called the attention of Congress to the potentials of advertising in this emergency, it is to be desired as a paramount thing that every newspaper publisher in the country will respond to the President's call for advertising by giving him the moral support which will justify Congress in immediate and proper action.

FRANCIS DISCUSSES RUSSIA

Ambassador Is Guest of N. Y. Advertising Club at Luncheon

David R. Francis, Ambassador to Russia, was guest of honor at a luncheon at the Advertising Club of New York City Wednesday. He spoke briefly on conditions in Russia, being introduced by John Adams Thayer.

One of the biggest problems confronting the United States is that of helping to restore order in Russia, and the Soviet government represents less than 10 per cent of the population and holds its power by a reign of terror, he said.

PUBLISHER GETS RARE PRINT

Charles Spatz Is Presented with Boyertown Democrat Ancient Sonnet

BOYERTOWN, Pa., August 13.—Charles B. Spatz, publisher of the Boyertown Democrat, has been presented with a rare print from a French press by his friend and fellow townsman, Col. Thomas L. Rhoads, who has just returned from abroad.

It is a copy of a sonnet, entitled "The Happiness of the World," written and printed by Christopher Plantin in the sixteenth century, or about 1580. It was printed from the original type, which is still in existence.

ASKS $2,000,000 FOR WAR INSURANCE ADS

U. S. Bureau, of Which Col. R. G. Cholmley-Jones Is Director, Wants Big Appropriation by Congress to Expedite Its Labors

The United States Bureau of War Risk Insurance has asked Congress for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for advertising, most of which, if the money is forthcoming, will be spent with newspapers.

The need of this appropriation was emphasized by Col. R. G. Cholmley-Jones, director of the War Risk Bureau, in an address at a luncheon in his honor Wednesday, at the Hotel McAlpin by the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

More than 200 men prominent in the publishing and advertising fields attended the affair. Col. Cholmley-Jones, who formerly was advertising manager for the Review of Reviews, was introduced by William H. Johns, president of the A. A. A. A. He said:

Would Reach Millions

"I have asked Congress to give the War Risk Insurance Bureau an appropriation that will enable us to advertise to millions of men who have been in war service abroad and who are now returning to their homes facts regarding the insurance, allotments and allowances to which they are entitled and concerning which most of them seem to be bewildered or in dense ignorance.

"At present the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is handling about 570,000 pieces of mail daily. About 30 per cent of the letters we write to men who have taken out Government insurance come back to us, because the men who have returned from service abroad have changed their home addresses.

Will Solve Problem

"These men do not know where to reach us and we do not know how to communicate with them. Advertising ill solve this problem and end much of the censure of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for failing to pay insurance claims promptly. We are doing the best we can under the present conditions, but widespread advertising will enable us to do a great deal better."

A bill to appropriate $2,000,000 for advertising for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is now in the hands of a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations.

N. Y. NEWS WRITERS PLAN UNION

Committees from Editorial Departments of English Language Papers Confer with Organizer for Typographical Union on Details

An effort is being made, with the encouragement and support of the International Typographical Union, to organize a labor union of men employed in the editorial departments of the English-language newspapers of Greater New York.

A conference at which plans were made to this end were discussed has been held by committees representing newspaper workers of Manhattan and Brooklyn, with J. E. McLoughlin, eastern representative and organizer of the Typographical Union. These committees agreed to have every newspaper office in the two boroughs canvassed to learn whether prevailing sentiment was in favor of a union.

Previously a meeting to discuss the organization of a union that would include only newspaper men of Brooklyn was held at the reporters' room in Borough Hall, Brooklyn. There was an attendance of about twenty-five men, who expressed themselves in favor of the project.

Later, on advice of Typographical Union officials, who explained that a charter could not be obtained for a union limiting its membership to a single section of the city, it was agreed that newspaper workers in the other boroughs, particularly that of Manhattan, should be asked to assist in forming the organization.

Thomas F. Reilly, of the Brooklyn Standard-Union, was appointed temporary chairman of the Brooklyn meeting and in turn appointed John F. Geis, of the Brooklyn Times, chairman of the committee to ascertain what sentiment there was, both in Brooklyn and Manhattan, in favor of organizing.

Wants Experienced Men

"If the real newspaper writers of Greater New York want a union they can have it and it will be a success," said Mr. McLoughlin, organizer for the Typographical Union, after his conference with the committees from both boroughs.

"I found that there was some reluctance on the part of the men employed in Manhattan to unite with the men in Brooklyn because the prevailing scale of wages in Manhattan is higher.

"I explained to them that any attempt that might be made to change the wage scale would be similar to that effected when Brooklyn became a part of Greater New York.

"The wage scale of the members of the Brooklyn Typographical Union then was lower than that of the union men in Manhattan, but the two unions were amalgamated and the scale of the Brooklyn men was brought up to that of the men across the river.

"However, if the proposed Newspaper Writers' Union of Greater New York is to be a success, we must have experienced newspaper editors, copy readers and writers in it, from the start. I don't want to take a chance with correspondence school journalists or amateurs. I want men who have had at least three years' experience at the game, and I want to get an enrollment of at least 75 per cent of them in every office.

"Furthermore, I don't want any part-time workers, but men who make a business, at least six days a week, of working for newspapers."

He added that he was going to be absent from the city until Labor Day and that in the meantime he understood that committees and sub-committees representing the Manhattan and Brooklyn newspaper workers with whom he conferred would be active in getting applications for membership.

German Writers Organize

The attempt to form a union composed of men in the editorial departments of English-language newspapers in Greater New York follows closely on the organization, Monday, of a union composed of editors, copy readers, and reporters on the five German newspapers of the city—the morning and evening Staats-Zeitung, the morning and evening Herold, and the socialist paper, the Volks-Zeitung.

This organization has an initial membership of 59 and will receive a charter from the International Typographical Union. Its officers say it will have a membership of 100 or more within a week, including approximately 97 per cent of the men actively engaged in work in the editorial departments of German newspapers.

"The next step will be to make plans for obtaining higher wages and better hours of labor," said one of the new officials.

ST. LOUIS WOMEN AS DELEGATES

Will Be Well Represented at New Orleans Convention of A. A. A. W.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 13.—The Women's Advertising Club of St. Louis has elected these delegates to the convention of the Associated Ads in New Orleans; Miss Mary Wheat, president of the club; Mrs. Julia Shipley Carroll, Miss Olivia Brueggeman and Miss Louise Lenoir Thomas.

Miss Mary Wheat

Other members of the club who will attend the convention are: Mrs. H. T. Axtell, Miss Mary Semple Scott and Miss V. A. L. Jones.

EDITOR LEECH'S IMPRISONMENT FOR CONTEMPT MAY LEAD TO CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION

EDWARD T. LEECH, editor of the Memphis Press—a Scripps newspaper—has just concluded a ten day jail sentence for contempt of court. As has been told in detail in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Leech was convicted of contempt on the claim that he had commented upon a case which was still pending in court.

The offending editorial, however, contained no reference to any particular case nor to any particular judge. Names were not mentioned. The charge was made that the judiciary has been corrupted by the politicians—that the courts had been virtually controlled by political bosses. It happened that an election was at hand. A judge, who was a candidate for re-election, had just rendered a decision favorable to an election commissioner who was under fire in a political way. This judge, contending that the editorial was an attack upon him and that it interfered with the administration of justice in his court, cited the editor for contempt before another judge. The editor was convicted and the conviction was affirmed by the higher tribunal of the state.

The Scripps newspapers, considering this case in the light of an assault upon press freedom, are calling for a congressional investigation of the tendency of the judiciary, federal and state, to encroach upon the rights of the press to criticize public officials and candidates for office.

The Memphis case would seem to emphasize the need for a Federal Libel Law, in which the limitations of newspaper criticism of public officials and candidates should be clearly defined. In many states the rulings of courts have already stated these definitions with entire clarity. As the constitutional right of criticism —of a free press—is not subject to violation by states, it seems obvious that a Federal statute should supersede the mass of conflicting rulings and precedents upon which state courts base their decisions. It is absurd to contend that a thing is constitutional in Missouri and not in Tennessee. And only recently a Missouri court has upheld the right to criticize candidates for office quite as freely as public officials.

It is not the purpose of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to discuss the merits of the case against Editor Leech. The facts have been published and speak for themselves. It does seem, however, of high public concern that press freedom should not be endangered in principle through the establishment of precedents growing out of a purely technical interpretation of those laws which are aimed to protect our courts from interference with their processes.

WILL MAKE IMPROVEMENTS

Donnacona Paper Company Issues Bonds —Output Comes Here

Montreal, Aug. 11.—The Donnacona Paper Company, whose plant is located at Donnacona, between Montreal and Quebec, is making a new issue of $1,750,000 of 6 per cent first mortgage sinking fund bonds, maturing in 1940.

The issue has been purchased by Montreal syndicates which will soon offer it to the public, the funds to be used to provide for extensions and additional working capital.

The original financing of the Donnacona company was carried out some years ago by a group of American capitalists, among whom were the late Geo. F. Gould, president of the Gould Paper Company, Utica; Charles B. Rogers, of the First National Bank, Utica; and George McKee, the company's present manager.

The output of the mill has been going almost entirely to New York City. The mill has been producing 30,000 tons of news print, 18,000 tons of sulphite pulp, and 37,500 tons of ground wood pulp per annum.

Patriotic "Newsies" Honored

Boston, Aug. 12.—A handsome souvenir booklet to commemorate the work of the Liberty Loan Newsboys' Association of Boston has just been issued, under the auspices of President John J. Martin, of the Exchange Trust Company, who backed the newsboys in all their campaigns.

One Copy to Advertisers

Washington, D. C., Aug. 6.—Third Assistant Postmaster-General Dockery has notified publishers that only one copy of a paper may be sent second class to prove insertion of any advertisement.

HIS OWN MEDICINE HELPED HIM TURN A CRITICAL CORNER

There is one man who practices what he preaches, and finds it profitable. When Guy E. Hardy, president of the National Editorial Association, had the nomination for Congress from the Third Colorado District thrust upon him last fall, he found himself up against a Democratic nominee who had been in Congress for six years. It looked like a forlorn hope.

As owner and publisher of the Canon City Daily Record, he had been urging other folk to advertise if they wished to accomplish anything. With full confidence in the power of the printed word in the display columns of newspapers, he played that as his best card. Practically every newspaper in his district carried his ads—column, double column, half page and full page—all paid for at regular rates. Many of the newspapers were liberal with their news campaign stories in creating news, for he swept through eighteen of the twenty-columns, aided thereto by his personal two counties of the district, travelling more than 2,000 miles by automobile and making many speeches. Of course, he turned a forlorn hope into a decisive victory.

Takes Several Trips a Year

Twenty-five years in one place have not satisfied Guy Hardy. He has had to hustle for himself since childhood, and the hustling habit sticks. He travels a whole lot; not occasionally, but a considerable part of the time. Every year he takes several educational trips, and it would be difficult to mention a section of the country he has not visited and studied. He was born in Illinois in 1872, and his parents died when he was a young lad, leaving him to carve out his own destiny. He worked his way through high and college, taught school for a couple of years and then went to Canon City in 1895 to work on the Weekly Record. One year later he bought the paper, soon turned it into a daily, and since then has been its publisher, making it a notable success.

Has Several Jobs

One job, however, is not enough for his active mind. He manages to keep fairly busy by being president of the Canon City Chamber of Commerce, president of the University Club, president of the Fremont Building and Loan Association, director of the Red Cross Chapter, director of the Y. M. C. A., a member of the State Y. M. C. A., was president of the last Colorado Republican State convention and a member of the Executive Committee; was Food Administrator for Fremont County during the war, was formerly president of the Colorado Editorial Association and is now a member of its Executive Committee, heads the National Editorial Association, and now has the Congressional job on his hands. He gets out a Weekly Record, in addition to the Daily, and also the Colorado Press, a quarterly published in the interests of newspaper publishers.

He has a wife and four children, a family which, he declares, helps him on his way.

London Newspapers Are Now Featuring American News

Labor Ministry Undertakes to Teach Ex-Officers Journalism "In a Few Weeks"

By H. C. RIDOUT, London Editor, Editor & Publisher

THE London newspapers have always devoted a fair amount of space to American news, but latterly the tendency has been to feature it in prominent positions. Conspicuously was this the case during the present week when several papers quoted cabled extracts from the American press speaking of the delight experienced in the U. S. A. at the honor paid to the American forces by including them in the front of our Peace Day procession. The cables which greeted General Pershing and his men on the route spoke, too, of a complete understanding and sympathy between the people of the two nations; the reception of the American troops was no less hearty than that accorded to the British in the procession.

As a note in passing it may be interesintg to mention that the London offices of the Chicago Daily News had perhaps the finest view of the proceedings in the whole of London.

University Degree of Commerce

A new Degree, that of Commerce, has just been created by the University of London, and it is interesting to notice among the committee appointed by the Senate of the University a number of prominent British newspaper and advertising men. They include Sir Herbert Morgan, K. B. E. (of W. H. Smith & Son, now associated with Lever Bros., Ltd.) as chairman of the Organizing Committee, Mr. Ernest Debenham (of Debenham's, Ltd., the London store), Mr. Stanley Machin (vice-president London Chamber of Commerce), Mr. J. Dawrance (of Babcock & Wilcox), Mr. W. L. Madgen (British Electric Traction), Sir George Riddell (proprietor News of the World), and Sir Ernest Hodder Williams (of Hodder & Stoughton, publishers of British Weekly, etc.). It is a unique departure —this recognition of Commerce by a British university—and the names quoted show that the Degree of Commerce will possess a value of a practical as well as an abstract nature.

Victory Loan Advertising

It seems that the total of 708 millions sterling raised during the British Victory Loan drive is considered a poor showing for the efforts lavished upon it. It is true that a thousand millions was the goal aimed at, and if fault there be I should say it lies with the Government who gave the publicity directors too little notice and too little time in which to do their work. The appointments of the men to handle the advertising were not made until the very last moment; the official prospectuses were issued before the publicity staff had time to organize themselves.

Practically the whole of the directors were new to this particular phase of Government publicity, hardly one of those identified with the advertising of previous loans being engaged. But in the short time those publicity men worked miracles of achievement in sheer hard work and if there be any disappointment in the result it cannot be laid at the door of the advertising. Indeed, financial writers are now declaring that the loan issue was so intricate and complicated that "even experienced financiers could not always be sure of its meaning."

The fact that it was held over to the last minute and then launched in the most unfavorable week was, however, in the view of advertising men in London, no reason why the publicity arrangements could not have been formulated well in advance.

Enterprise of London Express

The London Daily Express has just issued a magnificent prize offer of £10,000 to encourage, develop and prove the practicability of commercial flying within the British Empire. When it is remembered how the Daily Mail offer was responsible for the first Transatlantic flight, it must be recognized that this new proposal will have far-reaching effects in the application of flight overseas to commercial purposes.

All types of aircraft are eligible. The entrants must produce one aircraft for the flight to and from South Africa, and one aircraft of a similar type for the flight to and from India. All aircraft must carry a useful load of at least 1 ton both on the outward and homeward flights. South Africa and India are the overseas countries selected as goals, and the aim is to demonstrate that these territories are within easy air-reach of London with a sustained traffic.

Already the Secretary of State for India, the Right Hon. E. S. Montagu, has recognized the momentous character of the "Daily Express" offer and has sent the editor a letter of appreciation.

Cartoonist Becomes Editor

Captain Bruce Bairnsfather was a discovery of the war. He lightened Britain's burden by the creation of a walrus-whiskered "old contemptible" whose life at the front was one continuous grouch —"Old Bill." In play form you have Old Bill on the stage in America. Captain Bairnsfather sent his first sketch in the most casual way from France to the editor of the Bystander, and that gentleman used it and asked for more. When on leave, Captain Bairnsfather called upon the editor and introduced himself. The interview ended with an exclusive contract to draw only for the Bystander, of which "Old Bill" was and is a regular feature in cartoons. The cartoons were subsequently issued separately in a series of brochures under the title of "Fragments from France," and their success was so great that Captain Bairnsfather was invited to start a newspaper called Fragments. The first number has just appeared, and the publishers state that orders for it amounted to over a million. It is light comment on the news of the day and is probably unique in journalism as a newspaper that grew out of a cartoon.

Miners Strike Worries

The closing down of the Yorkshire coal mines and the threat of others to follow has set our newspapers throughout the country thinking of precautionary and emergency measures to meet the situation as far as possible should it affect them. The Belfast, Ireland, newspapers have already had an unpleasant experience of a local strike, on the occasion of the shipbuilding differences, when one adapted a war tank's engine to enable it to carry on, and all were reduced to candles for illumination and kerosene heaters for linotype machines.

But if the present strike develops it will have a national effect and will exercise both wits and ingenuity of publishers to evade unpleasant consequences. Already plans are in being for the extensive use of aeroplanes and automobiles in the event of transit services being crippled.

ROBERT DONALD, former editor of the London Chronicle and more recently managing director of the papers of the United Newspapers, Ltd., who has purchased the London Globe, one of the oldest English dailies, according to an announcement just made. The Globe is an evening paper.

Saturday Evening Post to Have English Edition

One of the fruits of Mr. Cyrus Curtis' stay in London is the announcement that his Saturday Evening Post is to have an English edition. It is to be published by Odhams, Ltd., the proprietors of John Bull, which with its two million weekly circulation demonstrates the organization of the house to handle any such success of the Saturday Evening Post should it develop that way.

There was an effort some years ago to establish a London periodical on somewhat similar lines, but it was before its time. Messrs. Odhams venture will be watched with interest, though those who know J. S. Elias, the managing director, experience no doubt as to the result.

Ex-Officers Being Trained as Journalists

No one in this country has more sympathy with or has done more to assist ex-officers inwards finding suitable employment than British journalists. But they are up in arms to find that newspaper and press work is thought so lightly of and so easy that the Appointments Branch of the Ministry of Labor has undertaken to train ex-officers as journalists. They declare that while unemployment is still rife in newspaper circles and while so many able journalists remain in the army, it is manifestly unfair that an official department should encourage and offer to introduce further competition. But most of all they resent the suggestion that journalists can be made in a few weeks or months. It is an awkward situation.

Notes of the Press

It is proposed that there should be a Midland Counties Federation of Local Paper Owners embracing the Associations of Three Shires, Shropshire and North Wales, Staffordshire and Warwickshire, and Leicester.

Among notable Peace Numbers is the Golden Edition of the London Daily Mail—a special issue printed in gold on art paper. Although issued on June 30, the demand is such that only a small proportion of the orders have been executed. A privileged circle has been specially favored with copies autographed by Lord Northcliffe.

The Aberdeen Journal offices were

N. E. A. OPENS OREGON SESSIONS OF ANNUAL CONVENTION

New Mission of the Press in Home Reconstruction and International Relations Discussed—Newsprint and Business Standards Receive Consideration—Portland Entertains Lavishly.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 13.—Plans to enlarge the National Editorial Association by more thoroughly covering its field among the smaller newspapers of the country and to strengthen its work through the employment of a field secretary, and by other means, is the central theme of the annual convention of that organization.

It was voiced by Congressman Guy U. Hardy, of Canyon City, Colo., president of the Association at the opening session held in Portland on August 9, and has been alluded to by nearly every speaker at the several meetings. Steps to put into effect will be taken at the business session, which will be held in Victoria, British Columbia, August 18.

Two Hundred and Sixteen Editors on Tour

The Portland meeting was the first formal session. The N. E. A. special train has been touring the Canadian Rockies since it left Winnipeg on July 29.

The 216 editors on the train have been deeply impressed with the west, are enthusiastic about the scenery and the entertainment accorded them at every stop and are looking forward to many more pleasant days before the return, but they are not forgetting the serious side of their convention and are devoting much attention to discussion of many newspaper problems and betterments.

The Newspaper's Future

"I have the highest regard for the newspaper profession," said President Hardy in his keynote speech at the opening session, and continued:

"I believe there is no greater. The newspaper business is the best business in your town, the editorial profession is the best profession in your town, and the newspaper man is the biggest, ablest and most influential man in your town if he is big enough for his job. Since last we met peace has come, and with it new problems.

"A year ago publishers everywhere were scared to death. But few were seriously hurt and many have built up undreamed of success. Most of our worries everywhere are founded on fears of things that never happen, and I believe the publishers will meet the problems in the future and conquer them, just as I believe the people of this great country will meet the problems of reconstruction and give us the best possible solution."

Recommends Field Secretary

President Hardy spoke of the print paper situation, stating that the drastic order of the war industries board was rewritten by a member of the executive committee of the association and that more money was saved the newspaper men through the association in this matter in one year than they had paid in in dues during the entire life of the organization. The president recommended the employment of a permanent field secretary and the raising of the dues of the association.

No business was transacted at the Portland session, but the formal papers and discussions are proving of great benefit.

One of the most impressive talks was by Harry Hillman, editor of the Inland Printer of Chicago, under the title of "The Rainbow's End for the Newspaper Publisher." Mr. Hillman urged the necessity of keeping newspaper charges up to a basis on which there should be no falling of standards and in service to the public.

Must Measure Up to New Standards

"Unless your newspaper contains a mixture of practical business it will not measure up with the standard of present-day demands," he said. "There is no other industry of such vital importance to every phase of human activity as printing and the newspaper, nothing that gets right down into the heart of humanity in such a way, and no business that demands greater actual intelligence and wider knowledge. We too often set our price at what the customer will pay and not at what our product is worth."

"The Community Evener," was the subject of an address by George W. Marble, publisher for the Tribune-Monitor, Fort Scott, Kansas. This was "shop talk," and took up the problem of petty jealousies which nearly always are found to exist in the smaller cities and towns.

Mr. Marble held up as the ideal newspaper that organ which could tactfully bring the contending parties to a friendly understanding and develop a spirit of harmony in his community.

Great Opportunity Faces Press

In his address, on "The Larger Outlook," Harvey Ingram, editor of the Des Moines Register, gave a scholarly presentation for the great opportunity that faces the press in settling the problems that have arisen out of the war.

"In the moulding of civilization in the last 200 years no force of man has played such a decisive part as the printed word," he said. "The newspaper is wrapping the world with bands so fragile they can hardly bear the contact of the press, yet stronger than bands of steel, and it is true that to-day the newspapers have a tremendous opportunity and responsibility to speed the doctrine of international good will."

Other social speakers on the program were Edgar B. Piper, editor of the Oregonian, who spoke of his experiences with a party of American editors who visited the war zone, and B. P. Lewis, editor of the Journal, who discussed the part the press can play in bringing about a better feeling in regard to industrial problems.

Mr. Piper was greeted with great applause when he said that one thing the American soldier discovered was that there isn't any best soldier in America.

"The soldiers from Texas, the soldiers from Maine, the soldiers from Oregon, and from every State in the Union are all splendid soldiers," he said. "They are all American," he declared.

To Name Ship for N. E. A.

SEATTLE, August 12.—The newspaper editors of the United States are to have a ship—in name.

In honor of the national convention of the National Editorial Association, which is being held consecutively in Portland, Seattle and British Columbia, the U. S. Shipping Board has authorized the renaming of a big steel 9,600-ton steamship to be held at the famous Skinner & Eddy plant on August 16 from Elkton to Editor.

Mrs. Guy U. Hardy, wife of Congressman Hardy, president of the association, will christen the ship. Addresses by members of the association will precede the launching.

Monument to First Paper

The editor paid as a special privilege their opportunity to dedicate a monument on the place where stood the office of the Oregon Spectator, founded in 1846, the first newspaper published west of the Rocky Mountains.

Following the business session of August 9 they journeyed to Oregon City, where the dedication took place, with speeches by Mrs. Eva Emery Dye, Oregon author; George H. Himes, secretary of the Oregon Historical Society; Mrs. Jennie Barlow Hartfiel, of the D. A. R.; Edward E. Albright, vice-president of the N. E. A., and W. P. Hawley, president of the Hawley Pulp & Paper Co., donor of the monument.

Delegates Receive Program Number at Seattle

Editor & Publisher Is Distributed Among N. E. A. Members as They Board Southbound Train

SEATTLE, August 12.—Rushed to Seattle by special delivery, copies of Editor & Publisher, carrying the full program for the annual convention of the National Editorial Association, were placed in the hands of every delegate as he left the Puget Sound city for Portland, Ore., on August 8. The contribution of the Editor & Publisher to the entertainment of the newspaper makers was deeply appreciated by the delegates.

When the delegation arrived in Seattle from Vancouver, B. C., they were met at the dock by a large delegation from the Seattle Press Club, the Washington State Press Association and the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, whisked in automobiles to the Butler Hotel, where a breakfast was ready to be served, and were then taken to the depot. They spent only about an hour and a half in Seattle on their "passing through" visit but it was a busy period.

Oregon Trout Attract Publishers

F. G. Bonfils, publisher of the Denver Post, and Harry E. Kellogg, publisher of the Los Angeles Express, recently made a successful invasion of the big trout streams of Southern Oregon. Incidentally they called upon newspaper men in Portland before returning to their home cities.

A wireless station of long radius is being erected at Soerabaya, one of the chief ports of the Dutch East Indies. This is one of the indications that mercantile interests there look for a great trade development.

OREGON EDITORS WILL RESIST NEW SCALE

Reported Printers Will Demand $1 an Hour—State Walkout Threatened—Editorial Association Appoints Committee to Act

PORTLAND, Oreg., Aug.11.—Steps to resist a pay scale of $1 an hour which the printers are said to be ready to demand throughout Oregon were taken by the State Editorial Association at its meeting here Saturday.

The smaller dailies, and weeklies as well, see a grave crisis confronting them if an attempt is made to institute this scale and the association was assured that such a movement is well developed.

Lloyd Riches, secretary of the association, reported that printers already are considering a general walkout. The publishers hope to head off the movement by showing what such a wage scale would mean to them.

A committee named to handle the problem consists of J. E. Gratke, Astoria; C. H. Fisher, Salem; E. E. Aldrich, Pendleton; E. E. Brodie, Oregon City, and R. W. Sawyer, Bend.

It is suggested that printing courses may be included in the public schools. Another tentative plan is to advertise to bring more printers to Oregon.

A resolution was passed calling on Congress to regulate the country press in the matter of Government advertising.

C. E. Ingals was re-elected president and Lloyd Riches was re-elected secretary. George P. Cheney of Enterprise was chosen vice-president.

Editors Visit Crater Lake on Convention Tour

Gov. Olcott, of Oregon, and F. N. Henderson, of Little Rock, Address Bonfire Gathering—Now Enroute to Tacoma

Ashland, Ore., August 12.—Members of the National Editorial Association arrived here tonight on their return from Crater Lake, one of Oregon's natural wonders. They described their visit to the lake as the greatest treat of the journey.

Last night a great bonfire was built at the edge of the lake and there was an informal program with a welcome from Governor Ben Olcott of Oregon and a reply for the editors by F. N. Henderson, of Little Rock.

Business men of Portland provided the train that carried the editors to southern Oregon and citizens of Medford and Ashland entertained them here. Tonight they left for Portland and from there will go directly to Tacoma.

PRINTERS SUBMIT NEW SCALE

Tacoma Newspapers Receive Demands to Be Effective September 1

Union printers have submitted a new scale to Tacoma fWash.) newspapers which is to go into effect September 1. They ask for a six and one-half hour day at a wage of $9.25 for day work and $10 for night work. They further ask for double time for overtime in place of time and a half as at present.

The printers are now working for a scale based on the dollar-an-hour schedule.

Howard Rhoades, of the New York Sun, editorial department, is spending his vacation at Columbus, O., his former home.

"MUTT AND JEFF" MAKE THEIR BOW TO LONDON FOLKS

Quaint Pair Generally Well Received—Unprecedented Advertising Aids in Victory Loan Triumph—"R-34" and Her Advertising Record.

By HERBERT C. RIDOUT, London Editor, EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

THE last week of the Victory Loan drive was a monumental effort in publicity. Those who thought they knew something about the possibilities of advertising and who declared that the previous War Loan efforts could never be transcended found themselves hopelessly out of reckoning. Whole pages in the newspapers were the order of every day in the week, with cartoons by the best British pen and ink artists—each advertisement leading up to the grand climax on the Saturday.

It was a phenomenal display of official activity guided by commercial men who knew what they were doing and a wonderful proof of confidence in the knowledge that newspaper advertising would not only get there but get there in the short space of time available. Estimates as to the success of the Loan varied, but it is now announced to have reached 708 million pounds sterling.

"Mutt and Jeff" Storm London

We are beginning to see some of the fruits of R. D. Blumeofeld's recent visit to the U. S. Bud Fisher is now contributing special "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons to the Daily Express and the Sunday Express, and both papers have made much capital out of Fisher's vogue to the American press. They only started here last week, and on the announcement being made, a great number of letters were received by the Expresses welcoming the advent of Fisher's creations. But as showers, as the proverb suggested, you cannot please everybody, a few letters have been received from individuals devoid of any sense of humor, in which the authors rate the Daily Express severely for its lack of the same commodity in running Mr. Fisher's cartoons! To which the paper retorted that as the Mutt and Jeff cartoons are popular with the people of nearly every great country, and the letterpress accompanying them has been translated into six languages, they have achieved a standing which precludes any doubt that they will be well received by all those who have a true sense of humor.

R-34's Advertising Stunts

Apparently no historic event of the future will be complete without the aid of the enterprising advertiser. R-34, the British airship that had the grace to wait until the Atlantic had been bridged by a British aeroplane, flew both ways in an atmosphere of ingeniously contrived publicity. Even the British Air Ministry realized what an advertisement the achievement was for the country's prestige, and kept three or four well known journalists feeding the press with almost hour-to-hour incidents of the double flight, and the interval between. Various newspapers sent and received messages by the airship, the Daily Mail scored with first photos of the Dempsey-Willard fight brought over by R-34.

The London Times and Philadelphia Public Ledger scored a joint honor by bringing over copies of the latter, which were placed on sale in London and sold out within an hour. The gasoline on which she ran makes good advertising for the Anglo-American Oil Co., the British branch of the Standard Oil Co., the lubricant, Castrol, is a British product of the C. G. Wakefield Co.; Adams chewing gum is the subject of half page newspaper spaces because in addition to the gum being used as part of the crew's rations, it was employed as an emergency repair for the broken-down engine on the outward trip; the phonograph which was taken on the same trip would also have been advertised, but for the unfortunate remark in the ship's return trip log that "our new gramophone is a vitally better instrument than the one on the outward voyage."

Newspaper Man's Generous Gifts

Mr. Frank Lloyd, formerly proprietor of the London Daily Chronicle and Lloyd's News has signalized his retirement from the newspaper press after forty-six years' active association by several munificent gifts to newspaper organizations. Among them are a special donation of $20,000 to the Newspaper Press Fund, another $20,000 to the Orphan Fund of the Institute of Journalists, and $5,000 to the National Advertising Society of Great Britain for its benevolent work.

Honors to Riddell

The good work that Sir George Riddell did in Paris for the war and peace reporting journalists is being glowingly extolled by his grateful British colleagues. The most recent is a presentation by the members of the Weekly Newspaper and Periodical Publishers' Association of Great Britain, of which Sir George is chairman, of an inkstand and Oriental lacquer cabinet. The chairman of the evening, Mr. G. J. Maddick (Illustrated London News and Sketch Ltd.), said that it was Sir George himself who flashed the news to London of peace being signed within thirty seconds of the actual signing. Sir George Riddell said that there was very nearly a little contretemps over the sending of the peace message. Immediately the first German had affixed his signature, a representative of each of the three agencies, French, American and English, all dashed out to telephone the news to London. He heard his own assistant say "Peace signed at 3.14." He thought there was a slight error and found that the American and French representatives agreed with him that peace was signed at 3:12 and not 3:14. "The error was corrected," added Sir George, "and Heaven only knew what serious complications were avoided."

It is said that Sir George Riddell on this evening propounded a conundrum by asking if anyone knew the difference between an unruly goose and the Government. The answer was that neither could look after its own "proper-

PORTRAIT OF HOUSTON POST'S FOUNDER IS PRESENTED TO HIS SON BY NEWSPAPER'S EMPLOYES

A PORTRAIT of J. L. Watson, founder of the Houston Post, has been presented to his son, Roy G. Watson, president and publisher of the Post, by the employes of every department of the paper, among them 14 men who served with the elder Watson. It is an oil painting for which a commission was given several months ago to E. Cerracchio, a well-known Houston artist. It has been placed in the office of the recipient.

FORMER TEXAS GOVERNOR SUES

Newspaper of Present Governor Is Defendant in Suit for Alleged Libel

BEAUMONT, Tex., Aug. 13.—Former Governor James E. Ferguson has filed suit against the Beaumont Enterprise, of which Governor William P. Hobby is editor and publisher, asking damages in the sum of $100,000 for alleged libel. The suit grows out of the publication of the Enterprise on July 28, 1918, of an editorial dealing with the candidacy of Hobby and Ferguson, both of whom were then running for Governor of Texas.

At that time Ferguson had been impeached and disbarred by the Texas Senate from ever holding public office of trust in Texas, but he had announced himself as a candidate for Governor in spite of this and was running on a platform of vindication by the people for his alleged illegal acts which formed the basis of his impeachment, and the editorial in question discussed these conditions.

Conlee Sells to Risien

BRECKENRIDGE, Tex., Aug. 13.—John T. Risien, for fourteen years editor and publisher of the Carrollton Review, has purchased the interest of E. E. Conlee in the Breckenridge Democrat and Oil Field Review, and has assumed the position of manager of these two publications. Mr. Risien is president of the Dallas County Press Association in which county Carrollton is located. C. M. Nichols will be associated with Mr. Risien.

Joint Outing in Bridgeport

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 8.—The Bridgeport Sunday and Evening Herald is entertained with a joint outing last week all employees of editorial, business, circulation, advertising and mechanical departments at Lordship Manor. Those present included the publishers, department heads, assistants, printers' devils and the office boy. There were water sports, a baseball game, a shore dinner and a dance.

J. M. B. Greene Is Home

John M. B. Greene, formerly of the staff of the Portland, (Me.) Express-Advertiser, later of the Hartford Courant, has arrived at Newport News, Va., after a long service overseas. He returned as a special courier, bearing messages for delivery at Washington. Greene was with a group of newspaper men who made a trip into Germany.

GLIMPSE BEHIND THE SCENES IN A GREAT NEWSPAPER OFFICE—CITY ROOM OF CHICAGO TRIBUNE, SHOWING LOCAL STAFF IN ACTION

Here is a close-up of the Local Room of the Chicago Tribune, made one evening recently when the street car strike and riots were serving to keep the staff pretty busy. It doesn't look like a good place to loaf or spend a quiet hour in gossip. If the proverbial busy bee has anything whatever on the Tribune news writer, judging from this pictured scene, said busy bee would have to present pretty strong evidence in support of his claim.

ST. LOUIS SCRIBES UNITE FOR BETTER PAY

Membership of New Orgsnisation Is Limited to Men and Women Employes, in Active Service, of Daily Newspapers and Press Associations

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 13.—The St. Louis Association of Journalists has been permanently organized with 62 working newspaper men and women.

The membership is limited to professional employes in the active daily service of one or another of the five St. Louis English language daily newspapers and St. Louis employes of the various press associations.

Richard L. Stokes, of the Post-Dispatch, has been elected president. Other officers are: First vice-president, Thomas Butler, Globe-Democrat; second vice-president, George Henger, Times; secretary, Frank Sullivan, Star, and treasurer, Herman H. Hoelke, Republic.

In the report on the purposes of the organization, as prepared by a committee headed by Samuel J. Shelton, of the Post-Dispatch, it is asserted that the newspaper profession has often been underpaid; that the present critical cost of living has brought distress to many newspaper men and their families, and that journalists possess the same right of organization and of collective bargaining as is possessed by employes in other occupations.

Purposes Outlined

The purposes of the organization as outlined and ordered incorporated into the preamble of the constitution of the association, follow:

1. To unite in occupational fellowship all the professional newspaper reporters, writers, editors and artists of St. Louis.

2. To encourage sympathetic cooperation between newspaper publishers and their professional employes.

3. To improve the standards of journalism and help to obtain recognition by the public of the professional standing of newspaper workers on equality with other professions.

4. To encourage confidence on the part of the public in the integrity and high ideals of newspapers and their professional workers.

5. To obtain general recognition of the public services performed by newspapers and to undertake investigations nf matters in which it is believed public service can be performed.

6. To provide for discussion of questions by the members and others, and to encourage and assist members to improve their abilities by intensive study of the particular branches of the profession in which they are most interested.

To Adjust Compensation

7 To advise and work for, by fair and open means, such adjustments of salaries as are deemed necessary justly to compensate professional newspaper workers for services of a specialized character rendered by them; to enable them to live in a manner commensurate with their professional standing; to encourage them to remain in the profession, and to encourage young men and women of character, education and ability to choose the profession.

8. To discourage the employment in a professional capacity of persons whose character, educational qualifications and training are not sufficient to render them a credit to the profession, or of persons who are known to have broken faith with the public, their employer or this organization.

9. To co-operate with similar professional organizations in other cities with the ultimate object of a national association of newspaper workers.

The association is divided into five chapters, each to be composed exclusively of members employed on that particular one of the five publications. The initiation fee is $1 and the monthly dues are the same amount.

Miss Richardson Heads Committee

It is announced that under the scope of the organization, the individual retains unimpaired freedom of negotiation and contract with his employer and that each chapter possesses full freedom of treaty on any program it may adopt as collective, with the newspaper by which its membership is employed, the organization as a whole having original jurisdiction over matters dealing only with the five newspapers collectively and the profession as a whole in the city.

A general wage and economic investigation of the situation among the journalistic profession in St. Louis is to be conducted by a committee of which Katherine Richardson, of the Star, is chairman.

The New York Dispatch, a weekly, has been revived. It will be devoted to women's interests exclusively, it is announced.

WELCH MADE AD MANAGER

R. F. Wood Leaves Springfield Republican for Autocar Company

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 12.—Robert F. Wood, advertising manager of the Republican, has resigned to take a position in the advertising department of the Autocar Company, at Ardmore, Pa., and is succeeded by James E. Welch.

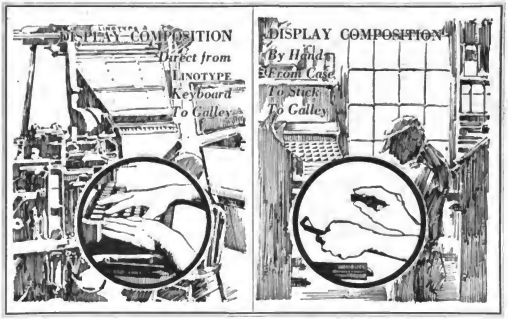
The latter was a local advertising solicitor on the Republican from 1909 to 1911; he then went to Chicago for two years and was there connected with an advertising agency, after which he served for six years in the advertising department of the Hartford Times.

New Weekly at Bridgeport

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 13.—The incorporation of the New England Sun Publishing Co., with a capital stock of $25,000, admits conduct of a weekly newspaper as well as a general printing business here.

The incorporators are Thomas Salvino, Louis E. Richards, Pasquale Altieri, Luigi Napolitani, Florindo Farrace, Gennaro Striano, Joseph Cubelli and Joseph DeNigris.

Iowa Weekly Sold



Jerry L. Plumb and Archer W. Brant, under the firm name of Plumb-Brant Company, have purchased the Iowa City (Iowa) Republican, taking over all the rights of David Brant & Sons. Mr. Plumb will be business manager and Mr. Brant, editor of the paper, which will continue to be published as a weekly. The Republican is one of the oldest weeklies in Iowa.

ADMIRAL

THE VITAL PAI

A STORY THAT WI

SHOWS THE VOLCANO OVER WHI 1917, WH

Admiral Sims' story will amaze the world. Had it not been for the co-operation of the American Navy and the adoption of the convoy system the submarines would have starved Great Britain, cut off her communication with the Continent, and brought her to abject surrender by November, 1917.

That would have meant the immediate defeat of France and that America, with the British fleet in the possession of the Germans, would have been left with her seaboard open to attack to fight Germany alone.

This is the cataclysm from which the world was but barely saved.

Admiral Sims' story starts with a graphic picture of conditions as they existed in April, 1917—especially as regards the submarine menace, up to today known only to cabinet officers and inner officials and not dreamed of by the optimistic public.

The reader will hold his breath as he realizes how close to disaster we were, all unsuspecting.

Sims, knowing the real and desperate situation, was the man to decide in what way the United States could best play her part in the naval war. He was a strong advocate for an offensive rather than a defensive fight against the submarine, and he was just as strong for the convoying of merchant ships.

THIS STORY MAKES ONE REALIZE THE IMPORTANT PART AMERICA PLAYED IN THESE SUCCESSFUL PLANS.

There are exciting and picturesque accounts of U-boat attacks upon merchant convoys and vice versa, making clear the whole interesting mechanism of the convoy system. And of how submarine fought submarine, not knowing whether it was friend or foe—often resulting most tragically.

OUR NAVY PLAYED IN THE WAR TOLD FOR THE FIRST TIME

IRILL EVERY AMERICAN WITH PRIDE AND GRATITUDE

HE PEOPLE OF THE ENTENTE NATIONS WERE STANDING IN APRIL, HE UNITED STATES DECLARED WAR.

The accounts of the dashing exploits of the American submarine chasers are as thrilling as Decatur's attack on the Corsairs of Algiers. And the sinking of German submarines by American destroyers add particularly brilliant pages to our naval history.

The accounts of the "Mystery" or "Q" ships of the British Navy read like romantic works of fiction. Not much could be said about these ships while the war was on—but Sims tells the whole story now.

There are details given of the aeroplane war on the submarine and the escorting by the combined British and American navies of more than two million troops to France.

The story tells of the construction by our navy of a mine barrage from the Orkneys to the coast of Norway—more than 230 miles.

It was an American who invented the submarine, and it was also an American who invented one of the most successful ways of defeating it in the hands of Germany. Admiral Sims' story gives for the first time the details of this invention which practically kept the U-boats shut up in the North Sea by the time the Armistice was signed.

The most important figures in contemporary European history—such as, King George, Balfour, Lloyd George, Jellicoe, Beatty—figure in Admiral Sims' pages. His conversations with men of this type, particularly in the Spring of 1917, when they frankly told him that Germany was winning the war and that the Allies at that time could see no way of stopping her, will be noted as long as the history of the last four years is read.

does not exaggerate the part it played in defeating the submarine. He makes urpose of the story is not to exalt our Navy as much as to show just how the as defeated.

AD MANAGER SHOULD NOT LIMIT SCOPE

To Get Best Results, He Should Study Every Activity of Store That Employs Him, Sheldon R. Coons Tells Coast Advertisers

There are thousands of stores in the United States that employ advertising managers and there are less than a dozen that have made their advertising and their stores distinctive, Sheldon R. Coons, sales and advertising manager of Lipman, Wolfe & Co., of Portland, Ore., asserts.

In speaking recently on "The Scope of A Retail Advertising Manager's Activities," Mr. Coons gave an explanation of why more stores do not develop a personality that would yield big profits. He said the trouble is due largely to the diffidence of advertising managers. He declared that most advertising managers were remiss in believing their field of activity to be limited to advertising "copy."

"Let's analyze the advertising factors of a store and see if we have not been too easily satisfied with mere writing of advertising from copy supplied us and too pleased with surface results," he said.

Many Angles to Advertising

"If an advertising manager will realize this fact—that every visible point of a business is advertising, he will get in a sentence what the scope of his activities should be.

"Now, then, how many of you have placed yourselves at that point where you can survey the store from that viewpoint?

"Few, I'll warrant.

"Do so—with me—and later for yourself.

"How does your store look—its windows, the interior, its tables, the signs, its displays, its cases, the way its stocks are kept. Is it as it should be? If it isn't it's your job to see that it is.

"Make the display manager see the light or get a new one. Make your buyers keep their new stocks, their dominant lines, their regular lines as well displayed—as the special values which you advertise.

"Fight for Results"

"Offer prizes to your sales-people for the best appearing section. Change the appearance of your store's displays frequently—once a week is not too often. See that your sales-peoples' appearance is seriously attended to by the superintendent—and fight for these things till they are done. That is advertising.

"Are your stocks short or complete? Do your buyers buy often or do they allow shorts to accumulate so that they may take a trip to New York? Are you trying to sell people what they want or what you want to sell them? Are your assortments varied or monotonous?

"If your stocks are not right make them so—it's your job. Make comparisons with your competitors—jack up your buyers and if they won't produce, get after the merchandise manager.

Give Quick Service

"Is your service quick and satisfactory? Is it prompt and courteous? Do you deliver on time—and when promised? Do your people direct customers correctly? Do the salespeople know the stocks? Are they enthusiastic or lackadaisical? If they aren't all these things—get busy. It's your job.

"Show your superintendent facts and figures until he gets busy. If he won't, show them to the firm. Get in touch with the salespeople yourself. If you have a big outfit, make the store get an educational director.

"Is your store conservative, or up-on-its-toes? Is it broad or narrow? Is it, in your mind, pursuing the wrong policy as to special prices? Is it running too many store-wide sales? Is it offering in its ads only things it had better not have, or things people are demanding? If the policy is not to your way of thinking—get busy, it's your job.

"Analyze—show them by example that they're wrong. Shape a new policy—if possible along the lines that they made their first success and then that they stick to it. Show them the error of their ways if errors exist. Fight for a chance to try your way. Policy is advertising.

Prices Must Be Right

"How are your values? Are you asking too much for your specials or too much for anything? Show your firm that turnover is short profit or better than holdovers at long profit. Insist upon your opinion playing a part in price-making.

"Make the buyers submit to you their plans before going away to buy—and give them yours. If they won't co-operate, don't you. You are entitled to as much as much advance information and price making as anyone —you have to sell the goods and—that's advertising.

The Value of Initiative.

"And now you are ready to write the ad. Everything is set—except the ad. Everything is bought except the space. The public is waiting to be sold. Are you buying the space—or the firm? Are you choosing your medium—or following the other fellow who is merely a slave to tradition and habit?

"Are you buying circulation or result? Are you duplicating with indirect mediums or holding good will through good values and right methods? Are you getting the newspapers to keep objectionable advertising out of their columns? Are you buying the best are procurable? Are you merchandising the ads.—or are you taking what comes?

"This is your job.

"Buy your space—or don't call yourself a manager. Advertise the things that people want when they want it—and only run clearance days monthly and then you'll find out which buyers are making mistakes over and over again.

Reduce "Clearance Days."

"Clearance days are largely pages of buyers' mistakes. Don't run them, except at set times, and you'll see the mistakes dwindle. Don't give up window space or selling space or advertising space to bad buys except on these days. It's cheaper for you to pocket the loss than your customer. He won't come back—and you can't.

"Write informatively, avoid extravagant statements (better to pleasantly surprise than to unpleasantly disappoint). Avoid over optimistic comparatives, use good type, display it well, with (preferably) actual illustrations—and pay your writers well.

"The most successful stores in this country have the highest priced advertising departments. Ten or fifteen per cent of your appropriation is not too much to spend for the production. For instance, an outstanding New York retailer went into the men's clothing business. He hired a man to write his men's ads. exclusively, paid him $10,000 a year and told him to buy space instead. The man bought two and three-column ads. on seven and ten inches and put it over in a year. It isn't how much you say—it's how you say it that counts.

"Let me repeat—every visible factor in a store is advertising—everything that's selling is advertising, for advertising is selling—and you're the advertising manager. That's your job's scope—and that's my story."

Before the Paper Age

"Well, anyhow . . . ."

The husky stonage poet chipped the last comma in his granite-slab ode to Summer, and wearily dropped his chisel and hammer.

"Then . . . if the editor of the 'Neolithic Age' doesn't find this available, I'll have the satisfaction of bouncing it off his ivory-dome. The return-postage gag hasn't been invented yet!"—Paragraffs.

Oxford Pulp Wood Burns

RUMFORD, Me., Aug. 11.—Fire destroyed between 8,000 and 10,000 cords of wood used in the manufacture of pulp for the mills of the Oxford Paper Company here yesterday. The loss, estimated at $175,000, is covered by insurance. A spark from a shifting engine is said to have caused the fire.

Attorney-General Palmer is preparing to furnish newspapers with full details of food hoards, with the purpose of bringing to bear upon profiteers the full force of public opinion.

ONE TIME PROFESSOR WRITES SAXON MOTOR CAR ADS

Anyone who can find anything but perfect English grammar, syntax, style, and construction in advertising copy, written or edited by M. A. Hollinshead, advertising manager of the Saxon Motor Car Corporation, of Detroit, Mich., may not be overbold in asking for a Saxon as a reward for perspicacity.

M. A. HOLLINSHEAD

The reason is that Mr. Hollinshead served as head of the English department of Nebraska Military Academy and as instructor in English at the University of Illinois, following his graduation from Albion College in 1911. He has also written feature articles for newspapers.

He entered the advertising business as advertising copy writer with the Johnson Advertising Corporation of Chicago, and later became manager for the Haddorff Piano Co., of Rockford, Ill., leaving this company to take his present position.

—your obligation to the retailer

Mr. Manufacturer, do you think that your responsibility ceases when you have sold the wholesaler? Or do you consider that your responsibility continues even beyond the retailer to the consumer?

You cannot get along without the retailer. Now isn't it only common sense to give him, and the jobber too, the most effective cooperation?

What better cooperation can you give than creating or increasing consumer demand exactly in territory where you have induced merchants to stock your goods?

Indeed, when you scatter your advertising through national mediums reaching many, many places where you have not a nickel's worth of distribution, are you playing fair with those retailers without whose support your business could not live?

NEWSPAPER MAKING

A Department of Practical Service for Publishers and Advertisers Conducted by Jason Rogers, Publisher of the New York Globe, and Author of "Fundamentals of Newspaper Building," "Newspaper Building" and "Building Newspaper Advertising."

If newspaper publishers generally could be brought to a greater realization of how much more influence and power they could secure through more effective co-operative effort, they would undertake it tomorrow and would thereby win such a degree of public confidence as to secure vastly increased prosperity.

Viewed from the outside, the newspapers in most of our cities and towns take on more the characteristics of a group of hack drivers at a railroad station fighting for a fare than business men conducting institutions for the greatest possible public service.

Local rivalry between competing newspapers often produces very deeply lodged sore spots which contaminate the whole system until publishers are led to many unbusinesslike and wasteful things.

While it is probably too much to expect to have the owner of a dominant local newspaper willingly co-operate for greatest possible efficiency with less fortunate competitors, I think that it can be proved that even such a radical and progressive step is distinctly worth while.

Unselfish Co-operation Cited

In Chicago, for example, we find the great Daily News and the Tribune leading in all co-operative movements to produce the greatest and most far-reaching results for all the Chicago newspapers. Years ago Mr. Lawson gave up the great advantage he had on distribution through his own carriers for the greater benefit and economies of joint official carriers.

By closer co-operative effort I don't mean to produce a situation in which the newspapers of a town, acting as a close corporation, would boycott, annihilate and destroy all who declined to cheerfully fall in with their dictates.

All of such offensive and despicable methods can be left to those engaged in other lines of industry, such as the doctors with their medical societies, which are nothing more nor less than tolerated trusts seeking absolutely to control professional activities.

By similar methods the dentists, the lawyers, the dealers in foods, the railroads, the labor unions and many other industries and professions seek and effectively put over a control of traffic conditions that would not be tolerated in the case of big business or the newspapers.

Our newspapers often present the sad and humiliating spectacle of grown men engaged in the most important constructive influence in the community allowing themselves to be exploited through playing on selfish and foolish jealousies by keener business men and politicians.

Plenty of Room for All

According to my theory, after careful study of newspaper conditions in most of our American cities, both in the United States and Canada, comparatively few towns are over-newspapered, and even where there are too many newspapers there is opportunity for success, if they would but steer courses further apart.

The trouble with most competing newspapers is that they as a rule stick too closely to one model, presenting the news as they see it, and each practically trying to duplicate the efforts of the others for fear someone will get away in the lead for some special service.

All of this is expensive, wasteful and destructive, and leads to further rivalries and jealousies regarding circulation, advertising and general results. It leads to foolish wastefulness regarding the size of our newspapers and permits shrewd merchants to buy advertising space at ruinous rates.

There will come a time, and I think at no far distant date, when newspaper publishers will get together to iron out serious, disastrous and annihilating competition. Unfair competition has been characterized by the Federal Trade Commission as not only illegal but a most unfair tax on the resources of the community.

For-sighted Policies

Straws show the way the current runs. In Ottawa two newspapers, in their quest for increase in the volume of foreign advertising, work as a unit to sell the Ottawa market. They care not which newspaper is used first so long as the business comes to Ottawa.

In several cities in Michigan the Boards have consolidated all of the newspapers into one worth-while, representative, independent, successful newspaper. This has been wonderfully effective in eliminating the fool element in the newspaper business.

In a middle west city of considerable importance the publisher of one newspaper is now working tooth and nail to get the other newspapers to join with him in an effort along the line of the Ottawa experiment, and I think he will pull it through.

Combination delivery, such as has been carried on successfully in Boston for many years by the Hotel and Railroad News Company, owned by all the newspapers, if put in operation in other cities, would mean enormous saving in expense.

Likewise, the joint use of a single plant by a morning and an evening newspaper would reduce overhead considerably and save the publishers of the country millions of dollars of money invested in plants which stand idle half of the day.

This last idea is being carried out by and between two of the largest and most successful newspapers in the country, and when it is worked out and in operation it will produce double capacity for each of them at practically no extra expense.

Gauged by Grade of Service

No matter whether a newspaper be a little cross-roads weekly or a large metropolitan daily, it should be so made interesting, may be made informative and will win and gain support entirely in accord with the grade of service rendered to the community.

There is no possible excuse for the production of a flat, tasteless and uninteresting newspaper anywhere, except laziness or inability. The sooner owners realize the force of this basic truth the better newspapers they will own.

If the newspapers of a city each seek merely to imitate and outdo the other, or others, along similar lines, they will continue to lose opportunity for establishing success along lines of individual initiative. Where there might be an excuse for a man buying two or more papers of strong individuality, the process of deciding which one to select is readily provided when one is a mere attempt to duplicate the other, by buying the best of the lot.

The Globe's Problem

In making the New York Globe what it is today, in a heavily over-newspapered city if there ever was one, our problem was to make a different kind of newspaper than any of the rest and provide something different for that part of the public which desired the sort of newspaper we desired to make.

We have won success just as did Adolph S. Ochs, who started in 1896 with his New York Times, and as did Joseph Pulitzer with the World, starting in 1883. Meanwhile those of our competitors who thought they were injuring us by imitating us in many directions only got deeper into the mire because while they were imitating us they were also watching other newspapers.

There never was an imitator who succeeded in putting it over on the man with the real goods, who was ever on the lookout for greater achievement, and who could continue to cut new paths and chart out new, worth-while services faster than the trailer could follow.

There are newspapers in many of our large cities today, just as there always have been, which will continue to be "mere newspapers" till the end of time, as effective devices for pouring dollars down into a bottomless pit without any more chance of success than selling fur coats at the equator.

Until our newspaper publishers can come together, like the doctors in their medical societies and like the lawyers in their bar associations, and establish sound and workable ethics, to be practiced by all in their relations with the public, they will be operating at a great disadvantage.

Nearly all of our so-called publishers' associations, either local, sectional or national, have been ineffective in the past because they have dealt more in the superficial than in real fundamentals.

Reams of idle talk, some of it reduced to printed records, without any unanimous decision regarding sound fundamentals, is the net of most publishers' meetings.

If the newspapers would but come together and each year adopt just one basic principle to be religiously applied and carried out by all members, they would in ten years or twelve years accomplish more than they will in a thousand years by present methods.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

"Western"—According to my ideas, it is the utmost folly to try to place a flat rate of so much a thousand circulation on advertising space. It is equally foolish for a newspaper to arbitrarily fix its rates on the basis charged by other newspapers of the same potential in other cities.

No other business on earth could endure on such an unsound basis, and those who seek to beat down our rates and reduce us to arbitrary prices, such as 1-10, 1-8 or 1-5 of a cent a line per thousand of circulation should not be blamed for seeking to buy cheaply, but member of the executive committee of the National Association of Corporate Schools, to help organize and serve as a director of the Children's Playground Association of Philadelphia, and as Director of Public Information of the U. S. Food Administration for Pennsylvania.

Aside from that, Mr. Wright's time has been practically his own, except when he has been busy as secretary of the Patriotic Society of Philadelphia, which he organized, and in promoting the activities of the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia, and of the Association of National Advertisers.

Once, in the time was hanging heavily, Mr. Wright acted as director of publicity for M. G. Brumbaugh when the latter was candidate for governor of Pennsylvania.

He was educated in the public schools of Philadelphia, was with the Philadelphia North American from 1898 to 1901, and with N. W. Ayer & Son from 1901 to 1911.

DAILY NEWSPAPERS OF U. S. LISTED BY STATES ACCORDING TO POPULATIONS OF CITIES

RATES IN EFFECT AUGUST 1 GIVEN FOR INFORMATION OF SPACE BUYERS—COMPARATIVE IMPORTANCE OF MARKETS, BASED ON LATEST POPULATION ESTIMATES—DATA SUPPLIED HERE WAS COMPILED BY EDITOR & PUBLISHER IN CO-OPERATION WITH BARBOUR'S ADVERTISING RATE SHEETS, INC.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER with the co-operation of Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., presents, on the following ten pages, a list of the English-language newspapers—Morning, Evening and Sunday—of the United States, revised to August 1, together with minimum foreign advertising rates for 5,000-line contracts in effect on that date.

This list is not a mere revision of the data published July 24, but is a presentation of market units according to comparative populations of cities, linked with space-buyers' information in regard to circulations and rates of the newspapers covering these markets.

The tabulations are arranged by states, for convenience in reference. Under the state heads the cities are arranged in the order of their size, as indicated by the latest available population figures.

These tabulations, therefore, present primarily a visualization of markets, National, State and City.

Campaigns planned to concentrate on dominant cities may be quickly estimated as to costs by a selection of the newspapers to be used in such cities and the use of the rate information given.

Space-buyers working on campaigns to be carried in the smaller cities of any section will find the data at hand for computing costs and listing mediums.

This information, which is of such timely value to national advertisers, advertising agencies and space-buyers, has been gathered and collated for EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., Chicago, an organization wholly devoted to furnishing data as to rates and circulations of newspapers.

In a complete summary of the information contained in these lists, EDITOR & PUBLISHER will present, in August 21 issue, statistics classified under nine heads, showing number of Morning, Evening and Sunday papers, with rates and circulations, in cities of less than 5,000 population; in cities from 5,000 to 9,999; in cities from 10,000 to 24,999; in cities from 25,000 to 49,999; in cities from 50,000 to 99,999; in cities from 100,000 to 249,999; in cities from 250,000 to 499,000, and in cities of more than 1,000,000 population.

The arrangement of this matter prepared by Justin F. Barbour will show the numbers of cities in each state coming under the population classifications outlined above.

For example: Alabama has two evening newspapers in cities of less than 5,000 population. Their combined circulation is 6,040. The joint agate line advertising rate is .0392858. No Morning or Sunday papers are shown in this classification of cities in Alabama. Following through the nine groups of cities we find the same sort of data is afforded, including under the different heads, all of the English-language daily and Sunday newspapers of the state. The same facts are given applying to every state in the Union.

The labor involved in compiling this summary has been very great and the expense involved very heavy but the results secured are bound to be of inestimable value to the newspaper in making it easier for the space-buyer to use the newspapers.

It has often been contended by national advertisers that the primary consideration in planning sales campaigns is the market unit. Given facts as to market possibilities, the selection of advertising mediums to reach such markets naturally follows in the order of importance.

Thus EDITOR & PUBLISHER, in the lists now presented, follows this order, showing the dominant, the intermediary and the lesser markets in each state, based on populations of cities.

To the national advertiser desiring country-wide advertising, the data affords complete and authoritative, as well as up-to-date, circulation and rate information.

Where campaigns are aimed to cover particular territories or sections, the lists furnish, at the cost of but little research, the essential facts.

If an advertiser deals with states as separate market units, the computation of costs and the selection of mediums is simplified.

In instances where only cities of a particular class, as to population, are covered, the data is at hand.

Just now the big fall advertising campaigns are in the making. Markets and mediums are being decided upon. Costs are being carefully estimated. The data given in these pages will serve as a handy guide to all space-buyers in this work. It is presented in a methodical manner, so classified that it is but the work of a moment to ascertain any given facts about population or about mediums, with their rates and circulation.

This service to space-buyers, rendered to EDITOR AND PUBLISHER in co-operation with Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., is an unbiased, impartial service. It deals with facts, and these facts carry their own significance. No advertising consideration is involved. No newspaper has paid for representation in these lists. No newspaper has been omitted from representation. The purpose has been one of helpful service to space-buyers and daily newspapers. The obvious requirement has been met—the presentation of authoritative and complete information.

Twelve dailies, recently established, have necessarily been omitted from these lists for the reason that circulation figures and other data were not immediately available. These new dailies are: Montrose (Colo.), Daily Enterprise; Dublin (Ga.) Tribune; Twin Falls (Idaho) Chronicle; Danville (Ky.) Messenger; Clinton (Mo.) Record; Leaksville (N. C.) Observer-Gazette; Waynesville (Pa.) Press; Jackson (Tenn.) Progress; Corpus Christi (Tex.) Times; Dallas (Texas) Commercial Record and Nampa (Idaho) Free Press.

A late telegram announces the purchase of the Cuero (Tex.) Star by the Record of that city. The Star should therefore be eliminated from the Texas list.

Next week's issue of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER—Thursday, August 21—will carry the most complete and important analysis ever made for merchandising purposes of daily newspaper markets.

Advertisers National Local Classified All Kinds And All in The Denver Post

From January 1 to July 31, 1919 forced almost every issue to capacity size, and from one to two columns were added to a "turnaway" business.

They have actually been stopped cutting on the accelerator as a continual performance, to give us more and still more advertising. Present equipment limits size of paper to one hundred and four pages. We are now spending over five hundred thousand dollars for additional building and equipment. The net result of these advertising orders in seven months was:

Total advertising lines, 7,755,944

Increase over corresponding months 1918, lines 2,029,944

In seven months this year The Denver Post printed 884,464 lines of advertising more than the next two Denver dailies combined, allowing them 213,640 lines of city and state advertising, a class of business this paper does not print.

The Denver Post in these seven months printed lines of advertising:

Financial, 964,846
Automobile and Tires, 595,481
Magazine and Book, 81,531

In each of the foregoing kinds of display advertising The Denver Post printed a greater volume than all of the other Denver Dailies in combination.

In paid circulation The Denver Post prints every week day over thirty one thousand copies more than all of the other Denver papers combined, and on Sundays more than eighty-five thousand copies per issue.

A. B. C. audit of circulation released July 31, may be had on application.

The Washington Star's Supremacy in this World Center

To cover Washington the Star is the only medium necessary. It has the unbounded confidence of this community — a confidence which is shared by its advertising pages as well as by its news pages — gaining for its advertisers the practical co-operation of the local merchants and the interested attention of this great cosmopolitan citizenry.

Write our statistical department for specific information and call upon it for co-operation in furtherance of your national advertising campaign — to be logically begun in Washington.

Announcement!

The Times-Picayune, New Orleans, La.

Announces the appointment of Stanley W. Ray to take charge of its Service Department, with J. L. Griswold as principal assistant.

Mr. Ray has successfully filled the positions of reporter, sporting editor and night editor of the Times-Picayune, and assumes his new duties with intimate knowledge of the trading territory and the people served by this newspaper.

Mr. Griswold has been trained in gathering statistical information through association with one of the large mercantile agencies.

These important additions to the staff of the Service Department of The Times-Picayune have been made necessary by the great volume of national advertising which has been flowing into its columns.

National advertisers and advertising agencies may obtain any information they may desire relating to this market, and may secure trade surveys or other co-operation by writing to The Times-Picayune for the information desired.

Address all communications to the company,

The Times-Picayune

The Cleveland, Ohio, Situation

The News

Cleveland's Best Newspaper

Alone of the CLEVELAND Daily Newspapers Gained in Circulation

All other Cleveland Daily Newspapers LOST

According to figures compiled from sworn statements filed with the Government by the three Daily Newspapers quoted published in their own columns, for the six months ending March 31st, 1919, as compared with the preceding six months ending September 30th, 1918, the following gains and losses were shown by the Cleveland Daily Newspapers:

The NEWS Gained 2,942
Copies Per Day

PLAIN DEALER Lost 14,112
Copies Per Day

The PRESS Lost 7,792
Copies Per Day

It was in April, 1913, that the Government first required daily newspapers to file and publish a sworn statement of circulation covering the average number of copies per day. Comparisons made between the six months ending March 31, 1913, and the six months ending March 31st, 1919 show that

The NEWS in SIX YEARS has INCREASED 97% in Circulation

The PRESS in SIX YEARS has INCREASED 6% in Circulation

In other words, The Cleveland News has grown so during six years as to be giving its advertisers 97 per cent more in circulation.

The other evening daily, The Press, has a little over 6 per cent increase in circulation.

The Sunday News-Leader

During the six months covered by the last sworn statement filed with the Government as summarized with the preceding six months:

Gained 15,974 Copies
Per Sunday

Two Distinct and Separate Service Features

Pages 29 to 36 inclusive of EDITOR & PUBLISHER for July 24 might very happily be termed a Space Buyers' Handy Reference Guide because it is possible to find in these data almost instantly the circulation and the minimum 5,000 line space rate of any daily newspaper in the United States. The arrangement by States and cities and papers being made alphabetically.

Pages 21 to 32 inclusive of this issue contain more information about newspaper markets than has ever before been brought together in one place for the service of the man who must plan and estimate the cost of a newspaper campaign. Here it is possible to quickly visualize a market by town, city or by the total units comprising a State. Here we have population arranged in order of size, plus newspapers—morning, evening and Sunday—with circulations and advertising rates as of August first.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER Grows Because It Serves

For Explanation of Key Letters and Markings See Foot Note on Page 32.

"What newspapers have you in Milwaukee?"

and the average citizen will answer:

"We have the Journal"

Sterling character and a clean aggressive editorial policy makes The Journal Milwaukee's dominant newspaper. Nine out of every ten English-speaking families read it—do you wonder that it's name is on everyone's lips?

"If you could advertise in but one newspaper which would it be?"

And the merchant will invariably answer:

"The Journal"

Keyed advertisements are seldom used in The Journal—by Milwaukee merchants — they resort to that method in testing other papers. The sterling worth of The Journal is definitely known.

Statistical Information for the National Advertiser

An intensely developed and highly organized Sales Promotion and Statistical Department is at the service of the National Advertiser. Let us give you information as to the trade possibilities of your product—with comparative figures as to the popularity of competitive brands.

EXPLANATION OF KEY-LETTERS AND MARKINGS IN TABLES PRINTED ON THE FOREGOING PAGES

THE list of papers is corrected to August 1, 1919.

The circulation figures are the average net paid for the six months' period ending March 31, 1919, as reported to the Audit Bureau of Circulations or to the Government under the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912.

The Agate Line Rates (14 agate lines equal one inch) are the 5,000 line space rates applying to general "foreign" advertising, in effect August 1, 1919.

Population figures taken from N. W. Ayer's (1919) American Newspaper Annual and Directory.

Roman type, published mornings; italic type, published evenings.

The bold face circulation figures represent average NET PAID circulation for the six months' period ending March 31; the light-face figures represent the average NET PAID circulation for the six months' period ending September 30 preceding.

Where the minimum space rate is the 5,000 line rate no character is used.

A—Every morning, including Sunday.

B—Morning except Sunday.

C—Morning except Monday, including Sunday.

D—Morning except Sunday and Monday.

E—Morning and evening, week days.

F—Morning and evening, week days and Sunday morning.

G—Morning except Monday. Sunday evening.

H—Morning except Monday. Evening except Saturday and Sunday.

I—Morning except Sunday and Monday. Evening except Sunday.

M—Sunday exclusively.

K—Every evening, including Sunday.

R—Evening except Sunday.

S—Evening except Sunday. Sunday morning.

T—Evening except Saturday and Sunday.

U—Evening except Saturday and Sunday. Sunday morning.

Y—Saturday exclusively.

*—Preceding the name of a paper indicates membership in the A. B. C. following a rate indicates that the rate is flat and not subject to time or space discounts.

"—Less than 5,000 lines.

||—More than 5,000 lines.

‡—Where the publishers' card does not give space rates but does give insertion rates the open rate is used and the fact that lower insertion rates may be earned.

†—Taken from A. B. C. statements.

This compilation of ten pages of Newspaper Circulations and Advertising Rates is part of an exclusive loose-leaf Statistical Service (fully protected by copyright) and made available semi-annually for the use of newspapers, advertisers and advertising agents by Editor & Publisher Co., New York, and Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., Chicago.

"THE SERVICE TEST"

THE difficulty in securing up-to-date, complete and authoritative information upon which to base estimates of the cost of newspaper advertising campaigns has served, in the past, to divert a great volume of business from the newspapers to the magazines and periodicals.

Advertising agents were able to furnish estimates of the costs of campaigns in magazines and other publications of national circulation on short notice. But to furnish such estimates for campaigns in newspapers was a task involving a great deal of research work.

It had also been a widespread belief, impossible to refute without facts and figures, that newspaper advertising campaigns were expensive in comparison with campaigns in other classes of publications.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER, through the presentation of the facts, has lightened the work of agents in furnishing estimates to prospective users of newspaper space, and has—through the same means—demonstrated that space in the newspapers is far less expensive than in other classes of mediums.

No other trade journal in this field has ever rendered service of equal value to space-buyers, national advertisers, advertising agents—and to the daily newspapers of the country. And the end is not yet. Further analyses of markets and of mediums will follow in regular sequence.

PERSHING

The real story of the man who led America's arms to victory told for the first time.

A breezy, informal, personal biography, attained from relatives and hitherto private sources by

H. F. WHEELER

Illustrated with rare photographs loaned from the albums of Pershing's closest friends and relatives.

General Pershing is coming home from France early in September. America is awaiting him with open arms. There will be celebrations in his honor in every city which he visits.

This great serial describing in intimate detail the real life of the man who led America's millions overseas will be released to synchronize closely with his return to this country. It will cover a period of a month in daily installments, fully illustrated.

It will give the story of the man whom the American Congress has decided alone shall bear the full title of general at a time when that man's name is on the lips of all Americans, eager to do him honor.

And in addition it is a thrilling, human interest document which tells intimate details and incidents of the life of a great man which never before have come to the attention of the public.

It puts General Pershing in an entirely different light before the people. It shows him a warm, human figure, rather than a stern military chief. It pictures him as a boy, a cadet, a teacher, and, finally as a dominating military man in Cuba, the Philippines —all leading up to his service and leadership in France which have made him the hero of the nation.

GENERAL PERSHING

In gathering the material for this story the author visited all places in the country where General Pershing had lived and had been known, obtaining at large expense a mass of remarkable detail which will make this serial one of the most remarkable descriptions of the life of a great man ever printed.

Territory will close rapidly on this great serial.

C. L. MORRIS IS GOING TO BOSTON—SOME DAY

C. L. MORRIS

Visiting Boston was an event in the lives of many people even before the election of President George Washington. During the last 100 years it has been the vacation goal of thousands upon thousands of our citizens. Some have attained their ambition and climbed Bunker Hill but others have not.

Charles L. Morris belongs in the latter class. His case, however, is different from that of all the others. Though eighteen of the New York winters he has talked about and planned his coming summer vacation trip to Boston, but when time to start arrived he has always turned about and traveled south.

He is just back from his old home at Murfreesboro, Tenn., and says that next summer he is going—but what's the use?

Mr. Morris knows a great deal about Boston. Even has an explanation of why they can't keep the train entrance to South Station clean. He is so well acquainted up that way that there are a great many people who have never been out of Boston that he familiarly calls by their first names.

You see, Mr. Morris has been night news editor in the New York office of the Boston Globe for the last eighteen years. His principal duty is to keep two leased wires loaded each night with all the stuff that the people of Boston are interested in—which shows that he must know his Boston pretty well.

Before coming to New York Mr. Morris was chief operator in the Washington Bureau of the Associated Press, and prior to that he was superintendent of the Southern Associated Press, with headquarters at Atlanta.

Some day Col. Taylor, who owns the Boston Globe, is going to order him to come up and see the city that he thinks most about.

guests Saturday at luncheon of Warren C. King, an aspirant for the Republican nomination for Governor, at his home in Bound Brook, N. J.

MARTHA BROOKE JONES, WHO SERVED for nearly two years in United States Army Intelligence Bureau, Paris, has returned to staff of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. Richard Seeyle Jones, who also recently returned from Paris, has rejoined the repertorial staff of the same paper.

SEATTLE POST-INTELLIGENCER HAS BEEN increased in size from seven to eight columns.

SHELDON R. COONS, WELL KNOWN ADvertising man, was recently banqueted in Portland (Ore.) on his return from that city, where he has been advertising director for the department store of Lipman, Wolfe & Co. He has accepted an executive position with the advertising staff of Gimbel Brothers, New York.

SERGEANT JOSEPH F. DURHAM, FOR many years reporter on Troy (N. Y.) newspapers, and now with the Thirty-fifth Service Company of the Signal Corps, in Paris, has been recommended for a citation for meritorious service.

MORE THAN $700 WAS ADDED TO THE children's summer vacation fund of the Albany Knickerbocker Press as a result of performances of "The Mother and the Law," in a local theatre last week.

MARTIN H. GLYNN, EDITOR OF THE Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union, has been appointed with Commissioner John H. Finley of the state education department to investigate alleged food hoarding in New York state recently.

THE SECOND ANNUAL PICNIC OF THE Houston Post was held Wednesday, August 6, at Galveston.

THE SHARPE BUILDING, AT THE CORNER of Henry and Chenango streets, Binghamton, N. Y., is being remodeled to provide for the press rooms and editorial departments of the Binghamton Republican-Herald under its new management.

THE ROCHESTER (N. Y.) HERALD COMmemorated its fortieth anniversary with a big anniversary edition. Members of all departments of the paper had an outing at Manitou beach.

N. E. A. OPENS OREGON SESSION

Besides reviewing the history of the Spectator, which perished in 1855 from the hardships of pioneer journalism, the speakers called attention to the great work in the cause of education, civic righteousness and progress that the newspaper has accomplished in the early days of every section of the country. The monument was unveiled by Mrs. Hardy, wife of President Hardy, and Aaron Wait, grandson of the fourth editor of the Spectator.

Annual Banquet Held

The annual banquet was held the same night, when the editors were the guests of three Portland newspapers, the Oregonian, Telegram and News.

Fully 500 people were present, for many Oregon editors are attending the meeting and newspaper men from other States, besides those who came on the special train.

Mayor Baker Spoke

President Hardy, Mayor Baker, of Portland; Frank J. Goss, of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer; Herbert Cuhbert, secretary of the Northwest Tourist Association, and Fred L. Sterling, state treasurer of Illinois, and editor of the Rockford Register Gazette, were among those who responded to toasts.

Entertainment throughout the Portland visit has been on a lavish scale. When the visitors arrived on the evening of August 8 they found awaiting them an elaborate dinner, spread under the trees of Laurelhurst Park.

Bear Steak for Breakfast

This was followed by a jinks at the Portland Press Club, while on Sunday they took an automobile trip over the Columbia River highway. At Eagle Creek, the objective of this ride, they were served with a bear and trout breakfast. It was spread on a table 300 feet long in a setting of exceptional beauty. Fifty members of the Progressive Businessmen's Club of Portland spent the night at Eagle Creek and cooked and served the morning meal.

Special auto rides and other entertainment have been provided for the ladies of the party in Portland and elsewhere.

Illinois Well Represented

The feminine contingent is enjoying the outing no less than the men, and the adventure of one of them, Mrs. Willard E. Carpenter, of Lincoln, president of the Illinois Women's Press Club, has attracted much attention.

At the invitation of General Manager Scott, of the Canadian Pacific, Mrs. Carpenter rode over the great divide on the cowcatcher of the special's locomotive. Illinois, with forty delegates, has the largest representation on the N. E. A. train.

Many Visitors at Lake Waukewan

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—Harry R. Durant, well known New York writer, has purchased the estate of Dr. Ralph Brown, of Malden, Mass., including a large point of land on Lake Waukewan, a cottage and several acres of land at Meredith, N. H. Other well-known writers spending vacations in the same section include Clarence Buddington Kelland, Forrest Halsey, Frank Condon and Herbert Corey. Harry Leon Wilson and Booth Tarkington will also try their luck at bass fishing in Lake Waukewan shortly.

Theodore Broders has resigned as manager of the service department of the St. Paul Daily News to take charge of the promotion and service department of the Omaha Daily News, another of the Clover Leaf papers.

Julian Miller, editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, has announced that he will not resign to be a candidate for Superintendent of the Public Welfare.

Newspaper Profession Greatest of All, Says Ford

"You know," said Ford to the correspondent in parting, "you're in the greatest business in the world. The press of the country can do more good than any other in the world if it will only print what's right and drive home these essential things."

(From an interview of George B. Holmes, of the International News Service, with Henry Ford as the latter was leaving with John Burroughs and Thomas A. Edison on a camping trip through the Adirondacks.)

We told the Constitution that Goodrich had developed a new ink-distributing roller unaffected by heat or cold—a roller for feed and distributive services that outwore others two, three and four to one.

As proof, we told them how the Plain Dealer had used one set for over a year. It was hard to believe—the Constitution checked up, and this is what the Plain Dealer told them:

> "We have been using the rollers made by the B. F. Goodrich Co. for the past year and a half and have found them very satisfactory, indeed. The original cost is somewhat greater than for composition rollers but the life of the roller seems to be indefinite—those originally placed on our machines are still in use and apparently as good today as when installed."

Goodrich "ONE-SET" Rollers are unaffected by heat or cold. You never need to change in the middle of a run—you can even use the same set winter and summer.

Their distribution of ink is perfect; they are unaffected by water; they will not melt at highest speed in hottest weather. You don't even need to stop to wash them.

The best proof of their superiority is the calibre of newspapers which have adopted them.

RECRUIT CAMPAIGN IS PROVED SUCCESS

Report from Adjutant-General's Office on Results of Newspaper Advertising to Obtain Enlistments Shows Effectiveness of Media

An official detailed report on the $174,000 campaign conducted by the Government in newspapers during the last two weeks in June to obtain recruits for the United States Army has just been issued from the office of the Adjutant General, demonstrating that the campaign was an unqualified success and one that probably will be repeated. Plans are now being considered for a similar campaign during the coming fall. A campaign for Navy recruits already has been authorized.

Four pieces of advertising were used in the June army campaign, these advertisements appearing in all English-language newspapers in the cities where recruiting offices are located, or more than 200 newspapers in 56 cities. There were two full pages and two pieces of 1,100 lines. The account was handled by Frank Seaman, Inc.

Results During Four Weeks

Results attributable to the advertising were checked, not only during the two weeks it appeared, but during the two weeks succeeding, and are considered in the official report, as follows:

"Total number of applicants for the four weeks, June 21 to July 12, inclusive, as reported by the recruiting officers, was 24,239. Total number of acceptances, 10,662. Applicants obtained through advertising were estimated to be 11,259. The cost of the entire campaign was $174,000; therefore, the cost per applicant was $15.45.

"It must also be borne in mind that applicants from advertising are still coming into the recruiting stations in large numbers, although the advertising campaign ended nearly six weeks ago. Estimating the number of acceptances from advertising at 6,000, the cost per acceptance is $27.

Many Enrolled at Camps

"The large increase in the number of recruits obtained in the camps coincident with the advertising has not been taken into account in any way in arriving at the figure of $15.45 per applicant, or the sum of $27 per acceptance, although there is undoubtedly a considerable percentage of the increase of 5,593 attributable to advertising.

"If but 20 per cent of this increase were taken into consideration, the cost per applicant would be $14, and the cost per acceptance would be $24.44. These figures compare favorably on a percentage basis with any commercial mail order campaign, where results are judged solely by the number of inquiries from advertisements.

"The 'good-will' so much desired by every commercial concern is becoming a lasting heritage of the Army through the medium of advertising. It is no longer necessary for the public to ask, 'Does the Army need men?' or, 'What will my boy get in the Army?' or, again, 'Where is the recruiting station?'—because through the newspapers the message of the Army has gone to those who read."

LIEUT.-COL. COOPER APPOINTED

Former President of Press Association Represents Canada Here

Sir Robert Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, has appointed Lieut. Col. John A. Cooper, a past president of the Canadian Press Association, to be a special Government representative in New York. A bureau of information has been opened in the Brokaw building, Broadway and Forty-second street.

LIEUT.-COL. JOHN A. COOPER

Colonel Cooper raised and trained a battalion of troops in Toronto known as the "Canadian Buffs," and took them overseas in February, 1917. He has only recently returned from France. Colonel Cooper was at one time editor of the Canadian Magazine, and later founder and editor of the Canadian Courier. He was the first president of the Canadian Club of Toronto.

Canada's Liberals Led By Former Reporter

Three Journalists Were Contenders for Sir William Laurier's Leadership—W. L. Mackenzie King Is Winner

MONTREAL, Aug. 1.—The Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, who was chosen leader of the Liberal Party in Canada at the convention held in Ottawa last week, was formerly a reporter on the Toronto Globe.

It is somewhat significant that out of the four men nominated for the leadership of the party three are now, or were, journalists.

Mr. King defeated the Hon. W. S. Fielding by 38 votes. Mr. Fielding is editor of the Montreal Journal of Commerce. The third journalist was the Hon. George P. Graham, editor and proprietor of the Brookville Recorder & Times.

Mr. King was educated at the University of Toronto and at Harvard. Later he was a lecturer on political economy at the University of Chicago, and also held the same post at Harvard University. For some two or three years he was associated with the Rockefeller Foundation and did considerable investigating at the request of J. D. Rockefeller. Mr. King is 45 years of age.

Texas Resorts Will Advertise

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Aug. 13.—First steps in the plan for co-operative advertising of Texas resorts was taken Saturday, August 9, when representatives from San Antonio and four other resort cities of Texas met at Galveston to discuss arrangements for a publicity campaign in connection with the advertising by the United States Railroad Administration. The five cities represented at the Galveston meeting were San Antonio, Corpus Christi, Mineral Wells, Marlin and Galveston. The meeting was held at the Galvez Hotel.

The South Bend Market

South Bend, the shopping center for Northern Indiana and Southern Michigan, offers one of the best balanced markets in America. In the heart of rich farming territory, South Bend is also the central and largest of a group of hustling industrial cities and towns. A dozen electric and steam railroads radiate from South Bend.

The South Bend market can be thoroughly and completely covered by using one medium—The South Bend News-Times. This newspaper, published morning, evening, and Sunday editions, blankets the territory with more than 17,000 daily and 18,500 Sunday circulation.

Both foreign and local advertisers recognize News-Times leadership. Indisputable evidence of News-Times dominance is contained in a comparison of the July advertising score of The News-Times and its competitors. This shows The News-Times far ahead in total space carried. The News-Times' lead in automobiles and accessories, for instance, is nearly 100 per cent.

CO-OPERATION

The News-Times is alone in its field in giving service to the advertiser. Competent co-operation is guaranteed. Our service department works intelligently to make every dollar invested in News-Times advertising as productive as possible.

Western Farmers Demonstrate Faith in Advertising

Farmers' organizations of Jackson and Josephine counties of Southern Oregon have voted financial support to the commercial clubs of Medford, Ashland and Grant's Pass in their movement to advertise Rogue River Valley. Their action is exceptional, at least in the West, where commercial organizations have always met the expense of such campaigns without the assistance of the rural districts.

William Allen White Will Write for List of Papers

Will Tour Country to Discover Sentiment on Vital Questions and Cover First Meeting of League of Nations

William Allen White, newspaperman, whose work as an interpreter of news and events and world currents has heretofore been confined all too largely to magazines and periodicals —plus an occasional book—is to find his greater audiences through the newspapers.

Mr. White is to tour the country with a view to ascertaining what public sentiment is today in regard to the grave industrial, social and political problems which are crowding for solution. He will write a series of articles picturing the attitude and convictions of real Americans as a prelude to his news reports of the first meeting of the League of Nations, expected to take place in Washington in late October.

Mr. White has recently returned from abroad. His reports of the Peace Conference, and his London articles, were syndicated in about fifty newspapers through the Wheeler Syndicate, and the same organization will furnish his forthcoming articles to their clients. It is certain that Mr. White will, through this plan, be able to reach a wider circle of readers than he has ever before addressed.

Forty-seven magazines—the pick of the entire country. Good magazines all of them.

They are the popular sellers, the magazines that cover the country so thoroughly.

The combined circulation of all these good magazines in the state of Indiana, according to the latest A. B. C. report is 510,695. The combined circulation of the Daily newspapers listed here is 651,511, and the combined agate line rate for advertising is $1.07396. Indiana is harvesting and selling the greatest crop in the history of the state.

This crop is bringing record prices. The people of Indiana, nearly 3,000,000 of them are the kind that live well.

Indiana is a good try-out territory and Indiana daily newspapers, especially those listed here, cooperate with national advertisers to produce results.

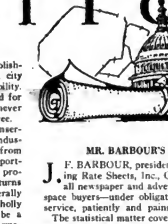
Ten Million Lines In Seven Months

In seven months this year The New York Times published 10,262,770 lines of advertisements—a gain of 2,669,727 lines over the corresponding period last year, a greater volume and a greater gain than any other New York newspaper.

In July The New York Times published 1,464,833 lines of advertisements, 526,078 lines more than in July, 1918, surpassing all other New York newspapers in volume and increase.

No other New York newspaper prints so large a volume of advertising, notwithstanding that all advertisements in The New York Times are censored and many columns excluded.



The net paid circulation of the daily edition of The New York Times is greater than that of any other New York morning newspaper.

LOCAL CO-OPERATION

TO bring about co-operation between publishers of competitive daily newspapers of a city has always appeared to be an impossibility. Time and again within the war period, the need for such co-operation has been urgent, but it has never been actually accomplished to any effective degree.

True, publishers generally adhered to the conservation regulations established by the War Industries Board. This fact saved the industry from something like disaster. Perhaps the most important policy connected with the paper economy program of war days was that of eliminating returns and free copies. This policy was very generally adopted in the days of stress, and it proved so wholly sensible and helpful that there should never be a return to the old system. Yet, according to information which has come to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, newspapers in at least one big city are reverting to this practice of waste and unnecessary loss in the face of a threatened paper shortage. Local competition for circulation is assigned, as always, as the reason for this dangerous backward step.

Local co-operation between publishers should, simply for reasons of common sense and prudence as well as of high public policy, be established—if newspapers as a mass are to be guarded from the threatened paper shortage and will be saved the attitude of suspicion of the other fellow—the conviction that he will not play fair—should be set aside. For, if the "hated rival" insists upon following a disastrous policy, that is a course which will operate to eliminate him from the field if newsprint conditions should become as serious as anticipated in many quarters.

Publishers who have the larger vision should make every effort to secure an agreement between local rivals to adhere to certain sound standards of policy in paper economies. These standards should include common practices in the matter of space conservation. If publishers are willing in any city will agree upon a maximum of space for baseball news, for example, fixing the allotment upon the basis of the actual news value of baseball in comparison with spot news and the similar features of general interest, a great saving will have been accomplished. The old tradition that readers demand baseball gossip to the saturation point is nonsense. Baseball should be treated as news. If the magnates want gossip and personal piffle regarding the game printed, let them buy space in which to do it. These men will be content with a smaller volume of "dope" if they pay for it as advertising.

Local co-operation between newspapers affords a remedy for many of the paper-wasting policies now in vogue. Through it common practices concerning press agent matter of all descriptions may be developed. Automobile, moving picture and amusement advertising, masquerading as reading matter—and, of course, actually published free—could be eliminated. All advertisers could be placed on the same basis so far as "write-up" stuff is concerned. This would be simple justice to the advertiser who pays for all he gets—and it would serve to save an immense amount of white paper.

If the sincere effort is made to secure local co-operation in a city, and meets with the opposition of some particular publisher, that publisher should not be permitted to impose upon his competitors his own wasteful and disastrous practices. He should be permitted to follow his selfish policy to its inevitable end—disaster.

THE kind of circulation which is profitable to advertisers is never secured through wasteful and suicidal circulation "fights." The advertiser gets results from a newspaper which is read by people because they believe in it and consider it the best paper in its field.

THE controversy over the case of Mays, the baseball pitcher, has occupied in many big newspapers lately more space than has been given to the hearings on the peace treaty and league covenant being held by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Can this sort of editorial judgement as to comparative news values be defended?

MR. BARBOUR'S GOOD WORK

J. F. BARBOUR, president of Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., Chicago, has again placed all newspaper and advertising men—particularly space buyers—under obligations to him for valuable service, patiently and painstakingly done.

The statistical matter covering all English-language dailies in the United States, their circulations and advertising rates, as presented in EDITOR AND PUBLISHER of July 24; the space-buyers' summary of this information as presented in the issue of August 7, and the complete visualization of market units, national, State and city, with complete figures as to rates and circulations, as presented in this issue, represent service-tasks in the cause of judicious advertising which have involved an amount of labor hard to realize.

Mr. Barbour's cooperation with EDITOR AND PUBLISHER in this unprecedented service to our readers has been enthusiastic and unselfish. He has utilized the fine resources of his splendid organization without stint in making these tabulations authoritative and complete. It is doubtful if it has ever before been the good fortune of a trade newspaper in this field to be able to present to the space-buyers of the country "brass tacks" facts and figures of such timely value as are shown in this issue in the tabulations classifying market units of all the States according to populations of the cities.

These lists will be used as handy guides by space-buyers in estimating costs and extents of campaigns which are now under preparation for the fall and winter months. Agency men and national advertisers, having before them the latest data as to market units, rates and circulations of daily newspapers, will be enabled to put on full steam and to reduce to a minimum the problems of territories to be covered and mediums to be used.

THE question of fixing a basis for the number of lines of advance publicity to be given for each inch of amusement advertising is proposed for discussion at the New Orleans convention of the A. A. C. W. Would not such a policy properly classify such publicity as advertising? Under the Bourne Law, would it not be necessary to designate it as advertising? And, if it is proper to give advance publicity to amusements, why not to all other lines of advertising? The higher rate charged for amusement advertising is no defense of such a policy. It is merely an excuse—and a lame one—for it. Amusement advertising should be placed on the same basis as other advertising—neither penalized through a high rate nor subsidized through donations of reading matter.

TELL national advertisers what your field offers to them as a market, and what relation your paper sustains to that market—and they will do the rest.

NEWSPRINT SITUATION AGAIN ACUTE

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER has presented, in recent issues, facts and figures which show the gravity of the newsprint problem—which has taken on the character of a problem of supply rather than of price. In an interview on the conditions facing publishers in respect to their fall requirements for extra tonnage, S. S. Carvalho, one of the foremost authorities in America on newspaper publishing, has expressed through EDITOR AND PUBLISHER his views as to the serious possibilities of the threatened shortage.

Mr. Carvalho voices but one conclusion—that immediate conservation of paper is necessary. Even this, he concedes, will not afford a complete safeguard against a coming shortage. Yet he sees in it the only sensible and practicable policy for newspapers. He is not ready to admit that an increase to the three-cent price will greatly help in this conservation, so long as the present volume of advertising continues and grows.

Contracts, Mr. Carvalho observes, will afford little protection to publishers if it shall develop that the mills are unable to produce sufficient paper to fill them. On this head, it may be said, however, that the manufacturers have, in the past, confined their contract commitments to limits well within normal production possibilities. The chief difficulty facing contract customers will be, as it is right now, to secure the extra tonnage needed for taking care of current needs.

One of the factors of disturbance in the newsprint market has been the competitive bidding by big consumers for extra tonnage. Protected by contracts, at generally fair prices, for the bulk of the paper they need, they have been able to feel that they could bear the extra burden of paying speculative prices for excess supplies. Thus far, it seems, it has been possible to find such supplies—at a price. It is obvious that this situation has made for competition the market for small publishers, having no contracts and depending upon jobbers or brokers for their regular needs. They are forced into competition with the big publishers on a basis adverse to them.

The publishers of small city dailies are thus placed at a disadvantage which properly arouses their ire, and in seeking a remedy they are likely to bring to bear pressure upon their congressmen for such investigation of the newsprint market as may result in further litigation in the Federal Courts. The manufacturers may, conceivably, face such a situation as now confronts the Chicago packers. It is to their interests, therefore, to put an end to a speculative market, so far as they are able to do so, and to protect all users of newsprint paper alike.

THE DANA CENTENARY

CHARLES A. DANA, who exercised a greater influence than any other man on the journalism of his time, was born one hundred years ago.

He became a figure of national importance during the civil war, serving as Lincoln's "eyes at the front" during the critical campaigns of that great struggle for national unity.

The full force of his genius was spent in his work for the Sun, in which he established standards of newspaper practice which have endured. He succeeded in making the day-by-day life of the world an absorbing story. He made history of the story by flashes of satire, by whimsical treatment of men and things essentially grotesque. He made of his newspaper a human document—a helpful interpretation of life.

He lived for seventy-six years. He never grew old, never settled into a comfortable conservatism. He loved conflict, gloried in a long list of enemies of his own making. He endured the floods of his wrath and sarcasm upon the heads of presidents and public officials who failed to measure up to his standards. He was a force in our public life, either admired or feared by all men engaged in the public service. His service to journalism is gratefully acknowledged by the present generation of newspapermen, and is a heritage for those who are to come after.

THIS issue of EDITOR AND PUBLISHER carries a valuable directory of the English-language dailies of the United States.

PERSONALS

IN THE EDITORIAL ROOM

Carl T. Robertson, editorial writer for the Cleveland Plain Dealer for many years, has attracted much attention by his Sunday editorials on "Nature." Mr. Robertson has been an extensive wanderer in foreign countries, including Africa. His "off days" and vacation periods are spent in studying nature, and the coloring of his articles is true to life.

Sergt. Stanley K. Faye, former music critic of the Chicago Daily News, is home from ordnance service overseas. He is a son of the late Charles M. Faye, former managing editor of the Daily News and an associate of Horace Greeley.

Sergt. Robert C. Graham of the Marine Corps has resumed newspaper work in Tulsa, Okla. He was formerly with Niagara Falls (N. Y.) newspapers.

Andrew V. ("Dad") Barber, cartoonist for the Bridgeport (Conn.) Sunday Herald, while repairing the engine on his houseboat in the Housatonic River dropped a piece of machinery upon his right foot, fracturing the big toe.

Lieut. Harold L. Smith, formerly a reporter on the Ansonia (Conn.) Sentinel, is just back home in Shelton.

Miss Elsie Farnham, who has been "The Little Sister" among the reportorial writers for the Cleveland Plain Dealer for several months, has resigned and is now editing a house organ for the H. Black Company.

Vivian J. Gray is acting as Sunday and feature department editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer in the absence of William G. Vorpe, on vacation.

Mrs. Clarice White, who has been society editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, is now a feature writer for the Sunday edition, and Miss May Duffey succeeds her.

David McG. Cheney, formerly special writer on the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard and who has just returned from "V" work in Italy, has been named professor in English and instructor of a "current events" class at Tufts College.

George W. B. Britt, formerly of the New Bedford (Mass.) Mercury and more recently a prominent member of the staff of the Stars and Stripes overseas, has been appointed assistant secretary to Senator Lodge of Massachusetts.

G. A. Cowan, of the copy desk of the Kansas City Post, has resigned and left for California.

Dean Reitzel, head of the Kansas City Journal copy desk, is spending a month's vacation at Beatrice (Neb.), following an accident.

"Ed" Robinson, editor of the "Philosopher of Folly," a Cleveland Plain Dealer feature, is spending the summer in New England.

Charles Gillespie, formerly feature writer on the Pittsburgh Press, is now doing rewrite on the New York Evening Sun.

A nine-pound boy who arrived August 5 is the cause of the wide smile of William Stewart, commercial manager of the United Press.

"Vic" Harris, city editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, has been appointed sporting editor. He is succeeded as city editor by L. Spehr, late of the copy desk.

M. T. Caine, sports editor of the St. Paul Daily News, is taking his vacation at Yellow Lake, northern Minnesota.

"Tom" Hastings, of the sporting department of the St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press, has resigned and connected himself with a sporting goods firm in Minneapolis.

Mrs. Mary Dillon Foster, club editor of the St. Paul Daily News, is spending her vacation with her husband, Dr. Foster, in their cabin in the northern Minnesota woods.

Miss Sadie Mossler, of the city staff of the St. Paul Daily News, is passing her vacation in northern Michigan.

John Keefe, of the city staff of the St. Paul Daily News, is putting in his vacation days at Hackensack, Minn.

Miss Mary Kelly, assistant dramatic editor of the St. Paul Daily News, is spending her summer holidays at Lake Minnetonka.

W. J. Styles has left the local staff of the Ottawa (Ont.) Journal to go to the Renfrew Mercury.

Alan Longstaff, until recently telegraph editor of the Ottawa (Ont.) Journal, has joined the staff of the Canadian Press at Ottawa, and will go in the Press Gallery when the House resumes sittings.

Mrs. Charles George, known to Canadian newspaper readers as Ida L. Webster, realizes an ambition. She will be the first woman member of the Ontario legislature. She has announced her candidacy.

"Rob" Snadjr, who was one of the editors of the Stars & Stripes in France, has returned to the copy desk of the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

IN THE BUSINESS OFFICE

William J. Delahanty, for the past six years with the Boston Daily Newspaper Publishers' Association, was a successful candidate in the recent Massachusetts Bar examinations. He was a member of the staff of the Boston Journal for several years.

J. T. Dunlap has been appointed manager of the Missouri and Kansas Farmer, Kansas City, Mo. He has been with Twentieth Century Farmer, and the Nebraskan Farm Journal for a number of years, and in close touch with live stock and agriculture in the Missouri Valley.

Bernard A. Davey has resigned as advertising service manager of the Washington Times to become advertising manager of the National Sportsman, Boston. Prior to military service he was with Marshall Field & Co.

Edmund C. Larson, formerly in charge of the service department of the Minneapolis Journal, has affiliated himself with the Des Moines Capital in the same capacity.

Reg. Jennings, war veteran, has taken charge of the service department of the Ottawa (Ont.) Citizen.

P. C. Treviranus, business manager for the Des Moines Register and Tribune, is spending a week at Milwaukee, his former home.

WITH THE AD FOLKS

J. Albert McCollum is the new advertising manager of the Traffic Motor Truck Corporation, St. Louis. For many years he was automobile editor of the St. Louis Republic.

Joseph R. Hunter, advertising and merchandising expert, has joined the copy and production staff of the William H. Rankin Company. For several years Mr. Hunter has directed the advertising and selling plans of the J. W. Jenkins' Sons Music Company of Kansas City.

TEXAS PRESS LEADER STARTED IN WORKUM

Think of having to pay forty dollars a year for the privilege of setting and distributing type eleven hours a day!

Yet that was when Henry Koch, well-known as president of the Texas Press Association, did—or rather what his father did for him—when he was apprenticed for three years to a printer in the town where he was born, on the Zuyder Zee, in Holland.

HARRY KOCH

And the name of the town was Workum!

There were no stools in the print shop to encourage idleness and young Koch learned his trade well. When his apprenticeship was finished, he traveled around for a year or so and after inspecting critically some of the biggest and most celebrated cities of the world, decided that Quanah, Texas, had 'em all beat.

Quanah, previously famous for being part of the universe, now is additionally noteworthy for being that particular part of it where Mr. Koch published the Tribune-Chief. It has the best equipped printing plant, Mr. Koch says, of its size in Texas, which is considerable state. It had the first linotype machine in the whole state that was equipped with an electric melting pot.

Ray Menge, formerly connected with the Register and Tribune of Des Moines, has returned to work in the classified department.

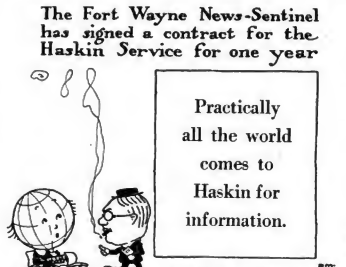
L. Barton Motherwell, formerly of the editorial staff of the Portland (Me.) Express-Advertiser, who returned recently to his home at Augusta, Me., after two years' service with an ambulance unit in France, has accepted a position in the advertising department of the Sunday Telegram, published by the owners of the Express-Advertiser.

Alfred J. Silberstein has started his own advertising service organization with an office at 44 East 23rd street. Mr. Silberstein was until recently associated with Advertising Artists, Inc. He has disposed of his interests in this company.

Arthur B. Churchill has resigned as advertising manager of The Syracuse Herald and is now associated with the American Seedtape Company of Newark, N. J., as president and manager.

Dean E. F. Gay of Harvard Will Head Evening Post

Will Take Charge January 1—Was Member of the War Trade Board—Is Native of Detroit



The Evening Post (New York) announces that Edwin Francis Gay, since 1908 Dean of the Harvard School of Business Administration and recently a member of the War Trade Board at Washington, will on January 1 assume general direction of the paper, becoming president of the corporation.

Dean Gay is a native of Detroit, Mich., and a graduate of the University of Michigan in 1890. He studied in the University of Berlin and received the degree of Ph. D. in 1902. Immediately afterward he became Instructor in Economics at Harvard and became a full professor within three years. In 1908 he was made Dean of the Graduate School of Business Administration.

In regard to the announcement, Thomas W. Lamont, owner of The Post, said:

"Of course, I am conversant with the plan as to Dean Gay. I know that the editorial staff and the trustees of The Evening Post have all felt for some time the advisability of further building up the staff of the publication in order to meet constructively, as a great newspaper must, the problems brought about as a result of the war.

"I have known Dean Gay for years, and I am convinced, together with the editors and the trustees, that by reason of character, capacity and experience, he is admirably equipped to undertake the new and responsible work which he will assume."

FORD LIBEL SUIT READY FOR THE JURY

Newspaper's Senior Counsel Contends That the Term "Anarchist," Applied to Defendant in Editorial, Did Not Mean "Bomb-Thrower"

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich., August 12.—Arguments in the $1,000,000 libel suit of Henry Ford against the Chicago Tribune closed today with the summing up addresses of Elliott G. Stevenson, senior counsel for the Tribune, and Alfred Lucking, senior counsel for Mr. Ford. Judge Tucker excused the jury until Thursday morning, when, he said, he would instruct it and send it to its deliberations.

Mr. Stevenson read many statements from the Ford peace propaganda and from Emma Goldman and declared that the jury could not tell which was written by Ford and which by the woman anarchist. Discussing the alleged libelous editorial, he insisted that there was not a word in it to justify the plaintiff's contention that by "anarchist" the Tribune meant a bomb-thrower.

"And now comes Mr. Ford and says that his reputation has been ruined, his life blasted, by this editorial," went on Mr. Stevenson. "Nothing but $1,000,000 of Tribune money would heal it! Why, his reputation was so ruined that Michigan, two months after the editorial, gave him the primary vote for President!"

Mr. Lucking characterized the address of Mr. Stevenson as an appeal to the passions and prejudices of the jury.

"A Stab in the Back"

"It was insidious, unlawful, a stab in the back," said Mr. Lucking. The lawyer, to illustrate, pointed to the charge of Mr. Stevenson that twenty-four times in twenty-one pages of the Ford booklet Mr. Ford called war "murder." Mr. Lucking gave his own construction of the booklet, and asserted that "Mr. Ford never called any one a murderer."

Mr. Lucking took up the question of the "right of fair comment" claimed by The Tribune in defense of the editorial, and asserted that the right existed with regard to comment on views, but not comment on individuals. He quoted the testimony of Tiffany Blake, chief editorial writer of The Tribune, to show that the editorial was comment on Henry Ford, not his views particularly.

gander." The story may be apocryphal, but it is being fathered on to the popular newspaper proprietor.

The Daily Sketch has been running a baby welfare scheme with prizes amounting to $10,000. It was unique in that it secured a good deal of official recognition all over the country, nearly 600 welfare centers being persuaded to link up with the Daily Sketch scheme in preference to conducting their own baby shows. The total number of entries is said to be over 250,000, and they were received at the rate of some 30,000 per week. A special baby number was issued last week, with countless pictures of thriving infants and numerous complimentary messages from eminent personages.

Sir Charles Starmer, the proprietor of the British "big three" in newspapers, has been offered the freedom of the County Borough of Darlington, Yorkshire. He is already an alderman of the town, and has occupied the mayoral chair with distinction.

NEWSPAPER MAKING

By Jason Rogers

should be made to pay at least cost, plus a reasonable profit.

On the figures submitted you are selling your space too cheaply. You should get at least 5 cents a line net in order to earn a fair and reasonable profit on your turnover, so to speak.

If you will send me statement of the volume of business at the different net rates, I may be able to show you how to produce the required higher average without great disturbance.

"A. B. C."—I should appraise your property as worth at least $100,000. I reach this by capitalizing your average profits of $7,000 a year for the past three years, plus excess of tangible assets over liabilities. Likewise, by capitalizing your circulation, plus excess of assets over liabilities. If you will send me trial balance sheets as of June 30, 1918 and 1919, I will gladly give the matter further consideration.

* * *

"Canada"—Don't waste time with foolish special editions. Work for 312-days-a-year business. Any money that such pan-handlers extract from the people of your town on a 50 per cent. basis is just so much handicap to the industrial prosperity of the place.

* * *

"Inquirer"—The eight-column page represents a great economy for almost any newspaper. The coming standard seems to be 12 ems pica, with columns 300 agate lines deep. A full page is 2400 lines, with halfs and quarters easily reconciled parts of it.

* * *

Dry Mats—Great improvements have been made during the past three years, but I would hesitate to throw out my steam tables if in your place.

Print Paper—Notwithstanding the reports of shortage of supply caused by increased wastefulness of many large newspapers and the extra consumption caused by increased volume of advertising, I do not look for radical advances in prices.

Even at 4 cents a pound at the mill, and that may be forced on us if certain publishers continue in their mad careers instead of raising advertising rates and reducing the volume of low-rate business, our newspapers can live and make money.

I have ceased to be an advocate of cheap print paper. I don't look for a return to a price below $2.75 mill for several years to come. High prices will gradually induce additional capital into the print paper manufacturing business, and as the supply passes the demand prices will soften.

I would increase my subscription to 12 cents a week regardless of my competitor. The loss of a few hundred circulation really means nothing even though he gains what you lose. With an increased revenue you could afford to sell your advertising for less money than he could, and still make more money than he.

Advertisers are commencing to realize that the publisher who is doing everything he can to hold down rates is a better one to follow than one who primarily seeks inflated circulation figures secured on an uneconomic basis.

CANADA Where They Do Things

Canada is the country of activity—of blood and brain and brawn; the land of promise and of purpose, of people and principle, punch and pep.

Canadians demonstrated their might during the war. Canada produced more men, per capita, than did any other part of the fighting forces.

Not only more men, but such men! Ye Gods!

Canadians went "over there" and literally mopped up.

Canada is worth while—mighty worth while and Canada, as a market, is just as well worth while as are Canadian people.

Canada is dependable—Canada is forceful.

Canada is ready, willing and anxious to buy the right kind of merchandise.

These daily newspapers of Canada, published by Canadians for Canadians and going to Canadians will carry your advertising message where it will do the most good.

They cooperate with local merchants, who will cooperate with you in putting your goods into the homes of Canadians.

USE THESE DAILY NEWSPAPERS and watch your sales grow. It will prove more than gratifying.

WOULD CURB FOREIGN LANGUAGE PRESS

Strong Sentiment in Senate and House for Complete Abolishment of Periodicals Not Printed in English —Four Bills Are Introduced

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 12.—In both the Senate and the House there is now in evidence a strong sentiment for the complete abolishment of periodicals printed throughout the United States in languages other than English. That the Senate is prepared to work some revolutionary changes in the conduct of alien periodicals is indicated by four bills which have been introduced on the subject within the past month.

Members of Congress say that they have been wearied by the obstinate refusal of a large proportion of the foreign language press of the United States to adopt and adhere to a policy of sound Americanism and that they are alarmed by the almost general capitulation of the Socialist foreign language papers to the spread of Bolshevism.

Opposed to "Melting Pot"

The Senate is convinced that much of America's difficulty in assimilating its vast alien population is due to the stubborn determination of alien periodicals to fight to the last ditch against the Americanization process, as the successful operation of the melting pot is bound to turn aliens away from their own periodicals and their own periodicals know it.

The Senate also believes that a great portion of the opposition voiced by certain elements to American participation in the great war was inspired by hundreds of foreign language papers working for the enemy. In general, there is a considerable group of Senators who believe that the only good foreign language press is a dead one.

The sentiment in the Senate on the foreign language press is divided into three elements. One faction, led by Senator Myers of Montana, is determined to completely annihilate the 1,200 or more foreign language periodicals published in this country, and to that end Senator Myers has introduced two bills—one which would prohibit admission to the United States mails of any periodical printed in German, and the other, of periodicals printed in any other language but English.

Restrictive Legislation

The second faction led by Senator King, favors restrictive legislation which would hold out a reward of merit for the better sort of foreign language papers by issuing to them a certificate or license. Other foreign language publications would be forced, by the provisions of a bill he has submitted, to file with the postmaster, at the office of mailing, a complete translation of certain classes of reading matter—particularly of matter that refers to the United States, its policies, international relations, etc.

Long Life of Newspaper Advertisement Proven

An inquiry recently received by a big drug firm in Seattle completely smashes any idea that the pulling power of a newspaper advertisement ceases shortly after its publication.

P. M. Frida, who gave his address as Kelaniya, Ceylon, wrote the firm inquiring about a food, which he said he saw advertised in the columns of the Seattle Times in "the April 13, 1915 issue."

The third element is led by Senator Smith of Georgia. It is represented by a bill, offered by the Senator, providing that the use of the mails shall be prohibited after October 1, to all foreign language periodicals which do not contain translations of their foreign language content, "column for column, page for page."

Secondly, the Smith bill would allow all foreign language papers only until January 1, 1925, to wind up their affairs and would prohibit the mails after that date to any publication printed in any language other than English.

The four bills are all being considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and almost any day may see the favorable reporting back of one or more of them.

CIRCULATION MEN WILL MEET

Important Papers Being Arranged for Interstate Gathering at Scranton

SCRANTON, Pa., Aug. 13.—The fall meeting of the Interstate Circulation Managers' Association will be held here September 10 and 11. Albert R. Michener, circulation manager of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Telegraph, is chairman of the program committee and promises papers on subjects of considerable interest to circulation managers at this time.

Fred I. Cook, president of the association, whose home is in Scranton, is arranging the stay of delegates so that only a one-day absence from homedesks will be necessary. The first day will be given over entirely to a business session and the second day an open discussion of subjects and a social time.

Connecticut Editorial Outing

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 13.—The midsummer outing of the Connecticut Editorial Association will be held Saturday, August 16, at Derby-Shelton on the Housatonic river, the Board of Trade in those towns co-operating.

CIRCULATION NOTES

The circulation department of the Lewiston (Me.) Daily Sun gave out several prizes to carriers Saturday morning. They were offered for boys gaining the largest number of weekly customers on their routes. The contest was by far the most successful ever conducted by the Sun. The actual number of papers delivered to subscribers in Lewiston and Auburn alone for the week ending Saturday was 478 a day more than for the same week one year ago. The first prize was a $35 bicycle, awarded to Napoleon Landry, who made a gain of more than 100 per cent on his route. Seven cash prizes were awarded.

A strike of union newsboys against a union paper! was threatened in Seattle recently by the Seattle Newsboys' Union, which alleged that certain union leaders had tried to get news venders to discriminate against other Seattle newspapers in favor of the Daily Union Record. The newsboys' leaders declared that such practices were in violation of agreements signed with the publishers, and unless they were discontinued, newsies favored boycotting the labor organ. The matter has not yet been settled.

Revival of the ordinance passed in 1906, that no boys under 10 years of age be allowed to sell newspapers unless with the written consent of their parents, and further provision that all boys so engaged be compelled to wear a badge, is to be brought about at once as a result of a meeting held at the Portland (Me.) Boys' Club.

The Gary (Ind.) Evening Post was delivered by airplane on August 1. A big Interstate Air Line plane carried a shipment of the newspapers and Walter O. Marquiss, city editor, from Gary to Hobart, eight miles away, in a little more than five minutes.

The Fall River (Mass.) Herald is giving a series of weekly outings at Sandy Beach to children and the "grown-up" members of their families. More than 6,000 persons enjoyed the first one last week.

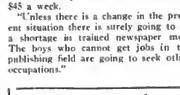
WAR SERVICE COST THEM THEIR JOBS

Re-Employment Bureau Reports 75 Experienced Newspaper and Advertising Men, with War Records, Seeking Positions in New York



There are seventy-five writers and advertising men in New York City who are jobless today because they went to war, according to a statement just issued by the Re-Employment Bureau for Soldiers, Sailors and Marines at 505 Pearl street. This number includes twenty-eight editors, reporters and publicity men and forty-seven advertising men.

Alfred L. Smith, executive secretary of the Re-Employment Committee of New York City, expresses the hope that publishers will notify the bureau when they are in need of employees. Mr. Smith laments the fact that there are so many experienced men who are without newspaper jobs today. He asks the publishers to give ex-fighters the preference when there is a job open.

"As is generally known," said Mr. Smith, "some writers are not paid any too well. That they are liberal spenders is also universally acknowledged. Therefore, when they strike a period of unemployment they suffer more than the man who is perhaps better paid or more economical.

"We have had experienced, trained, well-educated newspaper men applying at the bureau for temporary positions paying as little as $20 a week. These men ordinarily would be earning about $45 a week.

"Unless there is a change in the present situation there is surely going to be a shortage in trained newspaper men. The boys who cannot get jobs in the publishing field are going to seek other occupations."

LETTERS OF AN EDITOR TO HIS SON

About six months ago a young newspaperman undertook the management of a somewhat slow going country town daily. His father, an experienced editor, has written him many letters of practical advice. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has secured extracts from these actual letters for publication in several chapters, the second of which follows:

AN attractive show window is important, but it is not the whole store. Pay attention to what is behind the window, meaning by that, keep your back pages shipshape. Examine your contracts to see if you are not giving positions not nominated in the bond. I am not asking you to throw away good business to force the pyramiding of ads, but I am suggesting that you can improve appearances without any sacrifice. One thing you can do at once. Take a look at that official advertising, of which your have some days four or five columns, scattered on as many different pages. Bring it together and keep it together always on the same page. And then there's that medical reading matter. Don't put news heads on it unless you are obligated and don't mix it up with news unless you can't help it.

Keep Department Intact

Keep your departments in the same place every issue, and keep them intact as far as possible. You will find that the lazy make-up will break into a department now and then to justify or fill up other columns. Sometimes this seems unavoidable but not often. Don't scatter your country correspondence which, by the way, is an important part of your paper, and should not be treated as a poor relation, but rather as a circulation builder over the county.

I have tried to touch on some of the high spots of the value and art of make-up as essential to good newspaper. Ponder them, even if you can't do them all at once.

Get the Foreman Interested

I have marked a paper which I am returning herewith. I have gone at it rather roughly, not with the idea of making your job heavier, but with the purpose of making you see some of the many things to be done to clean up the paper. Take them slowly, and if possible get the foreman to seeing things for himself. And above all, don't let him know the suggestions are coming from anyone but yourself. He ought to see for himself those wornout column rules and that broken type. What would you think of a storekeeper who kept in his show window dirty, fly-specked?

Your printers are not artists, I know, but perhaps you can get them to take a little more pride in the make-up of your first page, and you will have to depend on them rather than on your proofs, who is too old to learn any new tricks. Show them a good looking paper among your exchanges and excite their powers of imitation, at least. Lay before your foreman the marked paper I am sending and get him to point out other places for improvement. Better this way than giving him orders.

Beware of Padding

Another word about the editor. I know you have to worry along with him until you can get the new man, but that does not mean that he is to be let alone in his ways of ignorance. For instance, don't fail to call attention to his practice of putting in his editorial columns long articles taken from another paper. It is palpably an effort to pad out, and besides these columns are for the editor's own, writing. It's like the old story of the man who had the Lord's prayer printed and hung on the wall over his bed. Then he would jump into bed, saying, "Lord, them's my sentiments."

I was interested, not to say amused, by the account of your first experience with the Hunkers primer. Just one word of advice on this subject. Don't tabor under the delusion that you can reform the man. Make up your mind to get along with him, or else fire him. Coaxing, persuading and threatening are useless 99 times in 100. Get along with him if you have to, but don't delude yourself with the idea that you can uplift him. Of course he's a good man when he's sober. They all are.

Local Interest in Editorials

I spoke in a recent letter of your editor's practice of using reprint editorial, and I must refer to it again. He had a long extract from the Digest, an article that was important, of course, but I doubt whether your readers are devouring matters of that kind. The suspicion is, of course, that he is taking the lazy way of filling his editorial columns. And what he does write is altogether on general subjects instead of on matters of distinct local interest. I have yet to see an editorial featuring any interest in your town or county affairs. I know there are some editors who believe in the safety of neutrality, but I think that theory entirely wrong. Honest opinions, sanely expressed, command respect if not approval of all. Be independent if you want to be, but independence does not lie in failure to have opinions.

Home News of Prime Importance

You say your editor does not believe much in local news on the first page, but holds that the readers want the telegraph news. He is wrong again as he or you will find out if he talks to intelligent readers. Get all the home news you can, and put it liberally on your first page. Your readers like to read about what they know something about, and put good heads on the local news instead of on some of that news from Europe. So much of the latter is only guesswork or rumor, to be denied tomorrow. You had yesterday two double column heads on stories that should have been run together, and even then were not worth as much display as that fire in the business section.

You are after circulation now, and as I see the case, you can get it only by making your paper the best in town. You cannot beat the opposition on telegraph news, but you can on local with out half trying. Impress your reporters with your dependence on them to make the paper go, and then play up what they get. They will be your best circulation getters and keepers. Circulation is part of your circle. You must get the news to get and hold readers, and you must have readers to get advertising.

NEW PUBLISHER AT PENSACOLA

Journal Publishing Company Announces Appointment of Wayne Thomas

Lois K. Mayes, president of the Journal Publishing Company of Pensacola, Fla., has sent out an announcement that Wayne Thomas, a practical newspaper man of 15 years' experience in the Florida field, has been appointed publisher, effective August 1.

The Journal is represented in the foreign field by Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman.

L. W. Prather, editor of the newly established High Point (N. C.) Republican, has sold his interest to George Holloway, business manager, and returned to his home at Detroit, Mich.

PRINTER'S DEVIL IS NOW ADVERTISING MANAGER

"I am a great believer in short copy, a lot of white space, attractive colors, and illustrations that tell a story. The imagination is very elastic; therefore, if we take our lesson from the forceful story-telling power of the motion pictures and apply the same principles to printed pictures, we are bound to get results in advertising," writes

O. GRIGG

O. Grigg, advertising manager of the Harley-Davidson Motor Co.

Mr. Grigg began earning a living as a printer's devil, and then promoted himself successively to be journeyman printer, foreman, superintendent, buyer of printed matter, engravings, and paper, and latest of all, advertising manager.

"Although I have many times cussed the printer's trade," he writes, "I am now thankful to have had the practical experience it gave me. It has proved to be a valuable asset in my present work."

Under Mr. Grigg's supervision, the Harley-Davidson Co. is educating its dealers to spend a certain per cent of their sales for advertising, in conjunction with advertising done by the company.

SOUNDED THE DEPTHS OF HUMAN NATURE

By Its War Work, Advertising Penetrated to the Elemental and Shows World Its Power as Never Before, Says F. H. Sisson

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Francis H. Sisson, vice-president of the Guaranty Trust Company, of New York, in addressing the Advertising Council of the Chicago Association of Commerce, recently said: "Advertising has played a very important part in creating for and revealing to us the new conception of our national responsibilities and duties. America's titanic efforts and achievements during the war would not have been possible without the aid of publicity, which helped to make the 'impossible' possible. Advertising was never before so universally recognized as one of the most powerful creative and constructive forces in the world.

"But, like every other great basic element in our existence, it, too, has undergone changes and has caught the spirit of the dawning era of a new peace. It has been quickened into a new life; it has acquired new potentialities never before has it exerted such influence over the minds and hearts of mankind. It has reached and stirred our souls to the sublimest sacrifices.

"It matters not that this power resulted from the most intense emotional period in the world's history and that it was due chiefly to patriotic fervor, for advertising was largely instrumental in creating the very emotion and patriotism from which it gained its greatest strength of appeal.

"Each reacted upon the others; each developed the others. And for the first time, advertising sounded the depths of human nature. It penetrated to the elemental in human nature.

"That is the paramount lesson, as it was the paramount achievement, of advertising during the war. That is the foundation upon which advertising must work in building the business of the future. That is the basic truth of which we must not lose sight.

Laws Cannot Be Codified

"We realize as never before that advertising is limited only by the limitations of human nature; that its laws can no more be codified than those of human nature; that every new discovery about human nature furnishes a new factor in advertising; that all our vaunted accumulation of advertising knowledge is only fragmentary, incomplete, disjointed, and defies definition in concrete, precise, axiomatic terms, even as our knowledge of human nature does.

"There is an excellent prospect that our foreign trade, which is exceeding all records, will total more than $10,000,000,000 this year. This is a colossal sum, even in these day of billions.

"The war has literally scattered American products all over the world. During the last four years our goods have been introduced in markets where they had never before sought admittance or where they never before had entry. And they were introduced at no cost whatsoever to the manufacturer. They were distributed on a scale which would have been impossible under normal conditions. There was no competition.

"Our products will no longer sell themselves abroad, as they did during the war. The demand for them which the necessity created will not sustain itself; it must be stimulated and kept active by effective advertising. Otherwise the unprecedented advantage which chance has bestowed upon us will gradually, but inevitably, be lost.

Our Prosperity at Stake

"This is absolutely essential, not only to maintain and to foster our foreign trade but to preserve our present prosperity. The cessation of hostilities found us with a tremendously expanded industrial capacity which the war had made imperative. But Mars has withdrawn from the world markets, and we are confronted with the problem of adjusting our industrial machinery to the demands of peace and of keeping it busy. We cannot lessen our productiveness without impairing business and prosperity. Consequently, we must encourage and never before the consumption of American goods in foreign lands. In helping to accomplish this result, therefore, advertising will assume an economic importance that can scarcely be exaggerated.

"The occasion is auspicious; in fact, advertising could not be employed to better advantage than now, for, thanks to the intensive and broadcast war-advertising campaigns conducted by the respective belligerent governments within their own countries and through propaganda publicity—only another form of advertising—to which they resorted in neutral lands, the world is prepared to respond more easily than in the past to advertising appeals.

Building for the Future

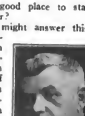
"Today particularly invites the advertiser to lay up stores of good will and prestige for future markets. Now is the time particularly for advertising to be informative and educational, to help create new standards of living, to stabilize markets, to make life more comfortable and attractive, as well as more just and sound.

"The war has opened up many new fields for advertising service. Financial and advertising geniuses are invited to devise plans through which to meet the investing needs of the nation, to distribute sound securities, to inculcate thrift. Within two years our investing class has sprung from three hundred thousand to twenty millions, and there are yet no plans devised which adequately meet the need of these newborn investors.

Investors Multiplied

"Economic and social fallacies erowd upon us; industrial problems rise on every side. Only through understanding can they be solved, and understanding can be created only through publicity. Legislative action rises out of public opinion; public opinion is based upon current information and popular prejudice.

"These can be met most effectively through such public mediums as you command. In meeting them you are serving not only the ends of good citizenship and social progress, but business advantage, which can be secure only in a stabilized nation and one based upon sound economic thinking.



"We who serve as the conveyors of ideas have before us this great opportunity and duty that has never before in history—an opportunity to realize profits never dreamed of in the business of the past—a duty to do our part, to help to make real and vital in our national life the principles for which we entered battle, and for which thousands of our boys have laid down their lives—a high and holy trust that these young lives which have been sacrificed on the altar of human progress shall not have been given in vain."

HIS SUCCESS STARTED WITH DUTCH NEWSPAPER

Where is a good place to start a Dutch newspaper?

Some people might answer this by saying: "In Holland," but when John A. Kuypers, well known as president of the Wisconsin Press Association, was a young man in the Netherlands, he decided that there were enough Dutch newspapers there already, and so became came to America to start one.

JOHN A. KUYPERS

He settled at De Pere, Wis., and that town has been proud of the fact for a long time past. It has twice elected him its mayor. Now he is completing his first term as postmaster. He is a Democrat and was elected presidential elector on the Democratic ticket in 1912.

For 26 years he has been editor-and manager of De Volksstem, a weekly paper in the Hollandish language, which he established in 1916. Sixteen years previously he had assumed the management of the Brown County Democrat, and he sold this paper in 1916 also.

Then he launched the Brown County Journal, merged it later with the De Pere News, the oldest weekly paper in the county, and now publishes it as the Brown County Journal-News.

He is married and has one son, Harold, who is going to be a newspaper man also. He is studying journalism at Marquette University, Milwaukee.

WILLIAM A. SMYTH DIES AT OWEGO HOME

Was Editor and Proprietor of Times—Long a Power in New York State Politics—Attended Many Republican National Conventions

Owego, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William A. Smyth, proprietor and editor of the Times, died yesterday in his home here. Mr. Smyth had been ill for nearly two years with a complication of diseases and on frequent occasions had gone to New York to consult specialists.

Mr. Smyth for more than a quarter of a century was the Republican leader of Tioga county, the home county of the late United States Senator Platt.

Mr. Smyth was not only a well-known Republican editor but for a number of years was president of the New York State Editorial Association. For nearly twenty years he also was postmaster at Owego.

He attended as a delegate the Republican National Conventions which nominated Blaine, Harrison, McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft, and he was a prominent delegate in the convention of 1912 which renominated Taft.

Mr. Smyth represented his district on the Republican State Committee for thirty years or more. In the differences which arose between Mr. Platt and Benjamin B. Odell Mr. Smyth stood stoutly and consistently by his old chief.

PIONEER NEWSPAPER MAN DEAD

Collin F. Macdonald, Veteran Minnesota Editor, Dies at St. Cloud Home

St. Cloud, Minn., Aug. 10.—Collin Francis Macdonald, editor and proprietor of the Daily Times died at his home here yesterday. Mr. MacDonald was 76 years old and had been state senator and mayor of St. Cloud. He was a Civil War veteran and a member of the Minnesota War Records Commission.

Mr. Macdonald was born at St. Andrews, N. S. He edited and published the St. Cloud Times 44 years and was also the founder of the Shakopee Argus, one of the oldest weeklies in the state.

OBITUARY

Col. W. J. Thompson is dead at Hot Springs, S. D. While a boy, before going West, he sold newspapers to assist in supporting the family while his father served in the Union Army in the Civil War. He had charge of the circulation of the Deadwood (S. D.) Daily Pioneer in the late 70's and was later a state senator and county judge. At the time of his death he was interested in the United States assay office at Deadwood.

Richard Sydney Turner, a cartoonist, died suddenly Sunday at Newburgh, aged 46. He had worked for the Poughkeepsie Evening Star and the Newburgh News, Union and American.

Martin Bruce, for many years engaged in newspaper work in Alaska, died recently in Seattle. His last newspaper work was at Juneau. Later he entered the government reindeer service in the Northland.

Mrs. Mary M. Bowman, a well-known California newspaper woman, died in Los Angeles recently. She was born in Mifflin, Pa., went to Iowa to become the first librarian at Creston. She began her newspaper work first as contributor then as editor of the Abilene (Kan.) Chronicle. In April, 1887, she moved to California and bought a half interest in the Santa Paula Chronicle, later being one of two women who were made charter members of the Southern California Editorial Association. For six years she was reported for the Los Angeles Herald, contributing many articles and poems to eastern periodicals at the same time.

Mrs. Sarah McCulloch, wife of A. W. McCulloch, business manager of the Gadsden (Ala.) Journal, died recently, aged 44 years.

William H. Hathaway, for nearly 50 years connected with R. Hoe & Co., New York, died a few days ago in Brooklyn, aged 78 years.

William H. Harrison, assistant editor of the Pathe News, a motion picture weekly, died in Newark, N. J., August 6, of appendicitis.

Mrs. Walter Howard, widow of Walter Howard who was a well-known Atlanta newspaper man, and herself at one time with the Atlanta Journal, died recently in Athens.

Dr. Edwin Munsell Bliss, who died in Washington, D. C., on August 6, aged 71, was a prolific writer on missionary matters and conditions in the Near East. He was the editor of several census reports on benevolent institutions. His editing of the Encyclopaedia of Missions gained him the degree of doctor of divinity from Amherst, his alma mater. From 1891 to 1901 he was an associate editor of the Independent, and during the two following years was an editorial writer for the New York Times.

Will N. Harben, author of many short stories and novels of life in the South, died August 7 in New York. Born in Dalton, Ga., on July 5, 1858, he moved to this city some years ago, but in his writings he remained faithful to the surroundings of his youth. Among his novels were "Pole Baker," "Ann Boyd," "The Desired Woman," "The Inner Law," and "Mana Linda." For a time he was an associate editor of Youth's Companion.

"Butch" Jones Is Dead

Philadelphia, August 12.—Samuel H. ("Butch") Jones, widely known in baseball circles and formerly of the Philadelphia American League Club, died today. He was 67 years old. Mr. Jones spent twenty-nine years in the service of press associations, retiring from the Philadelphia office of the Associated Press in 1906 to take an active interest in the Philadelphia Athletics.

Dirigible R-34 Takes Copies of It Back to England

Among the many envelopes which the dirigible R-34 carried to England on its return trip from the United States was one containing the first "Air Mail Newspaper" ever published. Using "copy" carried to this country by the dirigible selling of England's recent advances in the conquest of the air, the International News Service printed in New York City and mailed to 500 newspapers in the United States a miniature five-page newspaper.

While carrying to London copies of this newspaper, which the R-34 brought back, L. Malahar of the staff of the International News Service was injured. He is still in a hospital but will recover.

Cleveland O., Aug. 12.—Governor James M. Cox, owner of the Dayton News and Springfield News, is reclaiming his "ancestral home," near Middletown, O. The home, a farm, was owned by the governor's father for many years, but long ago passed into other hands. Some time ago the governor bought back the place.

"Teaser" Campaign Scores for Globe-Democrat

St. Louis Newspaper Spends $50,000 in Advertising Campaign for Sunday Artgravure Section

Get next—

These two words, set usually in three-column space, and appearing in all the St. Louis daily newspapers and for several hundred miles around in the daily and weekly press, was part of a "teaser" campaign, just concluded by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat to excite interest in its new artgravure section. The newspaper demonstrated its faith in newspaper advertising by spending $50,000 in this manner and believes that it got more than its money's worth.

"Get next? Get next to what?" were questions hundreds of thousands of persons in St. Louis and throughout the central Mississippi were asking themselves for several weeks. The mystery was solved when there appeared this announcement, referring to last Sunday:

"Get next Sunday's Glove-Democrat, with the beautiful new feature artgravure section. More pictures—better pictures."

The Globe-Democrat's Artgravure Picture Section will be a regular Sunday feature. The gravure process is the same as that used by the New York Herald, Tribune, and Sun, the Washington Star, and Baltimore Sun. The mechanical work is done by Alco-Gravure, Inc., of New York City.

John Schneider, an illustrator for the Butterick Publishing Company, died August 3, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Public Meetings Being Held in Oregon City to Acquaint Housewives with Truth in Advertising

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 13.—"Better Business Bureau" week is being observed here from August 11 to 16, under the direction of the Portland Ad Club. It is to a large extent a review of the work already accomplished by the Better Business Bureau of the Ad Club, as this organization has been very active here for several years and has, with the co-operation of the publishers, put the advertising in Portland newspapers on a high plane.

During the week meetings are to be held, particularly for women of the city. Because of the large part housewives have in the purchase of supplies for the home, a splendid opportunity will be given them to learn the value of truth in advertising and honesty in business practices of all kinds. Public meetings will be held at which prominent speakers will promote the cause of honest advertising and explain how fakers, fly-by-nighters and unscrupulous advertisers are dealt with. Meetings will also be held for the managers and employes of Portland stores.

The national vigilance committee has notified Charles W. English, manager of the Better Business Bureau, that it will assist in the campaign in recognition of the work that already has been accomplished in Portland.

BROOKLYN EAGLE TRAIL

Fifteen Miles of Road Will Connect National Park Highways

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, Mont., Aug. 8—The Brooklyn Daily Eagle National Parks Tourists are spending $1,103 on the reconstruction of a road in northwestern Montana that will be the last link in the international highway connecting the National Parks of the United States and Canada.

The $1,100 was raised at a moment's notice at a gathering in the Many-Glacier Hotel shortly after the arrival of the Eagle party there, and it will be used at once to convert a rough wagon trail from the Glacier Park highway to the Canadian boundary into a good motor road. It is a stretch of 15 miles and will be known as the Brooklyn Eagle Trail.

The Eagle tourists have officially opened the roads linking the Rocky Mountain, Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

This excursion is being run entirely by the Eagle in connection with Information Bureau.

Ohio Select List Directors

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 12.—In addition to officers recently elected during the annual convention of the Ohio Select List of Dailies in Cleveland, Fred Wallace of the Cooshocton Tribune, J. A. Chew of the Xenia Gazette, and W. D. Thompson of the Delaware Gazette were chosen directors.

Urges Timber Advertising

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 12.—The Pacific Northwest is the "timber capital" of the United States, and the people of the nation should be acquainted with this fact through a campaign of national advertising, declared C. P. Constantine, vice president of the Constantine & Tyler Advertising Agency, of Seattle and Portland, in an address to the West Coast Lumbermen's Association and the Western Pine Association held recently on Mount Rainier.

The associations are expected to take up the question of national advertising at a later meeting.

PAPER MAKER BUYS RAILROAD

Will Be Used to Haul Lime Products to Pulp Mills

ROCKLAND, Me., Aug. 11.—Garrett Schenck, president of the Great Northern Paper Company, who purchased a large block of bonds of the Georges Valley Railroad, a standard gauge road extending from Georges River station on the Main Central Railroad to Union, about 15 miles, has bought the railroad at a foreclosure sale for $59,750, the total amount of the outstanding bonds and unpaid coupons.

The road will be improved, including the construction of a bridge about 150 feet long.

Mr. Schenck and his associates, representing the St. Croix Paper Company, as well as the Great Northern Paper Company, are the principal owners of the Knox Lime Company's properties at Warren and Union. Possession of the railroad was obtained to improve it for transporting lime products to the pulp mills.

CHESTER TIMES GROWS

Owners Are Spending $50,000 Improving Home—Add Equipment

CHESTER, Pa., Aug. 13.—The Times' publishers have just let a contract for improvements and alterations amounting to $50,000 to their present building. It will be faced with stone on the City Hall side, and a new colonial front put in to correspond with the new civic center. The interior also will be remodeled. The Morning Republican's building, which joins the Times, will remain intact.

The Times has also purchased a new 32-page Hoe press, with all up-to-date devices and carrier system attached. A Hoe automatic plate finishing machine and stereotyping outfit also have been purchased.

Commercially Dixie is very much awake. Commercially Dixie is showing more speed, just now, than is any other part of the country. And from all indications, one is justified in pinning one's faith to Dixie as the land of big things for some time to come.

FAVORS INTERCHANGE OF NEWSPAPERMEN

Editor of Watertown Times Points Out Advantages of Blumenfeld Plan—Says Leading Inland Papers Should Co-operate

In a leading editorial the Watertown (N. Y.) Times discusses the suggestion for an interchange of staff men between British and American newspapers and points out the differences between New York and "inland" papers.

"Benefit would unquestionably come through an interchange of staff members by British and American newspapers. Ralph D. Blumenfeld, editor of the London Daily Express, recently made the suggestion in an article in the Editor & Publisher of New York. The plan would be to send one or more newspaper men from the staffs of the New York Times, The Philadelphia Public Ledger, The Chicago News, or any other papers of this country to fill places on the London Times, the Manchester Guardian, the London Daily Express or other paper made vacant by the same number papers coming to the American newspapers.

"The purpose would be to educate the newspaper men of one country in the ways of the other and the methods of newspaper work, not alone to improve the newspapers, but to promote a better understanding between the two peoples. An exchange professorship system has been adopted to promote the same purposes in regard to bringing the peoples nearer together. Cecil Rhodes had this in mind when he established the Rhodes scholarships, selected for young men of youth. The exchange of newspaper men would work to a better purpose, however, to the very extent that the newspapers would bring the results nearer the people.

Papers of Broad Appeal

"The plan should work great good, but it must not be confined to the cities of the Atlantic seaboard. American journalism is in the towns interior as it proceeds west. The newspapers of the west are less provincial than those of New York. The Manhattan press is produced for the Manhattanese and for no one else. The New York publisher finds a population sufficiently large to support his paper with a profit, so he produces a paper almost entirely for that population.

"The newspaper editor in the cities as we advance west must have a paper that appeals to a broader territory in that has com mmunity is not sufficiently large usually to give him the support he would wish. In Greater New York the Brooklyn Eagle is perhaps the single exception to the rule. The Eagle to many persons is the most interesting of the metropolitan papers for the reason that its publishers aim to make its appeal one of breadth, to cover a territory beyond the limits of the city in which it is printed. The Kansas City Star and Times is a paper for the entire Missouri river valley; the Portland Oregonian covers the entire Columbia and Willamette river valleys and in fact the entire northwest.

"In the exchange the paper in the Utland must not be lost sight of. Just as the journals of Manchester and Liverpool are broader than the papers of London and more reflective of the opinion of the country so the journals of the cities beyond New York are usually more directly reflective of the central portion of America. That is the thing we aim to get to England and it is the average thought of England that we would bring to America through the proposed exchange."

BLUMENFELD PLAN WILL IMPROVE SERVICE

James A. Wood
Editor Seattle Post-Intelligencer

American journalism would be bidden toward school if it failed to discern and appreciate the possibilities of good in Mr. Blumenfeld's plan for the exchange of staff members with the newspapers of Britain.

The technical and professional advantages alone are sufficient to commend the plan to every thoughtful American newspaper publisher, but beyond these, and far more important, are the opportunities to qualify both British and American publicists for more enlightened and more valuable national and international service.

Shortly after the armistice was signed the Post-Intelligencer remarked editorially that whatever might be the terms of final settlement with the enemy, and among the Allies, the peace of the world and its future progress would depend chiefly upon the better understanding and closer co-operation of the English speaking peoples. Mr. Blumenfeld's plan is in direct line with this belief.

MIDDLETOWN JOURNAL BUILDS

Will Occupy Modern Two-Story Building Early Next Year

The Middletown (O.) Journal will erect a new building, two stories in height, to be used exclusively for its own departments. It will be constructed of tapestry brick with Bedford stone trimmings. The mechanical departments will be equipped with new and modern machinery.

Construction work will start within a month and it is expected that the building will be completed within six months.

Will Issue Air Paper

New Brunswick, Maine, Aug. 12—The Standard is to publish "Fly Paper," official newspaper of the Chatham air station. Howard E. Gamble, Knights of Columbus secretary at the station and editor, has made arrangements to bring the composition to New Bedford each week by seaplane.

Democratic weekly of a far West county seat paid owner $3,675.80 in year ending April 30, 1919, for his personal effort and income on the investment. Can be bought for $8,500; $5,500 cash necessary.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHARLES A. DANA, "WHO CREATED JOURNALISM IN AMERICA"

AUGUST is the birth month and the year 1919 is the hundredth birthday anniversary of Charles A. Dana, for many years editor of The New York Sun, and the man who is credited with having "created the profession of journalism in America."

Mr. Dana was born in the town of Hinsdale, N. H., August 8, 1819. When twenty-five years old, he was in editorial charge of "The Chronotype," published at Boston by Elizur Wright. Three years later, he came to New York City and went to work as a reporter on The Tribune at $10 a week. He became city editor and later spent eight months in Europe as a correspondent. Within the next two years Horace Greeley made him managing editor.

During the time he was on The Tribune, he found time to compile the American Cyclopedia. During the Civil war, he was made Third Assistant Secretary of War under Edwin M. Stanton. He went to the front and kept Lincoln and Stanton posted as to the character of the men who were conducting operations and the meaning of events there. Lincoln once referred to him as "the eyes of the government at the front."

In 1865, Dana went to Chicago to take charge of "The Republican," a new paper established and supported by a ring of Illinois politicians and financiers. It did not succeed and after a year Dana returned to New York.

The Sun was purchased from Moses Y. Beach in 1867 by a group of men of which Dana, William M. Evarts, Marshall O. Roberts, and Fred Conklin were the principal members. It soon became a success. Every page was a mental picture of its editor. "The Sun was Mr. Dana and Mr. Dana was The Sun."

By Baron C. De Grimm, one of the most famous newspaper artists of his day.

He was in complete control of the paper until his death in 1897.

MUST WATCH OIL ADS

Kansas Papers Held Responsible Under Blue Sky Laws

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 13.—Kansas newspapers handling oil advertising must take care that the companies placing advertisements with them are authorized to do business by the State "blue sky" board. This is the advice of Attorney General Hopkins to a number of newspaper advertising men and solicitors, who asked for an interpretation.

In case of doubt, the newspaper men were told to consult lawyers as to whether the ad was legal. Recently a number of complaints about unauthorized ads were made to the board, principally from the Wichita and Newton districts. A list of companies authorized to do business is furnished newspapers on request. The law is designed to protect the people from "fake" stock schemes.

TOKIO NEWSPAPERS SUSPEND

Strikes in Japan Spread But There Have Been No Disorders

TOKIO, Aug. 13.—Virtually all the newspapers of Tokio have suspended publication, owing to the demands of the printers for higher wages, which the owners refuse to grant.

Numerous strikes are in progress elsewhere in Japan, some of the governmental establishments being affected. There have been no disorders.

Won't Pay Insurance on Writer Killed at Work

Contest in Court Will Decide Whether Reporter Died in Automobile Accident "In Line of Duty"

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Newspapermen here are awaiting with interest the disposition of the claim for compensation brought by relatives of James A. Moore, a reporter for the Watertown Times, who was killed while covering an automobile accident recently.

The case involved the question whether Moore's death occurred in "line of duty," and chief interest attaches to it for a determination as to what compensation a newspaper reporter's survivors are entitled to when the newspaperman dies while engaged in one of the hazardous angles of his work.

Harold H. Johnson, editor of the Watertown Times, at a recent session of the claim, testified to Moore's being assigned to an automobile accident, in covering which he, himself, was killed when his automobile went over an embankment. The Aetna Insurance Company, in which the Brockway Company, publishers of the Times, was insured, objected to an award on the contention that the injuries did not arise out of his employment.

Moore left a dependent mother and wife.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

As to Zone Rates

Editor & Publisher:

I want to avail ourselves of this opportunity to make a vigorous protest against the Editorial statement in a recent issue of your paper, to the effect that daily newspaper publishers are very much opposed to the present Zone System of rates.

The fact is that your statement is a misstatement. What you say is not true. Now I am in position to show you dual scores and hundreds of daily publishers in the United States are very emphatically in favor of the Zone System of second class rates.

This being the fact, why do you, publishing a trade paper, make such mis statements?

W. B. DONALD, Mgr.

[Editor's Note: The principle of the zone system, as embodied in the McKellar Amendment, has been approved by a majority of publishers—but only as a policy to meet war time emergencies or a demonstrated necessity for an advance in second-class rates. That necessity could only be shown through a thorough investigation of costs as applying to newspaper mail. The publishers have asked for such an investigation, without conceding in advance that there exists any real necessity for an increase of rates. The present zone rate law, of course, applies only to the advertising carried by publications. It involves no much overhead expense both for the postal establishment and the publishers in its operation that this association contemplates its revenue raise to the Government. It is true, as Mr. Donald says, that there are publishers of smaller dailies who approve even this distortion of the zone rate principle, but these publishers are a minority, and appear to base their support to a repeal of the law on the basis that it operates to keep metropolitan newspapers out of their field.]

OHIO FIRST

From Cleveland on the North to Cincinnati on the South; from Youngstown on the East to Union City on the West, Ohio is about as near an ideal market territory as can be found anywhere.

Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo, Dayton, Youngstown, Akron, Springfield, Zanesville and Lima, all cities ranging from 30,000 to 700,000, furnish metropolitan markets aggregating approximately 2,000,000 people.

Seventy-two other cities of over 5,000 population bring the urban population up to 2,842,500, or about fifty-five per cent of the entire population of the state, 5,150,400.

Incidentally Ohio is the fourth state in population in the Union.

To reach these people there are 27,258 Tobacco Dealers; 25,918 Grocers and Delicatessen Dealers; 2,863 Garages and Repair Shops; 2,800 Retail Shoe Stores; 5,511 General Stores; 2,669 Hardware Stores; 2,200 Druggists; 1,742 Dry Goods Stores; 284 Sporting Goods Stores and 250 Department Stores.

This assortment practically solves the problem of distribution. There is no trouble finding places to sell any product, and the prosperity of these stores proves their ability to sell.

Ohio's agricultural production is a tremendous thing. The annual output of "home grown" merchandise, stuff that sells for good money, makes Ohio rich, and the manufacturing interests of Ohio produce goods that sell all over the world.

Ohio furnishes all kinds of people to buy all kinds of merchandise, and Ohio daily newspapers, reaching these people, cooperate with local merchants in selling goods.

Manufacturers can get splendid results from cooperation in Ohio.

Let these daily newspapers help you popularize your goods. They CAN do it, and they WILL do it if you will give them a chance.

Newspaper Advertising Is Cheapest and Best

An advertiser can use daily newspapers with 3,224,629 circulation covering the ten great business centres of the country

NEW YORK	ST. LOUIS
CHICAGO	CLEVELAND
PHILADELPHIA	PITTSBURGH
BOSTON	CINCINNATI
DETROIT	BALTIMORE

For $4.15 per agate line on a 5,000-line contract

(One-eighth of a cent per line per thousand circulation.)

In order to cover the same territory by the use of magazines the advertiser must pay at least 3 times as much per line per thousand, and besides he must pay for at least half as much more circulation which is of no direct benefit to him.

A QUESTIONNAIRE

to readers of The Chicago Tribune residing outside of Chicago bears powerful evidence to the radiating influence of this great metropolitan newspaper.

One question, for instance, read: "Check any of the following kinds of advertising that you are accustomed to read in The Tribune?"

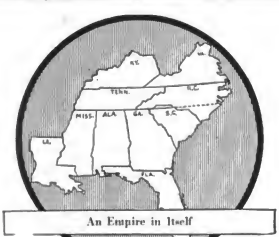
45%	were	accustomed	to	read	clothing ads
40%	"	"	"	"	financial "
34%	"	"	"	"	book "
33%	"	"	"	"	auto "
32%	"	"	"	"	grocery "



Of all those who answered the questionnaire, 46% stated that their local grocery carried Tribune advertised products, and 42% stated their local drug store had the same policy. Forty-four per cent expressed themselves as interested in farm advertising.

A full tabulation of all replies to this questionnaire is contained in The Chicago Tribune's 1919 BOOK OF FACTS on Markets and Merchandising, which will be mailed to any publisher or selling organization if requested on business stationery.

The South as a Market Unit

Ten states: 469,285 square miles, 18,213,401 people. 153 cities over 5,000; 65 cities over 10,000; 56 cities over 15,000; 34 cities over 25,000; 16 cities over 50,000; 7 cities over 100,000; 532 department stores; 6,017 shoe stores; 7,736 drug stores; 5,655 hardware stores; 27,616 grocery stores; 54,839 general stores.

Figures show that daily newspapers reach the people of the South in greater numbers at smaller cost than they may be reached in any other way.

The daily newspapers listed here co-operate with local merchants in selling goods.

Manufacturers co-operating with local dealers through local dailies secure splendid results.

This territory is well worth your attention.

The prime essential of your advertising in Philadelphia is to get the people to ask for and buy your goods

"Dealer co-operation," "Trade Helps," "Personal Service" and all the other fancy schemes fall by the wayside in getting DISTRIBUTION if you do not properly and dominantly get before the public.

Retailers and wholesalers do not stock your goods because they like your pretty label or are impressed with your name or your trademark.

What they want is volume of business, and they are bound to give the widest distribution to the article for which there is the most demand.

Big demand can only be obtained by constantly and strongly advertising the merits of your commodity.

656 NEWSPAPERS IN PROPOSED $90,000 CAMPAIGN THIS FALL IN SMALL TOWNS FOR ARMY RECRUITS

Insertion of 5,000 Lines in All English-Language Dailies Where Recruiting Sub-Stations Are Located Is Recommended to Secretary of War Baker to Round Out Results Obtained Previously in Larger Cities

By Robert T. Barry.

(Washington Correspondent)

Washington, August 20.

RECOMMENDATIONS by Col. J. T. Conrad, chief of the Publicity Bureau of the Army Recruiting Service, for a newspaper advertising campaign in 449 cities, none of which was included in the 56 cities where newspapers carried army advertising in June, will be presented to Secretary of War Baker by the Adjutant General's office within a few days.

The recommendation calls for an insertion of 5,000 lines in each of the daily newspapers in each of the recruiting sub-station cities, and would cover about 656 daily papers. The estimated cost of the advertising is $90,821.42 gross, or with discounts for cash amounting to $1,602.18, $89,219.24 net.

List of Papers Already Prepared

It is proposed that this advertising campaign shall be undertaken early in the fall, and a list of papers already has been prepared. The recommendation is based on the conviction of the recruiting service chiefs that the $174,000 invested in the June campaign achieved such excellent results as to make newspaper advertising an essential feature of Army recruiting efforts. It reads, in part:

"It is recommended that newspaper advertising be used in every sub-station city throughout the United States. A two-weeks' intensive drive, similar to the one just completed in the large cities, should be inaugurated city by city, using personnel from the main stations to supplement the efforts of the local party.

"This campaign would round out and complete the results so far obtained. The newspapers that have been used have covered the 56 main recruiting station cities thoroughly and well. These newspapers are, with few exceptions, entirely local in their influence, and it is fair to assume that the principal benefits from the campaign have been gotten mostly in these 56 cities, although supplementary work has been done so far as possible in sub-station towns.

Few Complaints of Discrimination

"The newspaper publishers who received the advertising have, of course, been pleased and have more than made good in the matter of co-operation. The newspapers in the United States that have not been favored with the advertising have been, in the main, content with the ruling of the publicity bureau, that the initial effort must be confined to selected cities, and in only a few cases are we aware that any complaints have arisen that the small towns were discriminated against, and the reasons, when stated, have met these objections adequately.

"The smaller newspapers of the country, doubtless, were disappointed that they were not included in the first advertising campaign. They have been reasonable in the matter, however, in the vast majority of cases, but if they now learn that they are themselves to have a share of this War Department advertising they will redouble their efforts to prove that the small town papers are alive and alert.

"They will redouble their efforts to prove by results that the small towns can produce a big quota of recruits. Their incentive is plain. It would be a matter of patriotism and pride with them to outstrip their larger neighbors.

"It should be borne in mind, that in the sub-station cities and towns there are several hundred newspapers all of local influence and all ready and eager to provide the same sort of co-operation in their localities that have been furnished in the cities already covered.

"Furthermore, there is no doubt that in the small cities the local newspaper does very fairly cover its field, reaching and influencing a larger proportion of the inhabitants than is true in some of the metropolitan centers. In New York City, for instance, with its more than four million people, and in spite of the thoroughness of the advertising, there can be no doubt that there was some waste circulation, which, of course, would be due largely to the cosmopolitan character of this city. It is our belief, therefore, that in proportion to each dollar of expenditure in the sub-station towns, a larger number of people would actually be reached and influenced than in the big cities.

"All newspapers of general news character published in English in the sub-station cities have been listed and the cost of a campaign in these newspapers estimated. There are 449 of these cities where daily newspapers are published (this figure of 449 is subject to change as new stations are opened). The total number of daily newspapers on the list is 656. Of the total number of sub-station towns there are 46 towns where no daily newspapers are published. So it is possible that such towns no advertising would be done.

English Language Papers Only

"It is recommended that in a general way the same procedure for securing co-operation be followed as that followed for the initial effort of June. All the recruiting offices will have had the advantage of their experience in the previous drive. They will have learned what stumbling blocks to overcome and how to overcome them.

"They are familiar with the method of handling newspapers and securing from them the utmost degree of assistance. They know how to approach merchants and get window displays. They have on hand doubtless a considerable volume of window display material collected or prepared for the initial drive.

"The big city papers in the 56 main recruiting station locations are of a more metropolitan character. They reach urban populations; the small-town papers more generally go out into the rural districts, reaching the young men on the farms. Therefore, from this secondary campaign we should look for a considerable increase in the number of recruits from the back country. People of small towns are more accustomed to seeing their names in the local newspapers. There would, therefore, be an intimateness in the small town campaign that was, of necessity, lacking in the metropolitan effort."

Again Ask Free Publicity

As in the June advertising campaign for the army, free publicity will be sought from newspapers carrying advertising, but an effort will be made—doubtless because of criticism of this feature of the previous campaign—to improve on the "news value" of all matter submitted for publication gratis. The recommendation of the Army's Publicity Bureau on this subject is:

"Maintenance of cordial relations with newspaper editors and reporters is

NEW YORK HERALD'S CORRESPONDENT DENIES HE AIDED REVOLUTIONISTS IN EGYPT

DENIAL of an official report of the State Department to a Senate committee that detention of himself and son in Cairo, Egypt, for nearly a month was because he was active in the Egyptian nationalist movement, is made by Dr. W. T. Ellis, foreign correspondent of the New York Herald, who has just returned to this country.

"I commonplace, industrious activity, such as exercised every day by thousands of American reporters, in trying to see for myself the conflicts and demonstrations in Cairo, may be called 'conspicuous activity in nationalist movements, I suppose I must plead guilty," he said.

"Had I followed the example of the American military attaché, and stayed snugly in Shepherd's Hotel, drinking with British officers and cursing the Egyptian principles when the city was in a ferment of excitement and deadly disorder, I certainly would have been safer from flying bullets, but the American people would not have had the eye-witness account of events which have affected the history of the entire Near East, if not of the British Empire.

"The nature of the charges against me show how complaisant our officials are to even the most absurd schemes of those British authorities whose blunders are entirely responsible for the Egyptian insurrection and its consequences."

CONGRESS WILL PASS ON $2,000,000 WAR RISK BUREAU CAMPAIGN

Publicity Director Declares It Is Absolutely Necessary to Use Newspaper Advertising to Find Thousands of Policy Holders—Plans of Navy and Shipping Board.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE)

WASHINGTON, August 24.—Congress which has talked much but done little with respect to official advertising is to have an opportunity soon of showing just how it stands. While it is true that funds have been invested in advertising by executive departments, it is not recalled that Congress ever has said that a certain amount of money should be so expended.

The issue will be raised by the request of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for an appropriation of $2,000,000 for advertising in connection with its efforts to locate thousands of soldiers, sailors and marines whose failure to give proper addresses are held to be important in the present troubles of the bureau.

May Develop Definite Policy

The House Committee on Appropriations is expected to act this week on the request of the Bureau and then to throw the matter into the House for debate. Should favorable action follow, the first step will have been taken toward recognition by Congress of government advertising and should lead to something like a definite policy for the future.

While the War Risk Bureau is awaiting decision of Congress on its proposed campaign, other branches of the Federal government continue to outline plans for advertising.

Besides the War Department's proposed second recruiting campaign, in which copy would be sent to newspapers in 449 cities, the Director of Sales of the War Department, is preparing to open a campaign for the sale of the smokeless powder plant, near Charleston, W. Va., and is obtaining bids on full-page and half-page advertisements in leading daily papers. It is proposed to run either a half-page or full-page at least three times in each of the papers selected.

Navy Department's Plans

The Recruiting Service of the Navy Department is getting its program under way and a definite outline of what it proposed doing is expected within a few days.

The Shipping Board is undertaking to dispose of many thousand tons of shipping through advertising in the principal daily papers which feature ship news, and will advertise in trade journals and daily papers in the effort to sell close to $75,000,000 worth of surplus supplies.

R. W. Emerson, publicity director of the War Risk Bureau, informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER today that he could be unable to outline the scope and details of the Bureau's newspaper advertising campaign until he had information as to the amount of money Congress will appropriate. He declared that the Bureau feels it is absolutely necessary to use the advertising columns of the daily newspapers in order to find thousands of policyholders who cannot otherwise be located.

Would End Criticism

The Bureau has been under attack for many months and the most severe criticism has been directed against its officers for failure to issue policies to men who applied for them. It is contended that much of the trouble is due to the fact that soldiers did not give correct addresses, names or other information which would enable the Bureau to handle the work. It is proposed to reach these men through advertisements which will carry simple questionnaires for the men to fill out and mail to the Bureau.

PARKE TO HEAD PARIS BUREAU OF INTERNATIONAL

The International News Service has sent Newton C. Parke to Paris to take charge of the press association's Paris bureau. Mr. Parke sailed on Saturday.

Robert J. Prew, who has had charge of the Paris bureau since Mr. Parke's return to this country, a little more than six months ago, will shortly come to the United States and spend a year in the American service of the I. N. S. before returning to Europe. Mr. Prew's newspaper experience has all been gathered abroad and he is to study American methods.

NEWTON C. PARKE.

Mr. Parke is a native of Ohio and is 30 years old. He worked at various times in Columbus, Dayton and Indianapolis and for a time "covered" politics for the St. Paul Pioneer-Press. For five years he was connected with the United Press in Chicago and later was cable editor for that press association in New York.

He has been connected with the I. N. S. for three years, and before going to Europe originally for the International he was manager of the day and night bureaus in Chicago. Mr. Parke was with the American Expeditionary Force in France continuously from the beginning to the end of America's part in the war and showed himself an able and clever writer and news gatherer. He covered the opening phases of the peace conference in Paris, but returned to the United States early in the winter.

Since his return to this country Mr. Parke has been assistant day editor at the New York office of the International.

Labor Crisis Most Grave Carl Ackerman Finds

Former War Correspondent Is Now Conducting a Nation-Wide Investigation for Philadelphia Public Ledger

CLEVELAND, O., August 20.—Carl W. Ackerman, until recently war correspondent in Europe for the New York Times and the Cleveland Plain Dealer, now on a nation-wide mission to discuss with manufacturers and others the possible solution of existing labor disputes, spent a day last week in this city. The results of his mission will be written for the Philadelphia Public Ledger. He visited several big industrial plants while in Cleveland.

"The problems in which America is interested in Europe are far less important than our industrial relations at home," Mr. Ackerman told the correspondent of the EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"Some satisfactory solution for industrial and economic unrest must be found and found very soon. The seriousness of the labor situation lies not so much in strikes themselves as in the fact that every time a manufacturer pays his workmen more, he passes the increase on to the consumer, and prices are going up and up. This makes his worker ask for more money, and so on without end.

"If unrestrained, the movement of prices and wages upward ultimately will break the public."

Mr. Ackerman says there is "little to be feared from radical groups," such as the I. W. W.

News Print Mill for Brockville

BROCKVILLE, ONT., Aug. 19.—Plans are underway here for the erection of a newsprint paper mill by the Brockville Paper Manufacturing Company, which has increased its capitalization from $150,000 to $250,000. The mill will be three stories high, 185 feet long and 65 feet wide, and will employ 150 men and women. No figures have been made public as to the probable output of the plant.

EXCLUSION OF RIVAL PAPERS FORBIDDEN

Federal Trade Commission Rules That Neither Newspapers Nor Magazines May Monopolize Services of Dealers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—The Federal Trade Commission has established an important precedent by ruling in the case of the Curtis Publishing Company that publishers of newspapers, as well as of magazines, may not maintain contracts with wholesale news dealers which provide that such dealers shall not, without written consent of the publishers, handle the publications of competing companies.

Although the original complaint against the Curtis Publishing Company for alleged unfair methods of competition in enforcing the "exclusive clause" contract with news dealers covered only the magazine circulation, the Commission in issuing its restraining order included newspaper distribution.

The Commission set this precedent by linking the Philadelphia Public Ledger with the periodicals of the Curtis company—the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal and the Country Gentleman.

This course was followed on the ground that the Public Ledger was published by the Curtis company. The facts are that while Cyrus H. K. Curtis is president of the Public Ledger Company, this organization is distinct from the Curtis Publishing Company.

The order of the Commission follows:

Text of the Order

IT IS ORDERED that the respondent, Curtis Publishing Company, and its officers, agents, agents and employees, cease and desist, while engaged in commerce in connection with the several states and territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, from entering into any contracts, agreements or understandings with purchasers of its publications hereinafter engaged in the sale or distribution of the magazines or newspapers, or both, of other publishers, which provide that such purchasers of its publications shall not act as agents for, or sell, or supply to others at wholesale rates for resale, publications other than of respondent without the written consent of respondent; and from entering into any contracts, agreements or understandings with persons hereinafter engaged in distributing at retail the sale or distribution of the magazines or newspapers, or both, of other publishers, which provide that such persons, partnerships or corporations shall not handle or sell publications of and shall not continue to sell or distribute the magazines or newspapers, or both, of other publishers; and from enforcing any provision which may be contained in any of respondent's present outstanding contracts with persons, partnerships or corporations hereinafter engaged in the sale or distribution of magazines or newspapers, or both, of other publishers which provide that such persons, partnerships or corporations shall not sell publications of other magazines or newspapers, or both, of other publishers, or shall not sell publications of competing magazines or newspapers, or both, of other publishers without the written consent of respondent.

Complaint Against Oklahoman

In another publishing company case involving a newspaper, the Trade Commission has entered a complaint against the Oklahoma Publishing Company, of New York, and the Oklahoma Publishing Company, publishers of the Daily Oklahoman, of Oklahoma City, alleging unfair methods of competition.

The complaint alleges the Pictorial Review Company, for the purpose of "hampering and embarrassing a competing publishing company," and obtaining "an unfair and undue advantage" in the sale of the Pictorial Review as against a similar periodical, induced the Oklahoma Publishing Company to have compiled, through the "service department" of the Daily Oklahoman, a list of news dealers throughout Oklahoma handling the competitor magazine, together with the number of copies of each issue sold by each dealer.

This information, the complaint sets forth, was obtained without disclosing to the dealers its purpose.

Will Advertise Texas Resorts

Plans have been made by the Commercial Association of Galveston for a campaign to raise $52,000 to advertise the winter resorts of Texas, beginning September 15. San Antonio, Corpus Christi, Marlin and Mineral Wells business men will help raise the money.

GENERAL CHARLES H. TAYLOR COMPLETES HIS 46TH YEAR AS EDITOR OF BOSTON GLOBE

Dean of New England Journalism, Who Has Played a Conspicuous Part in the Development of the Modern Newspaper, Still Actively Engaged in Editorial Work at the Age of 73—Proud of His Newspaper's Record of Unselfish Public Service.

GENERAL CHARLES H. TAYLOR has completed his forty-sixth year as editor-in-chief of the Boston Globe, and the event—interesting and gratifying to every newspaperman in the country—was commemorated on Monday, August 17. On that date newspapers throughout the country carried dispatches noting the fact, and the Globe on Sunday, last, carried a brilliant special article by James Morgan, long an editorial associate of General Taylor, in which was outlined the brilliant service to journalism embodied in the career of the distinguished editor.

Two years ago General Taylor contributed to the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER a notable story of his life, in which he recounted in a modest way his early struggles, ideals and eventual victories over great odds. That brief autobiography was a classic and was widely read. It has served as inspirational matter for students of journalism as well as for the younger men of the profession.

The Globe came under the control of Charles H. Taylor in August, 1873, and he has directed its policies and dominated its course at all times during the 46 years intervening. The paper was started in March, 1872, but never really "came into being" until Mr. Taylor acquired it. Under his direction it has attained and steadily held a place of leadership among American newspapers, and in New England this leadership is cheerfully conceded even by its strongest rivals.

Has Subordinated His Own Personality

General Taylor has always been a believer in impersonal journalism—so far as he himself was concerned. In the long course of his control of the Globe it is said that his name has been signed to but three or four articles. He has not imposed this limitation upon his associates, however. Rather, he has always generously encouraged them to sign their names to special articles—and to use full-face type.

Now that the days of vicissitudes are merely a memory, General Taylor often recounts his experiences in the first years of his control of the Globe, when he was often hard pressed to meet the weekly payrolls and white paper bills. Having no capital of his own, he had to finance what had been from the beginning a losing venture solely on his personal credit. The load of obligations was often very difficult to carry, and friends advised him to go through the processes of bankruptcy in order to relieve himself of the strain and to gain a fresh start. "If I went back on the friends who have helped me," said the young publisher, "there wouldn't be an alley in Boston dark enough for me to skulk through."

Charles H. Taylor didn't go back on his friends. He fought on until a losing business was transformed into a winning one. He made good every obligation he had assumed—including that biggest and most important one of all: to make the Globe the unbiased, unbought, uninfluenced champion of the rights and interests of its readers and the people of Boston and of New England.

When the Globe was young it was, like practically all newspapers of that day, edited from one angle. It was a man's newspaper. General Taylor was, perhaps, the pioneer in the movement to broaden the appeal of newspapers through devoting special attention to the interests and concerns of women and children. The Globe was, as a result of this policy, one of the first "home newspapers" of the country. And it has always remained a publication for the whole family.

One of General Taylor's policies is to keep the organization—the family—spirit strong with the Globe folks. He "raises" his own staff members and keeps them, advancing them as occasion arises. A publisher once called upon him to ask if he could recommend a capable man to take the place of a man who had resigned from an important position on his paper. General Taylor told him that he did know of just the man for the place, and he named the man on the visiting publisher's own staff who should logically succeed to the post. It was a new idea to the publisher. He had not thought of looking for the right man so near home.

It is related that an office boy once took it upon himself to get out an extra edition of the Globe before any of the editors had arrived on the scene. The job was well done, the propriety of the daring venture was obvious—and that office boy was suitably rewarded.

His Editorial Ideals

General Taylor does not claim to have "ideals" that are so "high" that they cannot be practiced. He has always followed, and enforced, among his associates, common-sense, humane, unselfish, golden-rule policies. Here are some of his instructions to his editors and news writers:

"Never say that a man refused to be interviewed, as if he were an evasive criminal in the dock; a man has a right to refuse. Never needlessly drag in the family of a man who has gone wrong; they are suffering enough through no fault of their own. When a man gets married, or dies, do not go into the 'graveyard' and dig up unpleasant things in his past if he has lately been living a decent life. Whenever you make a cartoon of a public man, draw a caricature of him that even his wife can laugh at.

During General Taylor's 46 years at the head of the Globe he has witnessed a change in the ownership of all other Boston papers except the Transcript. As a young editor he was the contemporary of William Cullen Bryant, Charles A. Dana, Whitelaw Reid, Joseph Pulitzer, George W. Childs, Wilbur F. Storey, Joseph Medill, Murat Halstead, Samuel Bowles and Henry Watterson—the latter and General Taylor being the only survivors of the brilliant group.

General Charles H. Taylor

Made the Globe a Family Newspaper

General Taylor has always been a man of ideas. He has never carried his liking for the new and original to freakish extremes, but has had the courage to break away from outworn traditions. At the time of Garfield's death he devoted the entire first page of the Globe to a collection of poems, written by the foremost poets of that time in commemoration of the martyr President. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes contributed one of these, and was astounded to receive General Taylor's check for $600 in payment.

"One Language, One Flag" Is Slogan at Minnesota Outing

WINNEBAGO, Minn., Aug. 15.—Members of the Second Congressional (Minn.) Editorial Association at their annual outing here passed unanimously a resolution in favor of "one country, one language, one flag."

"Since the United States has aroused the highest type of loyalty and patriotism, all persons found guilty of disloyalty and sedition and conscientious objectors should be disfranchised and deprived of American citizenship," the editors voted.

CANADIAN MAY MEET SOON

Press Officials Are Making a Tour Through the West

MONTREAL, Aug. 20.—W. J. Taylor, president of the Canadian Press Association, and John Imrie, manager of the Association, passed through here this week on their way to the Maritime Provinces, where they will consult with the Provincial Association and generally get in touch with the newspaper men there.

It is expected that the annual meeting of the Canadian Press Association, postponed since June because of labor troubles in the west, will be held in Toronto about the middle of October.

Mrs. Mayes Again Honored

Mrs. Lois K. Mayes, owner of the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, who recently was elected a member of the executive committee of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, has also been elected executive secretary of the Florida State Newspaper Association. She placed Pensacola in nomination as the State convention city for 1920 and won out over Tampa and Jacksonville.

URGES THAT PUBLISHERS OPPOSE LICENSE BILLS IN CONGRESS

Paul E. Faust Declares Extension to the Press of the Principle of Government Control Proposed in Kenyon and Kendrick Measures Would Be "Perfect Muzzle."

By Paul E. Faust.
Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago.

"THE first step towards licensing all business" epitomizes the legislation now pending in Congress, typified by the Kenyon and Kendrick bills.

Business, publishing, and advertising men are supremely concerned in this legislation which purposes not only to fundamentally rebuild our present national food processes in this critical period of reconstruction but also to introduce a confessedly new principle into our national business economy and thereby establish a precedent which bids fair to become increasingly dangerous.

"A Commandeering of Capital"

The Kenyon bill, which proposes to apply the new control-by-license principle to the meat industry, would establish a Commissioner of Foodstuffs under the Department of Agriculture, who shall have authority to issue necessary licenses to all the larger dealers in meats and dairy products, to compel the obedience of licensees to such regulations "as the Secretary of Agriculture shall from time to time prescribe," to revoke licenses or appoint receivers, according to his judgment of the proper business conduct of licensees—subject only to review by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Food Commissioner may also dictate the kinds of business any licensee may engage in, may deprive him of branch houses, railroad terminals, or private cars and decide his proper margin of profit.

In essence, the "license plan" as outlined in the proposed bill, means "government operation—private ownership"; a "heads I win—tails you lose" proposition for the government; a commandeering of private capital, organization and equipment for governmental control and use, leaving to private ownership only the financial risk and whatever margin of profits happens to be left.

It is a perpetuation of the most stringent measures for war-time control of industry, minus the financial guarantee.

Indefinite Powers

In addition, the powers of the governmental agent, a political appointee called the Commissioner of Foodstuffs, are not defined but made purposely indefinite and elastic. Mr. Colver, the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission which is fathering this type of legislation, clearly expressed the issue before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. To quote:

Mr. Rayburn: "I think that is a very unsafe governmental policy to put some power in a man's hands—and say: 'You are never going to use it.'"

Mr. Colver: "There is no end to be gained by running away from a squaretoed admission that this is the theory of the bill. There is no quibble about that. It is."

That the license plan has already found deep root in Washington is clearly evidenced by President Wilson's message to Congress on August 8. To quote:

"Let me urge, in the first place, that the present food control act should be extended both as to the period of time during which it shall remain in operation and as to the commodities to which it shall apply. It should judge that it was clearly within the constitutional power of the congress to make similar permanent provisions and regulations with regard to all goods destined for interstate commerce. We should formulate a law requiring a federal license of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce."

What would be the effect on American business, if the license principle were applied to all persons and corporations doing an interstate or foreign business?

Clarifying the Issue

Senator Moses of New Hampshire has vivified and clarified this license issue—as entirely separate from the case of the packers—by his proposed amendment to the Kenyon Bill, which calls for a licensing of all interstate business. The identical powers proposed for the Department of Agriculture and the Commissioner of Foodstuffs by Senator Kenyon are to be delegated.

Can we imagine a Commissioner of Industry with authority to deprive the Texas Company of their tank cars, the Ford Motor Company of its branch houses, the U. S. Steel Company of its ore docks; to forbid Reid Murdoch & Co. to sell woodenware or Butler Brothers to sell soap? Senator Moses does not seem to have exceeded the provisions of the Kenyon bill by so much as a hair, but the net result of his amendment seems to be "reductio ad absurdum" perhaps intentional.

Though accurate prophecy concerning the details of such radical changes as would result from the proposed licensing of industry is impossible, the nucleus of those changes appears almost indisputable—and highly injurious to business. Indeed, it can hardly be imagined how such a plan in general application could be tolerated for any appreciable period.

The license principle strikes a direct blow at the mainspring of American industry—the American irresistible enthusiasm for individual achievement which absolutely depends upon private ownership and control.

If Applied to Newspapers

As Charles M. Schwab, who paved the Atlantic with wooden ships, has so well said: "I think the development of this country has come and will many years is likely to come * * * from individual initiative. * * * And that is to say, that the best and most economic results will not be obtained in America by government ownership or direct control; that there should be national supervision of all great enterprises, supervision such as will prevent destruction, but will preserve in business, and elsewhere, our priceless gift of national freedom. Of that I am sure."

If we logically apply the license principle to the publishing business, we will discover its destructiveness more instantly and vividly.

Will Split Paper's Profits With Its Employes

George F. Johnson of Binghamton Republican-Herald Announces Policy in Changing Paper's Name to "Sun"

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., August 9.—The name of the Binghamton Republican-Herald, the oldest morning newspaper in the southern tier of counties of New York state, was changed this week to the Morning Sun, and coincident therewith, the new owner, George F. Johnson, announced that whatever profits were made hereafter by the paper would be divided between the newspaper and employees who helped to make the profits. He also said that sick and death benefits would be established for the employees.

The change of name was announced at a dinner given the employees of the paper by Mr. Johnson and came with the 218th number of the ninety-seventh year of the paper. It was in line with the policy of the new owner to make the paper entirely independent, the name "Republican" carrying with it the intimation that the paper still was the official organ of the Republican party of Broome County. Mr. Johnson, in making the announcement, said:

"We expect to spend a half million dollars on new equipment and the running expenses of the newspaper in an effort to publish a paper worthy of the support of the community. I do not think that I need to explain to you that for some time at least, there is not likely to be any profit in the conducting of this paper. Quite the contrary. I wouldn't be surprised if our newspaper lost $100,000 for several years. To serve the public ought to be our aim, rather than to make the most out of the investment.

"There are 165 people on the staff, which has been increased from about 90. If you can help us make this paper profitable we will split the profits with you fifty-fifty after we have paid you a good liberal wage for your work. If it is a success it will be your success and, if a failure, your failure."

George E. Cornell, for many years publisher of the Waverly Sun, and postmaster of the village of Waverly, N. Y., has been added to the editorial staff of the paper.

WILL DISCUSS ADS AS FOES OF HIGH COSTS

Capitalists and Labor Leaders at A. A. C. of W. Convention Will Seek to Evolve Plan for Reducing Expense of Production and Distribution

Advertising as an aid in solving the high-cost-of-living problem, by reducing the cost of production and of merchandising, will be the chief topic considered at the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at New Orleans, September 21 to 25. The problem will be studied from the following five angles:

What can the employer do toward advertising to his workmen, thereby increasing production by getting them better understood the relationship between employer and worker?

What can the employer do by advertising to the public the plans and ideals of his business institution, thus reaching employes indirectly?

What can be done in similar lines by associations of employers and employes?

What can labor leaders do by advertising to the working men and women?

What can civic bodies, official agencies, and others who are not identified either as employer or worker, do to help promote a better understanding?

Addresses will be delivered by men high in the councils of labor and capital, and a committee representing various lines of industry will study and will formulate a number of basic points upon which it appears that capital and labor can agree.

They will then study methods employed by others who have used advertising to help solve such problems, with the purpose of making recommendations for the further use of paid advertising space as a method for obtaining harmony and co-operation between employers and employes.

Will Send Special Trains

There will be special trains for delegates to the convention from New York City, Texas and Indiana, people of the latter State being especially interested because Indianapolis is after the 1920 convention of the association. A prize of a silver loving cup, offered by the Indianapolis Club for the best reason why that city should have the next convention, was won by Miss Mary Coddington, a department store saleswoman, who wrote:

"Indianapolis should have the 1920 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World because more advertisers can get here in less time and at less cost and get more after they come, than in any other city on the western hemisphere."

Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis, Boston any many other cities have indicated that they will send record-breaking delegations, and a party of twenty business men has already been assembled in San Francisco. Cable messages have been received for hotel reservations from men as far away as Australia. The Advertising Club of Shanghai also has made reservations.

The NC-4, the first airplane to cross the Atlantic, will be brought to New Orleans by Lieutenant Commander A. C. Reed for the last day of the convention.

INLAND PRESS SYMPOSIUM

Proper Relationship of Department Heads to Be Discussed at October Meeting

The Postal Zone law will be discussed at a meeting of the Inland Daily Press Association, October 21 and 22 and there also will be a symposium by an editor, an advertising manager, a circulation manager, and a foreman of news room as to the relationship that should prevail between the quartette on each paper.

"PITILESS PUBLICITY" IS EXPENSIVE, CAPITAL CORRESPONDENTS FIND

They Are Refused Admittance to "Public" Conference of President and Foreign Relations Committee and Forced to Pay "Official Stenographer" Fancy Price for Transcript.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT)

Washington, August 19.

"PITILESS publicity" and "open covenants of peace openly arrived at" were served to the press of the nation—and accordingly to the American people—at fancy prices here to-day. The publicity market opened strong and remained firm at about "twenty-five dollars for the first three hours and about three dollars for each hour thereafter." The newspapers paid the bills.

Efforts of the Washington correspondents to obtain admittance to one of the really momentous and absorbing conferences of the current era of American history proved just about as effectual as did the fight of the correspondents in Paris against the stone walls of stand-pat diplomacy.

Forced to Make Own Arrangements

The President and Senator Lodge—the dominant figures in the conference—were agreed that "full publicity" should be accorded everything occurring at the White House today, but the newspapers were forced to make their own arrangements and to rely solely upon their own resources, financial and otherwise, to obtain as much as possible of that "full publicity."

No numerically greater assemblage of newspapermen has covered any story in Washington in a generation. The correspondents literally were "shouting at the key-holes," in their demands for uncensored stenographic reports of the exchanges between the President and the members of the Commite on Foreign Relations.

Admission to a very limited number of correspondents was requested by Gus. J. Karger, chairman of the standing committee of the newspaper correspondents, but his letter to the President was not permitted to get beyond the desk of Mr. Tumulty. That ever-alert guardian of the White House sanctum took it upon his own well-rounded and carefully groomed shoulders to withhold the letter from the President and to inform Mr. Karger in response to a telephone inquiry, that he had talked it over with the President."

Tumulty Says "Nothing Doing"

The Karger letter to the President was read to Tumulty over the telephone by Ralph Foster. Foster then informed Karger that Tumulty said he had "taken up" that matter with the President and that there was nothing doing. Karger then ten reply was sent to the chairman of the correspondents' committee. He got his information by phoning the White House.

Senator Lodge sent a courteous reply to Karger. He said the committee was willing that newspaper men should be present, but he was forced to decline that even the Senate is impotent in some things, especially in regulating affairs at the White House.

The official reporters of Senate debates are not authorized to cover committee hearings, and the Foreign Relations Committee accordingly has engaged a commercial stenographer to report its hearings on the treaty of peace. The contract was sought by all commercial stenographers in Washington. Carbons obtained by newspapers must be paid for at the arbitrary rates of the stenographers.

Newspapers desiring transcripts of the conference had to make their arrangements with Griffith Johnson, a commercial stenographer. There were some complaints against the sum charged by him, but on the whole the correspondents were happy to get the stenographic reports at any price. Without Mr. Johnson's organization the afternoon papers would have been out in the cold with little else than the formal statement read by the President at the opening of the conference. This statement had been mimeographed in advance.

Johnson set a flat rate of $25 for each paper for the first three hours of the conference. For all time after three hours, he set a rate of $70 an hour, to be prorated among the papers getting carbons. Eighteen newspapers and press associations and two other organizations obtained carbons. Johnson, accordingly, received his usual pay from the Senate and $800 for the first three hours and $70 for the approximate fourth hour.

With the very efficient service of "Jim" Preston and William Donaldson, the superintendent of the House gallery, the correspondents had no complaint against the speed with which they obtained the carbons. The first take of about 2,000 words was ready thirty minutes after the questioning of the President began and it ran along at a very fast pace until the full 30,000 words were distributed shortly after 4 o'clock. The press associations ran the text of the report rather fully and the afternoon papers obtained a generous share of it.

These Received Transcripts

Transcripts were made by Johnson for the Associated Press, International News Service, United Press, Central News, New York World, New York Herald, New York Times, New York American, New York Sun, Philadelphia Inquirer, Philadelphia Public Ledger, Philadelphia Press, Chicago Tribune, Boston Evening Transcript, Christian Science Monitor, Washington Times, Washington Evening Star, Baltimore Sun, The League to Enforce Peace, and the Republican National Committee.

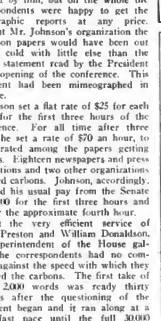
While the correspondents were grouped in the long corridor of the White House, the President appeared.

"Are you getting what you want?" he inquired, and when assured they were, the President added: "That is very satisfying."

It was not the cost of the "full publicity" which drew the fire of the correspondents, but the principle involved. The newspapermen knew that their papers would gladly bear the expense in order to get the stenographic reports, and not a few of the correspondents would have been willing to pay admission fees of $100 each to get into the Cabinet room.

NEWS WRITERS AND DESK MEN STRIKE

Omaha Bee Reporters and Copy Readers Demand Higher Pay—Form Union When Publisher Rosewater Refuses to Comply



(BY TELEGRAPH)

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 20.—Fourteen reporters and copy readers of the Omaha Bee struck for a $5 per cent increase in pay, Tuesday evening. This was all the reportorial staff except one man, a special writer.

Victor Rosewater, editor and publisher of the Bee, refused to grant the demands or to negotiate with the men collectively.

The salaries of the men ranged from $20 to $35 per week. Dissatisfaction has been brewing for some time and this came to a head Tuesday when the force organized and signed a petition which they submitted to Mr. Rosewater, reading as follows:

"We the undersigned members of the staff of the Omaha Morning and Evening Bee respectfully request an increase of 35 per cent of our salaries retroactive to Saturday, Aug. 16, and a six day week to provide one full day or night off a week. We will expect your answer not later than this evening."

Mr. Rosewater replied immediately with a written statement in which he said: "Answering your communication dated Aug. 19, I cannot see my way clear to comply with such a demand, which does not even attempt to present a justifying reason. Those who wish to quit will please notify me in writing by tomorrow, (Aug. 20) noon. You will convey this answer to all who signed the paper.

VICTOR ROSEWATER."

Organize Local Number One

Following this, the reporters and copy readers repaired to the labor temple where they proceeded to organize a union. Here they interviewed C. J. Warren, district organizer of the A. F. of L. who immediately wired eastern headquarters for a charter for Local Number One of the American News Writers' Union. Mr. Warren then interviewed other union employees of the Bee in regard to possibility of a sympathetic strike, but is said to have received little encouragement.

Striking reporters are today, picketing the news runs and attempting to prevent any outsiders from obtaining news for the Bee.

"I will never treat with these news writers as a body," said Publisher Rosewater, "but will be glad to deal with them individually. One of the signers of the demand had been employed on the Bee for only ten days, and only two of them had been with the paper continuously for more than two years, and one of these in that time had already had his pay raised 30 per cent."

Taylor Kennedy, managing editor of the Bee said: "Many of the strikers are cubs and five of them are under twenty years of age. I employed one reporter three days ago at $30 a week and raised him $5 yesterday. Today he walked out. We will get out a newspaper all right."

One of First Sky-Scrapers—Sold for About $1,800,000

Frank A. Munsey, owner of the New York Sun and the Evening Sun, has bought the twenty-three story building at Nassau and Spruce streets, now occupied by these newspapers, for about $1,800,000 from the New York Life Insurance Company.

As soon as alterations are completed in the Munsey Building, formerly the Stewart Building, at Broadway, Chambers and Reade streets, the two newspapers will be moved there.

Boys Will Preside at Trials of Newsboy Ordinance Offenders

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 19.—One of the interesting new features planned by the Portland Boys' Club for the season of 1919-20 is a newsboys trial court, which will enable a jury of the boy's peers to sit upon any alleged violation on his part of the ordinance governing the sale of newspapers in Portland. The plan is said to have the approval of the chief of police.

The proceedings are to be conducted as in a regular court, and the verdict turned over to the chief of police for his approval. The era of newsboys under ten years of age is about over in Portland; likewise the era of badgeless newsboys, according to Chief of Police Irving S. Watts.

NEWSPRINT AND LABOR PROBLEMS HOLD ATTENTION OF N. E. A.

Warning of Editor & Publisher on Paper Market Conditions Is Discussed by Delegates—Mayor Hanson Asks Press to Suppress Bolshevism

(BY TELEGRAPH)

SEATTLE, August 17.—On the inside, the chief problems now facing newspaper business in this country are: First, scarcity of newsprint, which threatens not so much conservation on news but on elimination of non-essential matters from papers.

Second, what is facing many publishers is marked scarcity of trained workers in mechanical departments.

On the outside, the chief duty of newspapers today, whether large or small, daily or weekly, is to give deep thought and study to the industrial situation in order that Bolshevism may be checked and stamped out. Upon editors and publishers of the country will largely determine survival of real structure of true democracy in this country.

N. E. A. Delegates Are on Their Way East

The above were the dominant notes that resounded at sessions of the National Editorial Association's convention held here. The newspaper chiefs, gathered from all parts of the nation, left Seattle at 6 o'clock tonight, after a stay of four days, for Victoria, where the last session of the convention will be held before the party returns East.

In discussing scarcity of newsprint, several speakers referred to articles on the subject appearing in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, particularly Mr. Ochs's and Mr. Carvalho's warning to the newspaper industry.

Warning Attracts Attention

"In coming here this morning we received the last edition of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and in that we are warned of the newsprint situation," said J. E. Gratke, editor of the Evening Budget, of Astoria, Ore. "It is a timely warning. The time has come when newspaper publishers must tackle their problems in a scientific manner to avert any crisis that may be impending. It is a duty of organizations of newspaper men like ours to employ experts to analyze problems that we must face, to advise us on the operation of the business ends of our publications and to organize joint buying agencies, etc.

"Co-operation and unity of action is what we must have in the newspaper industry, particularly among publishers and editors of the smaller papers."

Mr. Gratke also said that newspapers should encourage the movement to have journalism included in the curriculum of high schools, as well as universities.

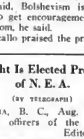
Mayor Hanson Speaks

President Hardy and H. C. Hotaling also pleaded for unity of action on the part of the members of the association in newsprint and other business matters. Mayor Ole Hanson, Seattle's famous foe of the "Reds," and Mr. Henry Suzzallo, president of the University of Washington, were the chief invited speakers at the convention.

Mayor Hanson appealed to the delegates to wrestle with Bolshevism and use the great power that lies within their hands to crush it. It is a menace that is threatening every structure of America in life, he said, and if the nation's editors don't fight to their utmost, it will spread its fangs rapidly.

Bolshevism in Schools

In attacking this problem, Mayor Hanson said editors can make good progress by urging more substantial pay for school teachers, who were being paid as a general rule less than most unskilled laborers. It is the teacher who, in imparting knowledge to the rising generation, has the power to mould the student's mind, and unless they are reasonably paid, Bolshevism is going to continue to get encouragement right in the classroom, he said.



Dr. Suzzallo praised the press for the work it has done in the war, and in educating the people on international questions, particularly since the armistice was signed.

"The work of education carried on by the press during the last few months has been the most colossal accomplishment in American public life," he said.

N. E. A. ISSUES PAPER CONSERVATION APPEAL

Boston Will Be Next Convention City—Zone System of Mailing Endorsed—Urge Government Publicity

(BY TELEGRAPH)

VICTORIA, B. C., AUG. 20.—The selection of Boston as the next meeting place of the National Editorial Association was the final act of the delegates at the closing business session of the annual convention here yesterday before sailing for Vancouver where they will board their special train for the homeward journey through the Canadian Rockies.

The convention issued a special appeal to the newspaper publishers of the United States to immediately eliminate waste in the use of newsprint and to continue to use all the practicable methods of conservation in force during the war to save paper.

The following resolutions on subjects that had been under discussion since the delegates began their northwest tour four weeks ago were adopted:

Endorsement of immediate ratification of National woman suffrage; pledged support to assist the Government to bring about readjustment of living costs, reconstruction and normal economic conditions; commending the work of the Federal Trade Commission, urged Congress to grant additional appropriations immediately so that body may continue investigations to prevent profiteering; endorsed the zone system of mail distribution; condemned the publication of veiled advertising in the guise of reading matter; indorsed the campaign to secure the adoption of uniform rate cards; urged the establishment of a non-partisan publicity bureau by the Government.

Conner, president of the Washington State Press Association, Mr. Hotaling, editor of Enterprise, of Mapleton, Minn., and former president of the national association, responded.

Following the business session the visiting editors were guests at an elaborate banquet, given by the four local newspapers of Seattle. Six hundred persons attended. The chief speaker of the evening was John Kendrick Bangs, famous author and humorist.

Armistice Branded Crime

Bangs declared that "in ten years clear-minded editors and other thoughtful citizens in this country will see that signing of armistice with Germany was the greatest crime in all American history.

"The only place that the armistice should have been signed was in Berlin, after Allied troops had occupied the city, and you men and women will appreciate that after you have visited there."

The speaker, who has recently returned from a tour of Germany, said there is "not man, woman or child in Germany with a consciousness that their country was defeated.

"To newspapers of the country during the past few months there has been no propaganda just as vicious as the Hun propaganda before and during the war," he said. "It is designed to drive a wedge between the United States and her Allies, and we must be on guard against it."

Other speakers at the banquet were: President Hardy, Harvey Bingham, editor of the Register Leader, Des Moines (Iowa); Mrs. J. C. Stafford, Siftings News, Idaho Springs (Colo.); "Will" Wilke, of the Gray Eagle Gazette, Gray Eagle (Minn.); Edward Albright, vice-president of the N. E. A., and C. E. Ingalls, president of the Oregon State Editorial Association. Judge C. E. Claypool acted as the Seattle Press Club's official toastmaster.

Following the banquet, a ball was given in the Masonic Auditorium.

Steamship Editor Launched

One of the chief features of Seattle's program, in honor of visiting editors was the launching of the 9,600-ton steamship Editor, named in honor of the newspaper profession, at the plant of the Skinner & Eddy Corporation.

Mrs. Hardy christened the vessel as the newborn craft broke away from its cradle and slid gracefully down the ways to the cheers of assembled editors. For many of the editors from the inland States, it was the first launching of an ocean going vessel they had ever witnessed.

On the great prow of the ship was a sign bearing the legend, "In honor of Ye Editor." Paintings of large ink-well adorned the hull, white and blue walls of the sponsors' stand.

—and the Paste Pot Was There

At the top of the steps rose an arch that brought pleased smiles from every face. The arch, consisting of a huge pen of ink-stained wood on one side by the replica of a quill pen and on the other side by the replica of a blue pencil. From the central pivot of the outspread saucer blades hung a gigantic paste pot.

At closing of ceremonies, President D. E. Skinner presented a beautiful diamond and platinum bar-pin to Mrs. Hardy as a token of appreciation from the company.

Following the launching the editors inspected the plant and then boarded a specially chartered steamer that took them on a cruise of Elliott Bay, and then through the Government Canal Locks into Lake Union and Lake Washington. They were escorted through the canal by airplanes.

Yesterday's program ended with a royal Western stag party at the Seattle Press Club for visiting newspaper men, and an elaborate banquet for visiting newspaper women at the New Washington Hotel. While the men enjoyed a feast of unlimited proportioned provenders, the women were feted with brief addresses from members of the national and local newspaper organizations.

Women Hold Banquet

Mrs. James W. Wood, wife of the editor of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, introduced Mrs. H. C. Hotaling as toastmistress of the evening.

Responses were made to toasts by Mrs. Honora M. Connor, of South Bend; Mrs. Hardy, Mrs. Will Wilke, of Gray Eagle, Minn.; Mrs. E. E. Brodie, of Oregon City, Ore., and Miss Adelle Parker and Mrs. Lorence W. Wilson, Seattle.

Aside from one speech, that by Stephen T. Mather, assistant to Secretary of the Interior, Frank K. Lane, the Star High Inks was given over entirely to fun.

Visit Navy Yard

This morning the delegates went on a special steamer to Bremerton and inspected Puget Sound Navy Yard. Later they were luncheon guests of the Bremerton Chamber of Commerce. W. B. Jessup, editor of the Bremerton Searchlight, was in charge of arrangements. Returning to Seattle at 3.30, editors were taken in automobiles on a tour of the city, and at 6 o'clock they left for Victoria, warm in their praise for Seattle newspaper men for the hospitality shown them.

Oregon Editors Pay Amount of Tribune Libel Bill

The management of the Chicago Tribune on August 15 was in receipt or the following telegram from Seattle, Wash.:

"To the Chicago Tribune, Chicago, Ill.—The Oregon Editorial Association, regarding the Chicago Tribune as vindicated by the verdict of the jury in the Henry Ford libel case, has this day, through its officers and executive committee, sent the Chicago Tribune a draft for six cents with the request that it be used to pay the judgment secured by the world's leading candidate for frivolity.

"O. E. INGALLS, President."

FAVOR ALASKA AS NEXT MEETING PLACE

Convention of Pacific Slope Newspaper Makers May Be Held Aboard Ship on Northern Cruise—Washington Association Closes Convention

SEATTLE, Aug. 16.—A movement to hold a joint convention of the editorial associations of the Pacific Slope next year aboard a steamer on cruise to Alaska, was launched at the annual convention of the Washington State Press Association held here this week in conjunction with the meeting of the N. E. A.

On motion J. C. Kaynor, editor of the Ellensburg Record, the convention authorized the appointment of a special committee to investigate the practicability of the joint assembly and cruise. Kaynor declared the time has arrived when the newspaper men 'must get together from a wider area and exchange ideas and discuss their problems of business.

A. R. Gardner, editor of the Reporter, Kennewick, was elected president for the ensuing year, succeeding Edward M. Connor. Clarence Ellington, of the Bee-Nugget, Chehalis, was named vice-president; E. I. Wheeler, of the Times, Walsburg, second vice-president, and N. Russell Hill, of the Times-Tribune, Davenport, secretary-treasurer.

On motion of Fred Kennedy, University of Washington journalism department, delegates voted for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the need of a special field agent for country newspapers of the State.

FORD LIBEL VERDICT SATISFIES ALL

Charges of Selfish Designs of Tribune in Mexican Intervention Not Proven—Costs of Long Trial Estimated at Half a Million Dollars

MT. CLEMENS, Mich., Aug. 15.—After deliberating ten hours the jury in the case of Henry Ford against the Chicago Tribune for $1,000,000 damages for libel, based on an editorial in the head of which the plaintiff was called an "anarchist," last night returned a verdict of six cents and costs against the defendant. Under the laws of Michigan, "costs" are limited to $50, it is stated.

Orvy Hislett, foreman of the jury, said they took "nine ballots that I can remember," the first one, according to Leonard Measel, another juror, standing 8 to 4 in favor of awarding Mr. Ford some damages.

Alfred J. Murphy, attorney for Mr. Ford, said:

"The important issue has been determined favorably to the plaintiff. He has been vindicated. Money damages were entirely subordinate and were not sought by Mr. Ford. He stands not only vindicated but his attitude as an American citizen has been justified. His friends are entirely satisfied.

Weymouth Kirkland, of counsel for the Chicago Tribune, said:

"We consider it a victory for the reason that Attorney Fred Lucking, in closing for Mr. Ford, stated that anything less than substantial damages would be a defeat for his client."

Mr. Ford was not in court. The Chicago Tribune was represented by Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson, one of the publishers.

Judge James G. Tucker in his charge to the jury held that a newspaper has no greater privileges in making comment than has an individual.

The Judge said that plaintiff's charges of pro-Germanism against the Tribune and of a selfish interest in advocating intervention in Mexico had not been proved and the jury need not consider it. He told the jurors:

"The editorial as it appeared in the paper and standing by itself, without explanations, is libellous, or, in legal terms, libellous per se (of itself).

"The defendant Chicago Tribune admits the publication, and insists that it was true, and therefore justified; and that even if not true, it was fair comment upon a matter of public interest, either of which defenses are sufficient if proved."

Trial Costs Set Record

He held that the heading "Ford Is an Anarchist" and the editorial asserting that he would not provide for enlisted men or their families and referring to him as "so deluded an individual" and "an ignorant idealist," and recommending his banishment to a country without law and order were libellous.

Judge Tucker, however, upheld the fight of a newspaper or individual to comment on the acts or utterances of any public citizen, and held that Mr. Ford, because of the large number of his employes, could be considered a public character and his acts and expressions subject for the public cirticism if their criticism was just and in good faith.

The tremendous legal costs of the trial set a record for expenses in ratio to the monetary damages obtained. The costs to the Chicago Tribune are estimated at $250,000, which does not include the court costs which the Tribune must pay. These include pay of jurors, Judge, court officials and Sheriff for four months.

The Ford expenses are estimated at another $250,000, making a total $500,000 for the four months. The testimony and arguments extended over three months, and one month was consumed in the preliminaries.

Correction

The April 1, 1919, Government statement of the Warsaw (Ind.) Union reports a circulation for the preceding six months' period of 1,900 copies daily. This statement was not available when the last ratings for EDITOR & PUBLISHER were compiled, and the paper was credited with 2,085, the average reported for the six months previous to October 1, 1918.

Inland Papers Disagree on Postal Zone Law

Members of Daily Press Association Submit Various Replies to Questionnaire on That Subject

The Inland Daily Press Association has tabulated replies received from members to a questionnaire on the postal zone law. The question, "Are you in favor of the postal zone system for all publications, as now in force?" was answered by forty members of the association in the affirmative and by thirty-seven in the negative.

The question, "Are you in favor of the zone system, the present law to be modified in accordance with justifiable costs after investigation by Congress?" was answered by seventy-six members in the affirmative and by thirteen in the negative.

The questionnaire was accompanied by a copy of a letter regarding the postal zone law, addressed to Congressman Burton E. Sweet of Iowa by A. W. Peterson, publisher of the Waterloo Evening Courier and president of the association. It read, in part:

"Much national advertising is diverted from the country papers on account of large periodical publications carrying it at a low rate per inch per thousand circulation on account of their having a privilege which requires Uncle Sam to haul their papers all over the country at a loss.

"Representative Mansfield of Texas is championing the law as it now stands, and I believe the right step is to support him in this first move and then, later on, if we can have the law amended so that it will be perfectly fair and just to all, the situation will be agreeable to every class of publication."

Two questions were submitted to members of the association, pertaining to the Audit Bureau of Circulation.

"Do you think the A. B. C.'s semi-annual statements of publishers are of use and should be circulated among advertisers?" was answered "Yes" by forty-seven, and "No" by eight, while others qualified their replies.

"Do you think the publishers' statements should be abolished and that newspaper members of the A. B. C. should depend solely upon the audits which are made annually by the A. B. C.?" was answered "Yes" by twenty-one, and "No" by forty-two.

Chandler Goes to Business Office

ATLANTA, Aug. 18.—Charles Chandler, formerly circulation manager of the Georgian and Sunday American, has been promoted to assistant business manager of those papers. He will also have charge of the foreign advertising department. C. D. Hartlee, formerly of the Detroit Journal, succeeds him as circulation manager.

Reminding the Merchant that Advertising Exists—

Making the News-Courier Pay

It's Just as Well, Occasionally, to Advertise Advertising and to Do It in an Inescapable Way, for the Merchant Is Rather Impressed When He Sees the Doctor Show Faith in His Own Medicine. By W. Livingston Larned. (Original Illustrations for Editor & Publisher.)

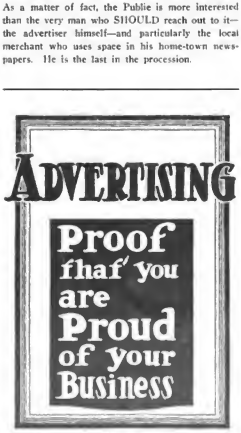
"IT strikes me that there is more 'advertising of advertising' of late," said the General Manager to the Ad-Man, "than ever before. The agencies are exploiting their ambitions and their purpose and many daily newspapers carry convincingly written arguments in favor of the public print as a means of selling goods. For my part, I like to see this. It should have been done a long while ago."

"But you know the adage," responded the Ad-Man, "the shoemaker's children going barefooted. Advertising men have always seen the wisdom of exploiting their own wares, but the mere thought of it frightens them. If you want to see agony, undistilled, drop in on a copy writer at the moment he is attempting to create an advertisement for his own shop. You'd think he had never written a line before in his life. Cold chills go up and down his spine—and, as like as not, he makes a sorry mess of it."

"Then why not settle upon a very obvious solution," interrupted the General Manager, "no doctor tries to prescribe for himself. It's not being done. He goes to another physician. That's what advertising agencies should do—call another group of specialists in and turn the responsibility over to them. Then they would get results."

Professional Jealousy

"WHAT about professional jealousy? Advertising men have it in a highly developed degree, I sometimes think. Ever see a bunch of them fighting over a new account? Wow! Some conflict! On the other hand, it is perhaps no worse than the healthy competition that must always and inevitably take place in business of any kind. It's true to groceries or hardware or—or anything



The purpose of this series is to help the advertising manager develop new local business. Earnest effort is made to make the text reflect actual merchandising conditions in the smaller cities; and the illustrations are designed to enhance the value of advertising space.

The weaker ones are pushed out of the nest.

"I am not so sure that one advertising agency should command the services of a rival—and rivalry must be universal—there are professional secrets and methods and internal mechanisms that one house would not care to divulge to another. And you can't write an advertisement unless you KNOW the proposition from top to bottom.

"No—I'd rather look at it in THIS way—an agency should use its own problems as a test case. Certain agencies are advertising their own wares in a highly efficient way. That shows it CAN be done."

"I think," said the General Manager, "that all peoples everywhere are more interested in advertising than they were even two or three years ago. As a matter of fact, the Public is more interested than the very man who SHOULD reach out to it—the advertiser himself—and particularly the local merchant who uses space in his home-town newspapers. He is the last in the procession.

"And yet there is no excuse for this. Every manufacturer, jobber and wholesaler with whom he does business is constantly bombarding him with educational matter—about advertising. I can't think of a man who has MORE sources of educational help.

"In any line of business you can start a shop tomorrow and in a week you will be given a free course in how to advertise your store and your goods. There will be illustrated ads in electrotype form that cost you absolutely nothing—there will be broadsides and window trims and store cards and follow-up letters and heaven only knows what else. Moreover, you will be told how to APPLY and USE this immense amount of material. There will not be one weak link.

"You just ought to see some of the advertising departments of certain live concerns when they unlimber on dealer campaigns. It's quite the most vital issue of all—to them. There is no underestimation of values and of significance.

"Yet a vast proportion of this co-operative scheme shoots high over the head of the little dealer. He just doesn't get it, that's all—and even if he DOES, he will not apply it."

"You are optimistic this morning."

Won't Take Advertising Seriously

"I'M trying to see conditions as they are. You know I am in a position to know the TRUTH. Every day I'm out with these chaps in their stores. I know them personally. I do my best to sell them space. It very often astonishes me to discover that they look upon me and the paper as evils that must be tolerated. Some day they might want a favor of the paper. They recognize ITS power, but they will NOT take advertising seriously."

Digitized by Google

"This situation is improving, however?"

"Yes, I'll grant you that."

"And the advertising that advertising men are publishing these days to explain and make clear the principles of their own business—do you think that retailers are reading it and that it will have any impression upon them?"

"Eventually, yes. It's all a wonderful part of the growth of the IDEA OF ADVERTISING. Advertising is young as yet. It is just getting over the awkward age—it's all legs and arms and self-consciousness—it suffers from growing pains. I have always felt that the small merchant has one great, sincere excuse. He is so busy trying to make his establishment pay—so busy facing the hundred and one problems that confront him in a new guise every working day, that he has no genuine opportunity to give Advertising the thought it deserves.

The Little Dealer Must Be Educated

"A GREAT department store—yes. There we have an advertising department with a competent head. That's different.

"But John Smith has a little corner haberdashery. One or two clerks help him. He is his own bookkeeper, expert accountant, treasurer, landlord and stock-taker. Morning, noon and night he's on the job. A large collar house sends him a book of fifty electros for local advertising. But John Smith never gets around to reading the introduction. Every time he starts, a customer interrupts him. And it's always that way, year in and year out.

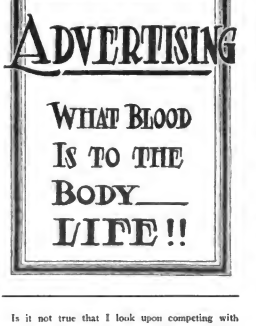
"The demands upon John Smith, even with a small shop, are far greater than you can imagine. I really think that if John and his associate merchants on Main Street HAD THE TIME TO SIT DOWN AND DIGEST THE BIG TRUTHS OF THE POWER OF ADVERTISING, they would be the first to follow out its rules and regulations. The fact remains they haven't the time."

"Which gets back to educating him."

"Every newspaper in the country and every manufacturer are in the midst of that problem."

"Do you think that these large space advertisements in newspapers, paid for by the manufacturer and run as campaigns, discourage the local man?"

"I don't think I get you. They help move stock from shelves in his own shop."



"No, that isn't what I mean.

"Suppose I am an independent tobacco dealer in an average prosperous town. Suppose I am not tied down by trade restrictions to any one big trust or combination; I am merely satisfied to keep a fine line and run my own business in my own way; and suppose you come to me as representative of the News-Courier and solicit me for a series of advertisements; I open your paper and spread it out on the counter and point to one or two or perhaps six large-space illustrated advertisements, put out by the American Tobacco Company or any of a number of others

An "Independent's" Argument

"NOW, these ads are shrewdly put together. They are monopolizers of space and of attention. They go about advertising in a way that, I, the small dealer, could NEVER dream of doing.

"And they come along relentlessly. It seems as though they would never end. The best grade of advertising brains in the country has produced them.

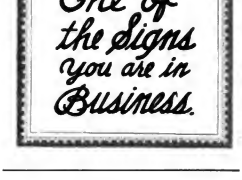
Is it not true that I look upon competing with such advertising as a hopeless task? I can't use single-column and double and hope to drown them out—or even meet them on anywhere near equal ground. They frighten me off the reservation. I say to you: 'Don't mention advertising! How can I compete with these big fellows—these so-called monopolies?

"'No—I will continue my policy of winning individual customers, via personal solicitation, friendship appeal and close attention to quality. It will not pay me to fight these gigantic campaigns. I will build a comfortable business on the strength of legitimate exclusive brands of cigars and cigarettes.'

"I have been watching the progress of these present-day tobacco advertising campaigns. Millions of soldiers came back with a preference for cigarettes, for instance. That is what they smoked while in service. The cigar folks began to get a little frightened. So they are advertising more than ever—and more cleverly. Whereupon the cigarette erowd said: 'All right—we'll show you how two can play at that game,' and cigarette publicity appears in unbelievably large space.

"Watch the latest Camel scheme—a teaser series to arouse new interest in an old brand. Four column space, newspaper, carried an impressive showing of tracks in the desert sand—that and no more. Then came men following the tracks in the direction of a brilliant oasis—and finally the large camel—and the package of cigarettes.

"These stunts monopolize attention. If I were a little dealer I confess I would be apt to view the situation as hopeless—that is, in so far as my little modest ads were concerned."



"But that is a false premise," came back the Ad-Man, "and I'm surprised to hear you say these things. Any advertising of cigarettes and cigars or smoking tobacco that appears is a help to ALL brands and all tobacco shops. The fallacy of your reasoning has been shown time and time again. Size of copy, moreover, is not necessarily significant. I have seen a single-column display, properly keyed, do as much business as a page."

The Newspaper's Part Pointed Out.

"NEED again for educational matter on our part—the newspaper," parried the General Manager. "There are times when I think we should run some sort of appeal every day in the year—simple, educational displays on the general subject of advertising that are different from straight type harangues, such as most newspapers are prone to apply. It can be done in any number of ways."

"We begin a series this week," was the quick answer, "I agree with you. If the advertising agents can find a fat appropriation, then we should give assistance—keep the movement alive. Sometimes this constant hammering away with homely truths, tersely put, wears down the opposition.

"Our first series is made up of MERE SEN-TENCES ABOUT ADVERTISING—what it is and what it does. And I want you to run them on the first page."

The General Manager shrugged his shoulders.

"First page!" he exclaimed.

"What's the matter—does that scare you?"

"Why not inside—you fellows can't expect to take the place of news!"

"Ah, but that is precisely what good advertising IS," answered the Ad-Manager—NEWS—and the MOST IMPORTANT NEWS IN THE WORLD—business news."

highly necessary. Requests on their space should be modest and the story offered for publication should be viewed from the standpoint of the newspaper and its readers, and not the recruiter. The story offered must be a timely one —insistence that stories of any other nature be printed only leads to friction.

"Every recruit enlisted should be questioned, for there is a potential human interest story in the life of every man. When this is discovered, it should be developed, prepared in an attractive way and given to the press. As far as possible, news should be supplied to local newspapers of men enlisting in towns where the papers are published; that is, keep track of the men after they enlist.

"It would be entirely possible to occasionally send a questionnaire through the Adjutant General's office, following up a list of, say, twenty men.

"Facts about them, such as promotion, expert marksmanship, acts of heroism, etc., could then be woven into the stories to be given out by the recruiting officers to their home-town newspapers. A service of this kind would be of great value in gaining favorable publicity."

General Peyton C. March, chief of staff, has issued a statement voicing the pleasure of the War Department over the unexpected number of enlistments. The speed with which the "first hundred thousand" recruits asked for the permanent regular army has amazed army officers and officials generally.

NEWSPAPER MAKING

A Department of Practical Service for Publishers and Advertisers Conducted by Jason Rogers, Publisher of the New York Globe, and Author of "Fundamentals of Newspaper Building," "Newspaper Building" and "Building Newspaper Advertising"

MANY years ago I commenced to use a loose-leaf book, with pages 4 x 7 inches, for vital data regarding the business end of the New York Globe. I called it "the little book," which I have described in contributions to Editor & Publisher and in my other writings, more particularly in "Newspaper Building," where I reproduced many of the pages.

This form of crude memorandum has been very generally adopted, on my suggestion, by newspaper publishers all over the country, and as expressed to me in many letters received has helped to chase away the clouds of uncertainty and discouragement in many places.

By processes of natural development for a person of my temperament, always seeking something new and more effective, my original "little black book" grew so thick that it had to be assembled in two covers, and finally three.

I kept adding new series of pages covering every phase of business activity in quickly comparative form. Each segregation of expense, for example, had a separate page and gradually covered many years' experience.

In every case department totals constituted the first page for that department, with added pages for each subdivision, such as, for example, editorial total, editorial salaries, editorial space and correspondence, etc., etc. With our system of some 160 sub-divisions this made a book in itself.

Keeping Informed as to Competition

Then I methodically recorded advertising earnings in total and by classification, kept track of the advertising of all of the large stores in all of the New York newspapers in a way which enabled me to know more regarding what they were doing and had done than they knew themselves. I have these records back to 1900 in some details and in absolute detail back to 1914.

I opened similar series for watching circulation, profit and loss and about everything else that I could reduce to the condensed form, until I had every detail at my instant command, without calling on the accounting department for any data.

All of this was very interesting and most effective, but these little black books did not serve the purpose for which I had originally designed the first one—a handy record which I could conveniently carry in my pocket for study at odd moments on the train or at home.

Along about last March I determined to reduce the cumbersome mass to greater simplicity. I bought a little book with pages 3½ x 4¼ inches, and culled out the vital figures that I wanted and really thought I had struck bottom, but I hadn't.

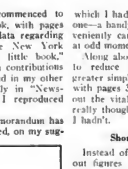
Shortening the Records

Instead of the old process of writing out figures the way we are taught in school, I hit upon the plan of merely using thousands or hundreds so as to save space and get all the essentials. Thus 36,000 became 36, while in some departments 2,100 became 2.1, the two before the decimal point meaning thousands and the one after it hundreds.

Profit and loss account might read 2, meaning a loss, while 2 meant two thousand profit.

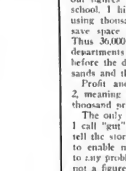
The only figures I wanted were what I call "gut" figures, the vital facts that tell the story. I wanted enough figures to enable me to work out the answer to any problem that might come up, but not a figure that would occupy space.

Opening one page for each item, I found that I had a book of only 20 pages, which I could carry in my vest pocket. The items were:



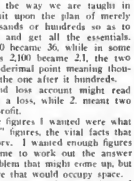
Gross expense, gross earnings, profit or loss, net advertising earnings, lines of advertising, cost per line, rate per line, circulation revenue, average gross print, average net paid, paper bill in thousands of dollars, tons used, with pages for expenses of editorial, composition, advertising department, circulation department, business office, pressroom, stereotyping, and general expense.

This little device was for the purpose of making the book burglar-proof, so to speak.



Shortly in advance of the meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association in April I made a still further reduction in the size of the pages of my little "dope book," as I now call it, to 2 x 3 inch pages, and by using 12 new pages keep track of the daily advertising earnings day by day, the column rate per month and other vital stuff.

"Dope Book" a Treasury of Facts



The "dope book" is not loose leaf, but a little leather bound affair that one can carry in any pocket without really knowing that it is there. From it I can answer any question that can come up regarding major operations. If I require further details I can go to my larger books of which I keep a copy at my home and my office.

Specimen No. 1.

Specimen No. 2.

Specimen No. 3.

What Specimen Pages Show

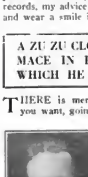
Referring to the specimen pages shown, No. 1 reflects total expenses month by month for three years. The figures are purely imaginary. Each column is composed of 13 figures, the last being the total for the year in tens of thousands instead of thousands, just to make it harder for the uninitiated to follow.

Each of the items specified is covered in this way. It serves my every purpose and every publisher visiting my office since last April, and there have been many of them, has assured me that he was going right out to buy a few of the little blank books.

Referring to cuts Nos. 2 and 3, here we find a method for watching daily net advertising earnings day by day so as to know exactly where we are at any time. I propose to watch this in group of six days, a full week of six publications, regardless of when the week in any month starts.

Years ago I gave up the method of matching the first Monday in June, 1918, against the first Monday in June, 1919. All I want to know is what we did in the first six publication days (the first week) in each of the years.

In these figures I continue to use the thousand and hundred; 2.1 means 2,100, 38 means 3,800, etc.



In the book I find that I can get three weeks on the front side of every page and the other week and odd days and summary on the other side. Cut No. 2 shows the front side and No. 3 the reverse.

The summary shows the total cost for the month, the total number of columns, the average net rate, the column rate in dollars.

Perhaps there may be some better system, but I have never seen it. If you have never kept such daily dope and records, my advice is to start tomorrow and wear a smile instead of a frown.

A ZU ZU CLOWN LANDED MACE IN DEPARTMENT WHICH HE NOW HEADS

THERE is merit in knowing what you want, going after it with vigor and determination, and having ability enough to hold it after you catch it. That's the reason why A. C. Mace became advertising manager for the National Biscuit Company, and the reason why he is still holding down the job.

A. C. Mace

Soon after the company was formed Mr. Mace was devoting his after-school hours, in 1900, to a small advertising business of his own. He had a natural talent for drawing, developed and improved by attendance at the Chicago Art Institute. He saw some possibilities for advertising display in the National Biscuit Company, and asked for a job in the advertising department. Every place was filled.

That did not discourage him. He gave up his business and took a place in the package department at $40 a month, so as to be on the inside. Then he worked up ideas o' nights and presented them to the advertising manager. They didn't go. One day he submitted a number of ear cards featuring the Zu Zu Clown that everybody knows now. The Clown made a hit, and young Mace was taken into the advertising department. He worked up to the head of the art department, and finally to the advertising manager's position. He is only thirty-six years old now.

Mr. Mace is tall, broad-shouldered and broad-minded. He is rapid in action and prolific in ideas. He has developed what many advertising experts describe as the best follow-up system of advertising in use.

DES MOINES "NEWSIE" REJECTS NORTHCLIFFE OFFER

Champion Salesman of The Stars and Stripes Returns to His Iowa Home

DES MOINES, Aug. 19.—Pat Ryan, who served overseas with the A. E. F., and made a sensation in Paris by crying The Stars and Stripes on the streets, just as the boys do in American cities, has arrived home. He sold 20,000 copies of one issue of the paper, being accompanied by a Red Cross nurse who collected the money. Many of the papers sold for a hundred francs. Lord Northcliffe heard of the feat and made Ryan an offer to remain in Europe and sell the London Daily Mail in Paris, but Ryan insisted on returning to Des Moines, where he learned the art of selling papers.

Of course, Pat returns home with some new ideas.

CHART FOR SPACE - BUYERS PRESENTED AS A SUPPLEMENT TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER

Timely Analysis of Markets, Based on Populations of Cities, Together With Circulation and Rate Data of Daily Newspapers of United States, Under Handy Group Classifications, Compiled for This Issue by Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc.

IN a special supplement, which is part of this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, there is presented the most comprehensive analysis of the circulations and advertising rates of the English-language daily newspapers of the United States ever published.

This tabulation, occupying the space of three full pages, is in effect a SPACE-BUYERS' GUIDE, affording answers to every variety of question involved in estimating costs of advertising campaigns in the daily or Sunday newspapers. Used in conjunction with the complete list of morning, evening and Sunday English-language papers, with the details of the circulations and rates of all, as published in the issue of August 14, this tabulation—which is much more than a mere summary—will enable space-buyers to readily formulate campaigns for any desired market units and to calculate costs accurately.

This data chart was conceived and compiled for EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., and it is the belief of Mr. Justin F. Barbour that it represents the most comprehensive chart ever prepared for the use of advertisers. The labor involved in the making of the statistical table has been very great, but the results achieved justify the painstaking care with which the task has been done. It covers every daily paper, whether a newspaper or a trade daily—such as Women's Wear and the Racing Form.

The Barbour organization, appreciating the importance of presenting these statistics at a time when they will be of the greatest possible use to space-buyers—just now, when fall campaigns are in the making—has worked diligently in compiling the material for presentation in this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. To expedite matters, a representative of Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets made a special trip from Chicago to New York, carrying type and proofs with him.

Nine Groupings Classify Markets

The table is divided into nine sections, or groups, covering the number of newspapers, morning, evening and Sunday, with circulation figures and advertising rates, for each size in the group.

The groupings of newspapers are on the basis of populations of the cities in which they are published.

If an advertiser desires to cover a market in any state limited to cities of less than 5,000 population he will find in Group Number One the vital facts concerning such markets.

For example: Under the caption of Illinois he will find that, in cities of this class, there are 2 morning and 14 evening papers published. He will find that the two morning papers have a circulation of 1,345, with a joint advertising rate—on a basis of a 5,000-line contract —of .009-43 an agate line. The 14 evening papers in cities of this class have a combined circulation of 22,964, and a joint advertising rate of .149-324 an agate line. He will find that in this group there is but one Sunday paper, with a circulation of 1,200 and a rate of .0107143 an agate line.

If, therefore, an advertiser desires to use all of the English-language morning, evening and Sunday papers in Illinois in cities of less than 5,000 population, he will place on his list a total of 17 papers, with a combined circulation of 25,509 copies (net paid averages according to A. B. C. and Government statements for six months' period ending March 31, 1919) and the combined rate for all papers will be found, by adding the figures given, to be .1800897 an agate line. By multiplying this rate by the number of lines required—5,000 or more—he will have an accurate estimate of the cost of such a campaign, through which he would be able to blanket the smaller cities, towns and rural communities and learn what the rates given here, as in all other groups, are those in effect August 1, 1919.

No Dailies in This Class

This Group Number One of the tabulation reveals that there are no dailies published in cities of less than 5,000 population in the following states: Connecticut, Delaware, District of Columbia, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, South Carolina, Utah and Vermont. In some states, however, it will be seen that there are a goodly number of dailies published in cities of this class. California, for instance, has ten morning, 38 evening and 10 Sunday papers in cities of less than 5,000 population.

The alphabetical arrangement of the states is followed in this chart. The space-buyer will find, under each state, the same general information as to newspapers, circulations and rates as noted above for the state of Illinois.

Advertisers will find, by reference to the lists published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER of August 14, in which the cities were listed for each state according to their populations, the names of the papers enumerated in this chart. He will also find the rates of each paper listed, so that if it is desired to use only selected papers in such territories the matter is simplified.

Illinois Cited as an Illustration

Group Number Two deals with newspapers in cities of more than 5,000 and less than 10,000 population. Under this classification we find a greater number of papers and larger circulation, generally speaking. To follow through with the illustration as in Illinois, we find that in this group we have 4 morning, 36 evening and 2 Sunday papers. The morning papers have a combined circulation of 6,201; the evening papers have a combined circulation of 76,576; the two Sunday papers have 2,982. The joint advertising rate for the morning papers is .0489247; for the 36 evening papers the joint rate is .4039295; for the two Sunday papers it is .0328572. Thus the joint advertising rate for these 42 papers, with a combined circulation of 86,258, is .4857154 an agate line on 5,000 line contracts.

Group Number Two shows no daily newspapers in cities of more than 5,000 and less than 10,000 in the states of Delaware, Nevada, Rhode Island, Wyoming, or the District of Columbia. All other states make a showing under this classification.

765 Papers in Group Three

Group Number Three deals with cities of more than 10,000 and less than 25,000 population. This classification shows some facts of remarkable interest. In cities of this class we find that there are a greater number of papers published than in any other grouping of cities shown. The morning papers in these cities number 152; evening, 469; Sunday, 144. The total is 765. The combined circulation of the morning papers is 715,183; evening, 1,841,-569; Sunday, 691,547; total, 3,248,299. By using the newspapers in the cities grouped under the third classification an advertiser would be able to reach every state in the Union except Delaware, Utah and the District of Columbia.

The morning newspapers in Group Three have a joint advertising rate of $2.7485767; the evening newspapers, $7.4736572; the Sunday, $2.9313428. Thus at a combined rate of $13.1535767 an agate line an advertiser would be able to purchase 5,000 lines of space in every morning, evening and Sunday newspaper, in the English language, in every city in the United States of more than ten thousand and less than twenty-five thousand population. This would mean reaching markets which support a greater number of daily newspapers than any other classification shown.

States Which Lead in This Class

Turning to state statistics under Group Number Three it is shown that Pennsylvania has 66 morning, evening and Sunday papers in cities of more than 10,000 and less than 25,000 population; Indiana ranks second among the states with 59; Ohio has 48; New York and Texas have 47 each; California has 42 and Illinois 41.

Pennsylvania also leads in total circulations for this group of papers—2,794,-270,410. Ohio's are 2,322,040; New York, 188,852; Illinois, 158,079; Texas, 133,682; California, 113,340; Indiana, 84,262.

Group Number Four includes cities with populations of more than 25,000 and less than 50,000. In cities of this class there are published 74 morning, 181 evening and 86 Sunday newspapers, a total of 345. These papers have a combined circulation of 3,713,667. Thus the 345 newspapers in this group have a total circulation 465,370 in excess of the combined total of the 765 papers in Group Three. The combined advertising rate for this group is $10.243476, as compared with $13.1535767 for the papers in Group Three. This illustrates the general and perfectly sound rule that line rates are less per thousand of circulation in larger newspapers than in the smaller ones.

Reaching the Larger Cities

Group Number Five covers cities of more than 50,000 and less than 100,000 population. In cities of this class there are published a total of 191 morning, evening and Sunday papers, with a combined circulation of 3,278,402 and a joint advertising rate of $7.3400010 an agate line.

Group Number Six, applying to cities of more than 100,000 and less than 250,000 population, shows a total of 211 morning, evening and Sunday newspapers, with a combined circulation of 7,076,574 and a combined advertising rate of $13.2340007. This joint rate is but slightly larger than the rate charged in Group Three for papers having a total circulation of 3,248,299.

Group Number Seven includes cities with populations above 250,000 and less than 500,000. There are 115 morning, evening and Sunday newspapers in this group, with combined circulations of 7,284,133 and a joint advertising rate of $12.3565071.

Group Number Eight embraces cities between 500,000 and 1,000,000 population. There are 66 morning, evening and Sunday newspapers in this group, with a combined circulation of 7,300,-650 and a joint advertising rate of $10.6575002 an agate line.

Covering Metropolitan Markets

Group Number Nine includes all cities of more than 1,000,000 population. In these cities there are 81 morning, evening and Sunday newspapers published, with a total combined circulation of 11,-110,138 and a combined advertising rate of $18,7022852 an agate line. The total circulation of the 81 papers in these cities is 3,900,186 greater than the total circulations of the newspapers in Group Number Eight, while the average line rate is slightly higher, per thousand of circulation, including an exception to the general rule.

Under the section of Grand Totals in the Chart we find that there are 2,162 morning and evening papers and 308 Sunday issues in the United States.

The evening papers outnumber the morning issues more than three to one, the figures being: Morning, 806; evening, 1,656.

The morning papers have a combined circulation of 9,919,339; the evening papers, 18,023,960; the Sunday issues, 17,619,517.

Tremendous Circulation Totals

Thus the combined circulations of the morning and evening newspapers printed in the English language in the United States total 27,943,299; the Sunday issues being added bring the total circulation of the English-language daily and Sunday papers of the United States to 45,612,816.

The combined advertising rate of the morning papers of the United States is $23.1118855 an agate line.

The combined advertising rate of the evening papers of the United States is $44.4490272 an agate line.

The combined advertising rate of the Sunday papers of the United States—Sunday issues of dailies—is $39.3023030 an agate line.

The joint advertising rate for all of the morning, evening and Sunday

"The articles are exciting intense and wide-spread interest in this city"

—PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER

Mr. Vanderlip spent three months in an extensive study of European conditions.

He came to some startling conclusions.

Important adjustments must be made, in his judgment, if the present order of civilization is to endure.

Every phase of the economic disturbances now exciting the attention of all American newspaper readers has previously made its appearance in Europe.

In "What Happened to Europe," Mr. Vanderlip tells how the greatest political, financial and labor leaders of the allied nations are meeting the emergencies that face their countries.

Every employer, every merchant, every working man and woman in your city will find in "What Happened to Europe" a direct appeal to their keenest interest.

SMALL PAPERS ALREADY FEEL PINCH OF TIGHT NEWSPRINT MARKET

Available Supply Is Rapidly Disappearing or Has Vanished—International Paper Company Has Contracted for Capacity Until 1920—Shipments in July Exceeded Production

THE outstanding feature of developments in the newsprint market during the past week was the issuing of reports by the Newsprint Service Bureau, on 39 mills showing that shipments exceeded production by 1,204 tons for the month of July.

The report credits the companies with producing 157,074 tons and with shipping 158,278 tons. The average daily production of newsprint for the same mills for the month amounted to 99.6 per cent of their average daily output during the three months of their greatest production in 1918.

Exports for July Were 7½ Per Cent of Production

In the past July has been one of the low months for consumption. During that month it has been the practice of newspapers to lay in a surplus stock to meet winter needs, but shipping reports this year show that conditions were reversed.

Exports of newsprint to countries outside of North America, for July were 7½ per cent of total production, or less than for the same month last year. Import reports on pulp and pulp wood for June show that we purchased 407 tons from England and 20 tons from the Netherlands.

In its survey for the month of July the News Print Service Bureau in the monthly bulletin just issued, says:

"Production by the United States mills during the first seven months of 1919 was 38,416 tons or 6 per cent greater than during the same months in 1918. Canadian production during this period exceeded that of the same seven months in 1918 by 23,348 tons, or 5 per cent, making the combined production of the 39 reporting Companies 61,764 tons, or 6 per cent greater than in the first seven months of 1918.

"The United States mills shipped 3,675 tons and the Canadian mills 13,551 tons more in the first seven months of 1919 than in the correspondent period of 1918, making combined shipments 17,226 tons or 2 per cent more.

"Stocks during July decreased 1,151 tons at United States mill points and increased 298 tons at Canadian mills, making total stocks 933 tons less on July 31, 1919, than on June 30. The total of 34,491 tons on hand at all mills July 31 amounted to slightly more than five days' production."

Small Papers Feel Pinch

Many small papers are already feeling the pinch of a tight market, according to reports reaching Editor & Publisher and at least one paper in a plea for newsprint has stated that it will be compelled to suspend unless a supply for immediate needs is secured.

The available supply is rapidly disappearing or is already gone. The International Paper Company is completely sold out for their entire production up to January 1, 1920.

Large purchases of surplus stocks at prices ranging around the 5 cents a pound mark have been rumored and generally credited during the past week.

Regardless of figures which show that excessive demand is rapidly eating up available supply an easy feeling has been created in some circles by reports of new paper mill projects, incorporations and improvements at old mills. In speaking of this an authority said:

"Publishers should not be carried away by false hopes. Many new mills are contemplated and great improvements are under consideration, but we must not get away from the fact that a 50-ton machine does not begin turning out newsprint in a few days after the order is placed. A 50-ton capacity machine weighs 700-tons. Two years is the usual time allowed for building and then an additional 6 months must be allowed before it reaches the point of perfection where it will turn out news print."

Blames Government Regulation

J. A. Bothwell, president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, in a recent much-quoted signed article that appeared in the Canadian edition of the New York Sun of August 12, said:

"It is true that the domestic consumption of newsprint has increased materially in the past six months. Advertising has expanded very considerably. Newspapers are no longer conserving their supplies as they were doing during the war. New publications are springing up and the publishing business was never more prosperous or more active, to judge from outward appearances. But that does not mean that any one is going to be deprived of paper. There has always been sufficient to meet the demand, and probably always will be.

"Expansion of the newsprint industry has been unduly handicapped by obstacles put in its way, such as Government control of prices, etc. For these the manufacturers are in nowise to blame. How can an industry be expected to expand when it does not know what price it is receiving for its output? Government prices fixed as applicable to paper sold throughout 1918, are still a matter for judicial decision in both Canada and the United States, and both manufacturers and the consumers are left in ignorance as to what they ultimately will be. Government regulation in Canada had the immediate and certain effect of shutting off plans to increase the output of paper, as there is ample sworn evidence in the various records to prove. If this has resulted in a shortage of paper and higher prices, those who invoked Government regulations are responsible—not the manufacturers."

No Price Reductions

In another place he said:

"As to prices, it is true, as stated, that conditions do not favor an immediate reduction. Industrial demands, the rise in transportation rates and the increased cost of raw materials are all opposed to it. On the other hand the majority of the manufacturers are not disposed to take undue advantage of the situation. Publishers who are willing to be fair and reasonable are having no difficulty in securing fair and reasonable contracts. Some contracts already made for next year's supply show no appreciable advance over this year's prices.

"Certainly few, if any, of the larger manufacturers desire to see a runaway market with prices advanced beyond all reason, nor will they do anything to help bring about so undesirable a situation."

In discussing a recent article appearing in Editor & Publisher, Mr. Bothwell said:

"The opinions of newspaper publishers of the experience and standing of S. S. Carvalho are certainly entitled to the utmost consideration, and when he says that an increase of 100 per cent in the paper manufacturers' costs for labor, the doubling of the price of his coal, of which it takes practically one ton to produce a ton of paper, the added expense of wood gathering due to the more extended areas from which it has to be brought, and the fact that the foreign markets are offering to pay almost twice what domestic consumers are now paying for their paper must inevitably result in higher prices for domestic consumers, no sensible man will desire to dispute him.

Urges Conservation

"Mr. Carvalho urges conservation and the cutting out of waste as a proper means to meet the situation. Certainly waste and unnecessary hoarding will not help. Sound business would also suggest that waste is not justifiable under any circumstances, but it is for the consumers themselves to define what is waste and to take whatever helps may be necessary to forestall it.

"In the various Government inquiries into the news print industry the manufacturers have made attempts to show that all publishers were not making careful use of their raw material, but publishers themselves resented any such suggestion coming from the manufacturers. They have always maintained that they know their own business best and undoubtedly they do. Statements, however, which represent the manufacturers as indifferent to the situation and to the possible difficulties that await publishers in getting their paper supplies do the manufacturers an absolute injustice. The only criticism the manufacturers have to offer is that the policies pursued by certain newspaper publishers in the United States and Canada during the last three years in fighting about Government regulation of the industry are reacting upon the publishers, since without such regulations the Canadian end of the industry at least would now be in a much better position to supply the increasing demand for paper."

Within the last few weeks production has been increased 50 tons by putting an additional machine in operation at the mill of the Brompton Pulp and Paper Company at East Angus, Que. The Spanish River Pulp and Paper Mills, Ltd., have orders in for two 50-ton machines for their mills at Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. From an authoritive source Editor & Publisher learns that these machines may be in operation in about eight months.

This will increase the available supply by July 1 next year 150 tons and —adaptability

What manufacturer has not had the problem of "spotty" sales; of lightning movement in certain sections and stagnation in others?

The diagnosis usually gives you the reason and sometimes the solution. But occasionally certain local conditions make it impossible to conduct a profitable business.

Now if you cannot show a profit, why advertise there?

Conversely, if local appeal, a treatment different from any other in the country, will enable you to show a profit, why don't you concentrate there?

Through national mediums part of your advertising has at least two obvious chances of going to waste: inadequate distribution, wrong appeal.

Through newspapers you stop advertising leaks. You confine your campaign to channels of distribution. You change your copy appeal to meet local conditions.

A newspaper campaign is the obvious and logical adjunct to your sales organization.

NEW YORK STATE

A MARKET FOR MERCHANDISE

HERE is a real story of a real advertising campaign, told by an agency man in New York City, whose name, for obvious reasons had better not be mentioned.

A MANUFACTURER of a floor covering was induced to trade mark his product and then, naturally, to advertise it, thereby popularizing it and creating a permanent market.

THE agency man who tells the story took hold of the proposition. He was given a large, juicy appropriation and proceeded to buy pages in many of the standard magazines—not only to buy pages, but to have colored plates made, and finish up the job brown in every way.

THIS campaign ran for nearly a year, and was scheduled for an indefinite run, and salesmen, armed with proofs and copies of the advertisements, went out on the road, looking for business—which they did not find.

THEY were asked, in almost every instance: "What stores in New York have this merchandise on their floors?"

THIS was an embarassing question, for it was a fact that the goods were merely "sampled" in the stores in New York, and there were no real goods on the floors, and merchants in other places did not want to handle the goods unless they had "made good" in New York.

ALMOST every expedient had been tried to induce New York merchants to handle these goods—but New York merchants argued that there was no demand for them, and unless a demand appeared they would not stock them.

FINALLY New York daily newspapers were used. They were not treated as well as the magazines, to be sure—but they were used.

AND the demand was created, and the merchants stocked the goods, and the traveling men went into the territory and sold the goods because they had "made good" in New York, and they had made good in New York because the demand was created by daily newspaper advertising, and the merchants were alive to the demand and stocked the goods—and that is the answer.

NEW YORK daily newspapers can do it. They have done it a thousand times. They are doing it all the time. As a well known moving company advertises we say: "When the side lines of advertising won't, daily newspapers will."

ANOTHER thing this story points out is that, once you win a market in New York the rest of the country is easy to win.

THESE New York daily newspapers can and will open the door for your goods if you will give them a chance.

LIVE OAK OF HARTFORD TAKES UP NEW YORK AT BUFFALO

WHAT is a loss to the advertising field of Hartford is Buffalo's gain in the transfer of Walter A. Allen to the latter city to take charge of the office opened there by the Manter Company, of which he is secretary, for as president of the Charter Oak Ad Club he played a big part in the live activities that have helped keep the Connecticut city up and doing things.

Walter A. Allen

Mr. Allen's connection with the Manternach Agency dates back to 1913 when he joined the organization as manager of sales. His business experience started in 1902 when he gave up farm life at the age of 18 to enter a strictly commercial pursuit. During the period of ten years, he was connected with several large organizations including Field Work for Armour & Co., The Hartford Rubber Works Company (U. S. Tire Company), etc.

Mr. Allen has made a life study of selling and advertising. His experience is very practical, including work with manufacturers and then in the more strictly advertising business. He is, therefore, admirably fitted for his position of president of the Charter Oak Ad Club to which he was elected in 1918. Prior to that time he had served in the position as secretary to the club.

As secretary and then president of the Charter Oak Ad Club, Mr. Allen was largely responsible for the very active participation of the Ad Club in war work. The club handled advertising and publicity campaign for the entire state of Connecticut on Liberty Loan drives, War Stamp drives, etc.

"Automatic Newsboys" Now Serve Philadelphia

Slot Machines at Street Corners Deliver Copies of Public Ledger and Evening Ledger—No "Blanks"

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 20.—Philadelphians may now purchase the Public Ledger and the Evening Public Ledger from "automatic newsboys" at various street corners throughout the city. Two cents dropped into a slot machine releases a copy of either of the newspapers. The machines are placed only at such corners as are now served regularly by "newsies," or which do not have newsstands.

One reason for installing the slot machines, according to announcement by the two newspapers, is that frequently the newsboys quit business early in the evening and often the newsstands close up soon after sundown.

In the case of the Public Ledger—the morning newspaper—only the local edition is put into the slot. With the Evening Public Ledger, however, changes are made as each edition appears "on the street."

The papers may be had for two cents only. If any other coin is dropped into the apparatus it drops out again. When the papers in the machine are exhausted, money dropped into them is automatically returned.

The machines are painted yellow.

Win Contest to Control Western Labor News

International Union Members Oust Editor Who Represented Their Rivals and Put Circulation Manager in Charge

WINNIPEG, Aug. 20.—A fight for the possession of the Western Labor News formerly the official organ of the Winnipeg Trades and Labor Council, is one of the aftermaths of the Winnipeg general strike, and a phase of the struggle between the international unions and the One Big Union.

At a recent meeting of the Trades and Labor Council, which the international element declares was "packed," the O. B. U. carried a vote to take control of the council and all its property. The international men fought the transfer and won out.

It was held that the O. B. U. had no legal right to anything belonging to the Trades and Labor Council, which is a branch of works under the authority of the Dominion Trades Congress, with headquarters at Ottawa.

The Rev. William Ivens, one of the leaders in the recent strike, and a disciple of the O. B. U., has been dismissed as editor of the Labor News, and Alderman W. B. Simpson, formerly circulation manager, is in charge editorially until the status of the paper is definitely settled and a new editor appointed. In the meantime the One Big Union faction is preparing to issue a bulletin of its own.

The Western Labor News claimed a circulation of 30,000 as a weekly. During the strike period it was published as a daily.

WAGES UP AT ALBANY

Old Contract Allowed to Lapse by Mutual Agreement

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—The Pressmen's Union No. 23 of Albany, which includes about 40 employes of local newspapers, has agreed to a new contract with the publishers, which calls for an increase in pay of $5 a week for pressmen and $4 a week for assistants. They will get an additional raise on January 1 of $2 a week for all except female employes, who will get $1.

J. S. Clark, secretary-treasurer of the Birmingham (Ala.) News, is in New York City for two weeks on business and pleasure and is stopping at the St. James Hotel. He is accompanied by Mrs. Clark

Brooklyn has about 400,000 homes.

What have you to sell that goes into a home?

How many of these 400,000 Brooklyn homes contain your product now?

Here is a concentrated market, and all of the Standard Union circulation is concentrated in Brooklyn.

British News Agencies Busy in South America

John F. Barry Sees Need for More Extensive Service There by the Press Associations of the United States

John F. Barry, special staff correspondent of the New York Commercial in South America, writes from Para, Brazil, concerning the efficiency of the British system of news propaganda in that country. He points out the great amount of news matter furnished to the Brazilian papers from London, all of it written from the British angle.

Telegraphic dispatches have lately been specially emphasizing the dominance of England in the development of the airplane for commercial purposes, says Mr. Barry, while the reader is naturally disposed to believe that the United States is doing nothing at all in this line.

Mr. Barry notes the good work accomplished—although as yet only in a small way, comparatively—by the American press associations. He believes that the extension of this work, through which news of the United States will be made available to all South American newspapers, will prove to be the most vital factor in the extension of our trade to South America.

COX ATTACKS FOOD PROFITEERS

Ohio Governor-Editor Wants 2,000,000 Pounds of Food Seized

CLEVELAND, Aug. 20.—Governor James M. Cox, whose two newspapers, the Dayton News and the Springfield News, have been denouncing food profiteering, has asked United States Attorney-General Palmer to take steps to seize more than 2,000,000 pounds of meats alleged to be held in storage in this city in violation of law.

Many daily newspapers in other cities of Ohio are conducting campaigns against food profiteering, the subject furnishing more live-news copy just now than anything else.

The Fort Worth (Texas) Star Telegram has begun excavating for a new building, which will cost $400,000 and which it will occupy exclusively. About $200,000 will be spent for equipment, including two high-speed Goss octuple presses and complete stereotyping equipment.

newspapers of the United States is $106,764,2236 an agate line.

Only Sunday issues of daily newspapers are included in the enumeration of Sunday newspapers in the United States.

Presents Unanswerable Arguments

This chart for space-buyers affords, in the astoundine figures it presents, the strongest possible brief in behalf of newspaper advertising—showing the intensive way in which newspapers cover every market unit, the adaptability of newspaper campaigns to localized national advertising and the amazingly low rates at which the newspapers sell advertising space.

Used in connection with the detailed lists of newspapers, with their circulations and rates, contained in EDITOR & PUBLISHER for August 14, the task of making estimates for prospective advertisers on campaigns of any character or extent is made comparatively easy. The value of this chart and of the detailed lists to agencies is therefore apparent.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER, working in cooperation with Barbour's Advertising Rate Sheets, Inc., presents this matter to its readers—the space-buyers, advertising agencies, national advertisers and newspaper publishers of the United States—with full realization of its immediate value and helpfulness to them. The task has been done in line with the policy of EDITOR & PUBLISHER to give the fullest measure of service—"a measure pressed down and running over." There is one element of selfish interest involved—the knowledge that "we grow as we serve."

SMALL PAPERS ALREADY FEEL PINCH

will put back on the market an amount of newsprint equal to that lost since the Niagara Mill of the International Paper Company has been closed. The Niagara Mill discontinued the manufacture of newsprint in February, 1918, when it went on war work and it is understood that the International has no present intention of returning this mill to newsprint production on account of the high cost of operation at that point.

Price Brothers & Company are understood to have placed orders for two 50-ton machines with an English firm. EDITOR & PUBLISHER learns from a well-informed source that work on these machines has not yet been started.

The International Paper Company has started work on a 200-ton mill at Three Rivers, Que., which may be ready for operation in two years. A 100-ton mill at Port Arthur, Ont., is being discussed for possible promotion.

Paper Mill, under a Washington date line in the issue of August 16, said:

"Outstanding facts in the newsprint situation today as Government officials in Washington view the matter show conclusively that the price of this commodity is bound to take another step up the ladder of high prices.

"First, in the cycle of events is the Canadian proposal of an embargo on wood pulp from Canada. There is an embargo now from Crown lands.

"Second, the proposal of the United States to repeal the Reciprocity agreement between the United States and Canada.

"Third, the demand of Europe for newsprint paper withholding from the American market Norwegian and Swedish exportation of wood pulp.

"Fourth, the absolute destruction of the extensive Russian spruce and hemlock forests, taking care of the European market for newsprint supplies and the necessary absorption of the Scandinavian output.

"Fifth, and perhaps more serious, is the growing scarcity of paper making materials in the United States.

"While the timber supply in the United States, if properly developed, would be entirely adequate for all demands of the paper consumer in the United States, the Forestry Division of the Agriculture Department predicts that within twelve to twenty years, the near market supplies will be entirely exhausted. This estimate is premised on the present consumption for both timber purposes and for supplies to paper manufacturers."

Mexican Press Makes Protest

The newspapers of Mexico have made vigorous protest against the invasion of their country by our military forces, sent in to capture the bandits who captured the U. S. aviators and held them for ransom. El Universal, of Mexico City, has discontinued its English-language section until such time as the American troops are withdrawn.

MANY WOMEN ATTEND N.E.A. CONVENTION

Took Leading Part in Discussions—Their Place as Factor Is Established—Mrs. Mabel Shaw Commends Work to Other Women

SEATTLE, Aug. 20.—One of the outstanding features of the annual convention of the National Editorial Association, held in the Pacific Northwest, was the turn out of women editors and publishers and the demonstration by their presence in the party of their importance as a factor in newspaper work. Never before in the history of the association have so many women editors attended a convention.

"Speaking generally and not specifically, I believe that women can be very successful in newspaper work," said Mrs. Mabel Shaw, owner and publisher of the Evening Telegraph, of Dixon, Ill., one of the 42 delegates from that State to the convention. "It is a work that will thoroughly absorb a woman's interest, and she will throw her whole soul in it."

Woman Can Be Power

Mrs. Shaw insists that a woman at the helm of a newspaper can be just as forceful a power in a community as a man, if she has the right spirit.

Mrs. Shaw has published the Evening Telegraph since the death of her husband, fifteen years ago.

Another interesting woman delegate to the convention is Mrs. Frank Edgecombe, of The Signal, of Geneva, Neb. Mrs. Edgecombe is the chief associate of her blind husband, who, though without sight, is the active publisher of the paper.

Women Attending

Other women delegates to the convention include Miss Patricia Studstill, of the Oddfellow, of Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. Fred W. Allsopp, of the Gazette, of Little Rock, Ark.; Mrs. I. G. Stafford, of Sifting News, Idaho Springs, Colo.; Mrs. H. E. Hogue, of the Herald, Eaton, Colo.; Miss Marcia Black and Mrs. W. L. Black, of the Daily News, Elgin, Ill.; Mrs. R. L. Davis, of The Register, Mt. Vernon, Ill.; Miss E. Alvord, of the Western Monthly, Chicago; Mrs. C. Woodring, of the Daily Journal, Peru, Ind.; Mrs. W. W. Alkens, of the Daily Star, Franklin, Ind.; Mrs. John Mead, of The Monitor, Fort Scott, Kan.; Mrs. W. A. Buckingham, of the American Pen Women, of Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. Amanda L. Xanders, Columbus, Neb.; Mrs. D. R. Carlson, of the News-Tribune, Towner, N. Da.; Mildred Donahue, of the Enterprise, Palmyra, Wis.; Miss Hazel Hobart, of the News, Woonsocket, S. D., and Mrs. C. N. START WORK ON NEW PLANT

Three Rivers Mill Should Be Completed in Three Years

MONTREAL, Aug. 20.—Work has been started on the new plant of the International Paper Company at Three Rivers, Que. This will cost in the neighborhood of $4,000,000 and will have an output of some 200 tons of newsprint per day. Now that ground has been broken the work is to be rushed with all possible speed and it is expected that the structure will be up by the end of the year. The plant will employ about 3,000 men and will be in operation in about three years.

The International Paper Company has absorbed the St. Lawrence Lumber Company, which has been carrying on operations at Three Rivers for some time.

Wins Prize with Essay

J. L. McCool, who has charge of the foreign advertising of the St. Paul Daily News, won the second prize for the best essay on the subject "The Advantages of Home Ownership," in the contest for a legend for the Victory arch erected in St. Paul in honor of soldiers returning from France.

CARNEGIE DECLINED EDITORIAL JOB

Asked to Act as Editor of Pittsburgh Post For a Day or a Week, to Demonstrate His Ideas of Newspaper Making, He Begged to Be Excused

By Joseph S. Myers.
Ohio State University, Columbus.

The death of Andrew Carnegie reminds me of a meeting I had with the library-giving Scot more than a decade ago.

While I was managing editor of the Pittsburgh Post I conceived a brilliant idea, among others, please remember, and proceeded to act upon it, as a good managing editor should do.

Mr. Carnegie had shaken the dust of Pittsburgh from his feet, as many another steel millionaire has done after he has made his pile, and was living in his new mansion in Fifth avenue, New York. In those days Mr. Carnegie occasionally returned to Pittsburgh, where he was welcomed by his young partners whom he had transformed into millionaires, and by the reporters with whom he was on far better terms than most men of his class are. It is true that he had seldom had much of importance to communicate, but he liked to say something about his pets, the Carnegie Institute and the Carnegie Technical school, preparatory to giving them a few more millions in U. S. Steel 5 per cent bonds. Several times he had jokingly said that he would like to be a newspaper man, and it was even reported that he was going to be the angel for an endowed newspaper that would revolutionize journalism.

Here is where my idea came in.

The Big Idea

I would ask him to edit the Post for a day or week, or longer, to put into effect some of his notions as to how a newspaper should be edited. I wired him at once asking for an appointment, without, of course, telling the dark purpose. The answer came promptly, fixing the time for noon of the following Thursday.

After walking around the block two or three times so as to be punctual I was admitted and told to wait in a small room at the side of the front door until I could be announced to the laird. From there I was shown to a large room, the library, and a moment later Mr. Carnegie emerged from an adjoining room, greeting me cordially and inviting me into his office, or den or sanctum, another large room. After a few questions and answers about dear old Pittsburgh, I told him of my brilliant idea.

It would be easy here to put into quotation marks our conversation, if I were dealing in fiction, which I am not. When you read a conversation reported after several years you may be sure somebody is faking.

He Liked the Idea, But—

The great little man listened attentively with a knowing smile, and when I had finished, admitted that he may have said once upon a time that he would have liked being an editor, but he had not thought seriously of rising to such heights. The experiment now suggested to him would be edifying and profitable, no doubt, but he would not be able to accept the invitation; he was busy, his health was none too good, perhaps some other time, and so forth. As it was not a time for arguing and coaxing, not much more was said, although I received the clear impression that the ironmaster was pleased, not to say flattered, for you know every man has a sneaking idea that he can edit a newspaper better than the man who is on the job.

As I arose Mr. Carnegie remarked that he always took a constitutional about this time of day, and asked me if I would like to walk with him. Of course I would. As we passed through the library I made some remark about his home, perhaps it was something about the pipe organ. Anyhow I got an invitation to see the house, and of course I praised his paintings, the magnificent dining room, or rather banquet hall, the organ.

We walked for half an hour through Central Park, my companion, of course, doing the talking. He spoke freely of the Carnegie Steel Company and its sale to the Steel Corporation. He spoke, too, of how he had built the Bessemer Railroad because his company could not get satisfactory freight rates to the lakes. Then he talked real estate, pointing out to me parcels of expensive land he had bought and sold at a profit, certainly.

"Dutch Boy Painter's" Fame-Maker Once Sold Books

O. C. Harn

WHENEVER you see a reproduction of the "Dutch Boy Painter," it is perfectly permissible to think of O. C. Harn. He originated the Boy, his business being at that time, and now, to see that the National Lead Company is properly and effectively advertised.

Mr. Harn has had splendid preparatory experience for an advertising manager's work. Born in Dayton, Ohio, he was educated in Ohio Wesleyan University and then went to Cornell University, graduating from the Ithaca institution in 1894.

He had had some experience in business, having clerked it in a book store when he was a boy, but after he got his sheepskin he aimed higher, and covered a reporter's billet on the Cleveland Leader. The Cleveland Press wanted a good telegraph editor some time after that, and Harn got the job. Subsequently he edited the Interstate Architect and Builder and the Inland Grocer. That was the end of his editorial work.

He became advertising manager for the H. J. Heinze Company, but in 1905 took his training and his advertising activities to the National Lead Company.

He was one of the organizers of the Association of National Advertising Managers, the predecessor of the A. N. A., and its second president. For two terms he was president of the Technical Publicity Association, and more recently was elected chairman of the National Advertising Commission.

When the Government needed the services of advertising men during the war, Mr. Harn became a member of the Division of Advertising of the Committee on Public Information. The efficient work he did on that patriotic body will always be remembered by his associates.

ILLINOIS

The population of Illinois, 6,152,257, is six percent of the population of the United States.

Out of this, 76.7 percent are native born whites; 21.4 percent foreign born and 1.9 percent negroes.

Illinois, as a manufacturing state, ranks away up toward the top of the heap—as a railroad state, it is the king pin and as a farming state, the Illinois farms invoice higher per acre than do the farms of any other state.

From Chicago on the north to Cairo on the South; from Danville on the East to Quincy on the West; Illinois is made up of 58,980 square miles of "Business Opportunity."

In manufacturing, alone, Illinois producers merchandise to the tune of $2,000,000,000.

URGES PUBLISHERS TO OPPOSE LICENSE BILLS

The axe would be slashing at the root of the tree of advertising immediately.

The war-time slump in revenue from railroad advertising due to national control would fade into insignificance before a nation of partly licensed, partly nationalized business. Not alone for selfish reasons should the publishing and advertising business oppose the license principle; from the pilot-house of business, editorial and advertising men can readily see that our nation cannot afford in this period of reconstruction and striving for world markets, to give up the tried and tested methods of large-scale competitive merchandising lubricated by the oil of advertising in exchange for wartime bureaucratic control of business.

A Muzzle for the Press

Not only a crippling loss of revenue and a denial of the great business service of advertising would result to the publishing business, but a license to every publication would be the most perfect muzzle for the press ever invented by republic or monarchy. Under the license regime, as so far explained, the editorial, news and advertising departments, the subscription and advertising rates, the wages and salaries, the postal habits and methods must all conform to the Washington idea.

The leaders of American thought, political and commercial, appear to have been tending away from the petty tactics of hampering big business merely because it is big. Taught by the war that powerful nation-wide business organization enables armies to go over the top to victory, taught by the national buying and selling pools of foreign business which American firms have had to fight single-handed, Congress recently passed the Webb-Pomerene Act, the first law passed contrary to the Sherman Act since 1890. By this act, numerous business men with limited individual capital, can combine into an association and increase their financial power.

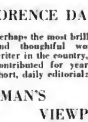
Must Move with Events

Secretary Redfield, before the United States Chamber of Commerce recently deplored the suspicious attitude of the public toward big business and declared the Sherman law out of date. John Franklin Fort, ex-governor of New Jersey, now a member of the Federal Trade Commission, in the July Scribners says of the Webb-Pomerene Act:

"Let us give thanks that it is there (on the statute books)" and again, "All business in domestic and foreign trade should be fostered and left as unhampered and unrestricted as possible."

As men of the business world, as well as citizens, we must read affairs in their setting. The license principle, applied to all business may appear too obviously a stringent war measure, too absurd to be seriously considered in time of peace—read in the light of contemporary events, it needs a different interpretation. Not only do we have the testimony of the President of the United States that he believes in "permanent, similar (to food control act) provisions with regard to all goods destined for interstate commerce," but we have the demands of two million railroad men for part-nationalization, part labor-ownership of the entire rail system of the country.

It hardly behooves American leadership to allow lawmakers, unusually obsequious this one year out of four, besieged by a public goaded into exasperation by the high price level, to force the nation to adopt as a temporary expedient a harmful principle which may later catch the popular fancy and in these times of unrest and indefinite dissatisfaction, form a Nemagogue's tool to cripple our economic future.



As Nicholas Murray Butler said recently: "To put the matter bluntly, there is under way in the United States at the present time, a definite and determined movement to change our representative republic into a socialistic democracy."

Leaders of public opinion must recognize this reactionary principle of licensed industry for what it is and may become; must definitely oppose reactionary legislative experiments that tamper with our industrial machinery in time of national crisis; must teach the public the difference between business bigness and badness; must find a method of controlling badness and stimulating bigness in industry—instead of applying the wet blanket of license over both the just and the unjust.

Daily Mail Starts Campaign for American Comforts in English Homes

LONDON, Aug. 20.—American household efficiency and comfort devices are becoming so popular in England that the London Daily Mail has offered 2,500 prizes to architects and the public for plans and suggestions to revolutionize the interiors of antiquely planned homes.

Even the American custom of heating houses with steam, formerly scorned in England, is making headway here, principally because of the dearth of servants and their antipathy to carrying coal to top floors. The Daily Mail says that 80 per cent of the fuel used in grates is wasted and reports that in a recent efficiency test a maid walked nearly a mile to make and serve a pot of tea.

Bargain Tire Dealers Often Trap Unwary

Only Safe Procedure Is to Buy Products of Known Quality, A. A. C. of W. Bulletin Cautions Motorists

The unknown dealer in unknown tires and automobile accessories, who is here today and gone to seek greener pastures tomorrow, or who offers his "bargains" by mail from a far-away city, is in his glory at this season, says a bulletin from the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. He is working night and day upon the principle of "gittin' plenty when he's gittin'."

There is more fraud, and therefore more loss, in connection with "bargain" automobile tires than in relation to other needs of the motor car owner, says the bulletin, because a layman cannot tell from the appearance of an automobile tire whether it is good.

The only safe procedure, it is suggested by the Association, is to buy a tire of known quality. The manufacturer of a tire which has stood the test of time cannot afford to put his name on a tire which will not give service.

PRAISES COUNTRY PRESS

A. A. A. A. Executive Committee Telegraps Greetings to N. E. A.

SEATTLE, Aug. 20.—In sending telegraphic greetings to the annual convention of the National Editorial Association, the executive committee of the American Association of Advertising Agents, said:

"We desire to record with your convention the belief of the organized body of ethical, creative, constructive advertising agencies of America that the country press is a promotion and a defense of national strength fundamentally essential to the progress and maintenance of the general welfare of the country. Every truly national undertaking, either social or economic, must have the aid of the country press to attain to proper success."

Harold McGrath Visits Old Shop

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 18.—Harold McGrath, novelist, became Harold McGrath, reporter, for a few minutes recently, when he visited the Knickerbocker Press editorial department, where he broke into the newspaper game. Several staff men who were in the employ of the paper when McGrath was a cub, greeted him and he was honor guest at an informal dinner given by his friends afterward.

What West Virginia Supplies to You—

You may not know it, but West Virginia mines probably furnished the coal you burn in your home and your factory—and the miners are NOT foreigners. They are Americans whose families live near the mines and they read the West Virginia daily newspapers.

The crisp water cress you enjoy so with your meals in the country's best hotels and clubs probably came from West Virginia—even the beauty spots here produce wealth.

The great steel industry comes to West Virginia for the high grade limestone—hundreds of carloads a day—that is used in fluxing. The best steel you buy is made "best" by the best limestone from the great quarries that in West Virginia are operated by natives whose families read the local daily newspapers.

The apples, the peaches, the apple products and vinegar you use on your table—if you get the best—come from West Virginia and by the price you pay, you know the orchardists here are making big money. They read the West Virginia local daily newspapers.

The water power from the mountain streams of this "little mountain state" operate hundreds of factories that supply your silk hose and the woolens for your clothes. The factory workers are spenders—they read the local daily newspapers.

These readers buy what they see advertised in these local daily newspapers that they read.

CONSERVATION AS A POLICY, NOT MERELY AS AN IDEAL

FOR the first time within the recollection of men in the newsprint industry it has not been possible during the summer months this year to accumulate surplus stocks to meet the usual fall and winter needs of the newspapers. Shipments, for three months past, have been in excess of production. Mill stocks are lower than ever before—below the line of safety.

In face of this situation, and with the assurance of a very great volume of fall and winter advertising, publishers should cooperate in strictly enforcing sensible conservation policies.

This does not mean that advertising revenues are to be ruthlessly sacrificed, or that worth-while feature matter should be cut out. It does not mean that we shall have to sacrifice the actual value-factors in our newspapers.

It does mean that paper waste must be stopped. It means that the readoption of the old system of returns, even on a limited scale, is unthinkable. Returned copies of a newspaper represent sheer waste of newsprint—that basic commodity without a supply of which a newspaper ceases to be. To adopt this old and wasteful policy, the need for which does not now exist, is to court disaster. There is a higher consideration involved here than that of meeting the suicidal competition of some rival newspaper—the consideration of the common good and the public interest. That should be controlling. A waster should not be permitted to force his own policies upon his competitors.

Happily, there is no general tendency among publishers to revert to the return privilege. A few instances have been noted, and they should be promptly corrected. The old virus in the blood of circulation men—prompting them to adopt any and every measure for capturing the last possible reader —was pretty thoroughly eliminated during the war period. If it shows signs of renewed activity, the common-sense curative should be applied.

A BIG IDEA WINNING FAVOR

WHEN the proposition of R. D. Blumenfeld, editor of the London Express, for an interchange of staff men, for periods of a year, between British and American newspapers was first made through the columns of EDITOR AND PUBLISHER it must be confessed that it did not win immediate approval on the part of our newspaper executives. It appealed at once to some, but others looked upon it as merely an idealistic plan, not likely to be seriously undertaken.

The leading British publishers, however, acted promptly on the suggestion, and proceeded to name a committee to formulate details. In a recent issue of EDITOR AND PUBLISHER a distinguished British news-paperman, J. R. Scott, of the Manchester Guardian, who has been visiting New York, expressed his cordial approval of the idea and proposed that the plan be made to include men in the business departments as well.

That a favorable public opinion is developing among our publishers is shown by the messages of approval printed in EDITOR AND PUBLISHER from such leaders of the American press as Melville E. Stone, Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Marcellus E. Foster, Hon. Guy U. Hardy, Herbert L. Bridgeman, R. A. Crothers, W. H. Dodge, Clark Howell and J. K. Ohl.

This plan of Mr. Blumenfeld's was conceived in broad vision. It takes into account the new conditions in the world, calling for better understanding and closer unity between English-speaking peoples. It offers no immediate revenue gains to those who participate in it. But it does offer an opportunity to build for the future welfare of mankind—to set in motion those forces which shall be potent for future peace and concord among the nations.

IN his comment on the newsprint situation in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Paul Patterson, of the Baltimore Sun, speaks of certain newspapers "going back to the return privilege." "Going back" is the proper phraseology. And in a time when the only safe road is the one that leads forward!

TIMELY SERVICE

THE three-pages wide tabulation by States and market classifications, based on population and circulations of circulations and advertising rates of the English-language daily newspapers of the country, prepared for EDITOR & PUBLISHER by Barbour's advertising Rate Sheets and published as a supplement with this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, contains such obvious factors of value to space-buyers that the need for comment on this head is negligible. Needless to say it is like all "E. & P." and "R. A. R. S." Service Features—close to 100%. Indeed, so confident are we of the accuracy of Mr. Barbour's work that we will pay $1 to any one pointing out an error in it.

This service-feature is presented at a time when it will prove especially helpful to those who are planning fall and winter advertising campaigns in the newspapers. Such campaigns are now in the making. The rate men in the agencies are unusually busy. Market units are being studied more closely than ever before. Lists of newspapers to be used are being prepared with care as to their adaptability to the selling campaigns in hand.

The relation which a newspaper bears to a market unit—a city or section—is a subject for close analysis by space-buyers. It is a subject on which they welcome authoritative information—not mere claims, which no longer exercise their old spell. The facts as to circulations and rates of newspapers—supplied by EDITOR & PUBLISHER in this and previous issues—are highly important, of course. They serve space-buyers as a means by which to visualize fundamentals.

It remains for the publishers of newspapers which dominate their fields—or which have in their communities special prestige and influence with the people—to give to space-buyers for national advertisers that intimate information which it is impossible to carry in statistical tables. Publishers are sometimes inclined to take too much for granted. They know the reasons why their papers may not be overlooked in campaigns of localized national advertising; their local merchants know, and their readers know. But space-buyers for national advertisers may not know, or give proper weight, to these reasons. They are in a mood to listen. They want the facts. They want to be able to appraise the elements of value in every newspaper which is available for selling service to them.

Publishers, therefore, have before them an opportunity for advertising their newspapers to buyers of space in a constructive way—giving to national advertisers in detail the information about their newspapers which those advertisers are eager to get and to consider. This is the new era in advertising —in which facts count large. It is a time when the old attitude of stand-patism is no longer impressive.

Buyers of advertising, nowadays, expect that those who have space to sell shall themselves utilize advertising in selling it.

STANDARD OIL ADVERTISING

ARTHUR BRISBANE, in his widely printed column, "To-day," intimates that newspaper criticism of Standard Oil and the Rockefeller interests has been tempered—and, in some instances stilled—through the generous distribution of Rockefeller advertising. He mentions particularly "Nujol" advertising.

It is hard to take Mr. Brisbane seriously in this attack upon the essential integrity of the press. And it is still harder to see what public interest is served by this brilliant writer's attempt to attempt to destroy the confidence of the people in their newspapers.

Would Mr. Brisbane have his public believe that our newspapers, for the most part, are for sale—so far as their editorial principles and public obligations are concerned—to any rich man who desires to muzzle them through buying advertising space in their pages?

If this were true the cause of democracy in our land would be lost. It is not true, of course. It has never been true. It never will be true.

There are, certainly weak and venal publishers, a few of them in every country in the world, who strive to use their newspapers as mere instruments of private greed or indirect blackmail. Every industry and every profession is cursed with some men of this type. They make the indictment general, as thoughtless critics sometimes do, it quite as foolish as to charge a whole people with crime.

Advertisers in newspapers buy space in which to develop markets for their goods. They do not thus purchase immunity from criticism. This is assured through but one course—living and acting in such a way that criticism is not justified.

Corrupt newspapers would be quite as great a menace to the public good as corrupt courts. Americans know that the charge of corruption will not hold against either. To utter such a charge is an offense not to be lightly overlooked.

THE GOOD SHIP, "EDITOR"

THE U. S. Shipping Board has launched, at Seattle, a 9,600-ton freighter, named "The Editor," in honor of the newspaper men and women of the country. While this particular publication naturally regrets that the words, "& Publisher" were not included, yet must we summon enough grace to express proper appreciation, on behalf of the editorial profession, for the compliment. But why, it occurs, should the name have been bestowed upon a freighter, instead of on a passenger ship? Has the Government chosen by this means to subtly acknowledge that the editors of the country have been patient bearers of public burdens during the great world crisis? If it is, the public mind that this role should be made a perpetual one?

Now that "The Editor" has been launched, sponsored by Mrs. Hardy—whose husband is a good editor and a good public servant—she may launch craft soon start upon the first of a long list of happy and useful voyages, living up to the traditions clustering about its name. May no useless cargo ever encumber its valuable space, nor dishonest freight be carried just to please the shipper! May it never alter its course to suit the whim or caprice of wind or wave—or King, merchant or serf! May it be fortunate enough to avoid a libel suit! May it be the servant of all—be slave of none!

"I BELIEVE a limitation of matter other than advertising should be put in effect," says J. H. Higgins, of the Boston Herald, in discussing conservation measures. In the limitation begun with baseball, the most overplayed topic of news in our papers. Let it include advance notices of amusements. Let it extend to the deletion of all press agent stuff!

A TAILOR, in a Western city, conceived the idea of wearing better clothes than any other man in town. He found that it paid. Publishers who have advertising to sell find it equally profitable to do a little better advertising than even the most progressive of their advertisers do.

Nathan Hale, Famous Journalist, was Born 135 Years Ago

On August 16, 1784, Nathan Hale, journalist and author, a nephew of Nathan Hale, the patriot, was born at Westhampton, Mass. In 1814 he became proprietor of the Boston Daily Advertiser, which paper he conducted for nearly 30 years. At first a Federalist, he became a Whig when that party was organized, and finally a Republican.

He was a strong opponent of the slave power, and antagonized the repeal of the Missouri compromise and the Nebraska bill in 1854. He was chairman of the commission which created the water works of Boston; was president of the Boston & Worcester Railroad, and was a member of the State Legislature, and one of the founders of the North American Review.

He died in Brookline, Mass., on February 9, 1863.

HOUSTON TO BAN BILLBOARDS

Mayor Asks for Ordinance That Will Prohibit Them

Houston, Tex., Aug. 19.—Houston has started a movement to rid her landscape of the unsightly billboards. Mayor Ammerman has asked City Attorney Krahl to prepare an ordinance forbidding them.

Houston has one of the most beautiful boulevards in the country on her main street, and objects to the billboards that line that aristocratic thoroughfare telling where she can buy motor cars, foodstuffs and patent medicines.

ONLY PRACTICAL TALKS AT SESSIONS OF A. A. C.'S NEWSPAPER SECTION

Ban Has Been Put On Generalities At New Orleans Convention and Discussions Will Be Limited to Topics That Pertain Strictly to Advertising Departments

THE Daily Newspaper Department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World had put its ban on speeches containing generalities at the New Orleans convention of the Association, September 21-25.

It has prepared, instead, a program of about two practical talks each day. After this part of each day's program, it will go into executive session and discuss matters and ideals pertaining strictly to the advertising departments of daily newspapers.

Here Is the Program of Talks

The program of talks, as just announced by Charles Miller, advertising manager of the Birmingham (Ala.) News and secretary-treasurer of the Daily Newspaper Department, is as follows:

Jason Rogers, publisher, New York Globe—"Necessity for a Greater Standardization of Newspaper Advertising."

Frank D. Webb, advertising manager, Baltimore News—"Selling the Local Representative for Nationally Advertised Goods on the Use of the Newspapers in His District."

James W. Brown, publisher, Editor & Publisher—"Proper Advertising Rates."

James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary, American Association of Advertising Agencies—"The Relation of the Advertising Agency to the Newspaper and Advertiser."

Fred Millis, assistant advertising manager, Indianapolis News—"Building Steady Business."

William Woodhead, former president of the A. A. C. of W., now director of advertising publicity for the Sperry & Hutchinson Company—"Value of Trading Stamps."

Major Roy Dickinson, associate editor, Printers' Ink—"Proper Compensation for Advertising Solicitor's Labor."

A. B. Weitz, advertising manager, Tulsa (Okla.) Democrat and Morning Times—"Automobile Show Under the Auspices of a Newspaper."

Herman Phillipson, Dallas Times-Herald—"Converting National Advertisers to the Use of Daily Newspapers."

A. L. Shuman, Fort Worth Star Telegram—"Build-a-Home Campaign."

A. A. Brentano, Evansville (Ind.) Courier—"Making Special Editions Popular and Profitable."

There may also be a talk by George Creel and one or two others.

Will Discuss 20 Topics

The department also has prepared a list of twenty topics it will discuss at the convention and has sent these to 700 newspapers, inviting them to be represented at the convention. The topics are:

The value of co-operation with national advertisers, and to what extent should it go?
Should newspapers sell merchandising in order to obtain advertising?
Flat rate versus sliding scale.
Should the local and foreign rates be equalized?
Uniform rate card.
The movie and vaudeville rates.
The best plan for notification of local and foreign rate changes.
Should the newspaper or the advertiser pay the agency commission?
Amusement publicity.
Automobile publicity.
Why questionable advertising of all kinds should be eliminated—and what is considered questionable?
How best to regulate compensation of advertising solicitors, in view of increased cost of living.
Bonus versus salary increase. (A very definite plan which has been in successful operation for more than a year, and which has resulted in 1,500,000 lines local gain, will be disclosed.)
Should newspapers furnish free art work and cuts?
Should there be a free or paid exchange of mats and cuts?
The use of news style heads on advertisements.
Should newspaper contracts be made for one year or more?
Uniform style of makeup.
The value, if any, of special editions.
Do scheme pages lower the standing of a newspaper?
Best methods to build up classified advertising.

To "Convert" Big Buyers

Considerable time also will be spent in discussing plans for converting national advertisers to the use of daily newspapers by selling local representatives.

For the benefit of newspaper publishers who join the Daily Newspaper Department, the dues of which are $10 a year, the department will prepare and send out a complete digest of the entire proceedings, so that publishers who have no representative present will get a good idea of what was accomplished. Only representatives of publications which hold membership in the department will be admitted to its executive sessions.

"It is our intention to make the Daily Newspaper Department sessions at the convention of real value to newspapers throughout the country, and I believe every publishers who sends his advertising manager to the convention will be repaid a hundred-fold," Mr. Miller, the secretary-treasurer, writes Editor & Publisher.

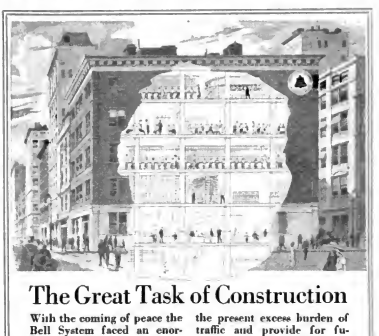
British Atrocities in Egypt Are Alleged In Peace Conference Protest

WASHINGTON, Aug. 18.—Senator Borah, of Idaho, today read into the Congressional Record the report carried by the International News Service on alleged British atrocities in Egypt as charged in the protest filed against the British protectorate in Egypt with the Peace Conference at Paris.

Senator Borah charged that the reason news of these alleged atrocities had not been reported from Paris was because the two biggest continental news gathering agencies, Reuters and Havas, are dominated by the British and French governments.

The International News Service carried the first of the Egyptian stories August 16 as a special feature, and continued to carry stories quoting from and based on the report to the Peace Conference on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

The State-Lake Theater, Chicago, has installed a playroom for children.



JOINS NATION'S BUSINESS

J. F. Jarrell, Kansas Newspaper Man, Will Be Transportation Editor

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 20.—J. F. Jarrell, former publicity director for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, but during the war connected with the railroad administration in Washington, has resigned to become transportation editor of "The Nation's Business." Prior to his taking the position, Jan. 1, next, he will have charge of a publicity campaign of the United States Chamber of Commerce, publishers of the paper.

Mr. Jarrell is a well-known Kansas newspaper man, having been connected with the Kansas City Times, Topeka State Capital and owner of the Holton (Kan.) Signal, prior to entering the Santa Fe service in 1909. His wife, Mrs. Myra Williams Jarrell, is a well-known newspaper woman, having been connected with Topeka papers as society editor and special writer for years. Two sons, Sanford and Archibald, also are newspaper men.

The Great Task of Construction

With the coming of peace the Bell System faced an enormous construction program. Conditions arising from war resulted in the wiping out of the reserve equipment normally maintained, and necessary to give prompt connection to new subscribers. The release of industry and accumulated growth of population now makes telephone demands almost overwhelming. Telephone construction, including buildings, switchboards, conduits, cables and toll lines, must, from its inherent nature, be undertaken in large units. A metropolitan switchboard, with its tens of thousands of parts, may require from two to three years to construct and install.

Only great extension can meet the present excess burden of traffic and future requirements. Extension which cares for immediate demand only, is uneconomical and calls for continuous work of such a character as to be frequently detrimental to the service.

During the war the Bell System devoted all its margin to the needs of the Government. The great task of getting back to normal pre-war excellence of operation requires the re-establishment of an economic operating margin capable of taking care of a larger growth than has ever before confronted the Bell System.

Construction is being pushed to the limit of men and materials; while every effort is being made to provide the best, present service.

N. Y. PRESSMEN WIN NEW WAGE CONTEST

Majority of Arbitration Board Extends Increase of $6 Weekly to Foremen and Assistant Foremen—Louis Wiley Dissents

A dispute between the Newspaper Publishers' Association, of New York City, and the Web Pressmen's Union as to whether the decision of an arbitration board, rendered May 3, granting an increase of $6 weekly to all journeymen members of the union, applied as well to foremen and assistant foremen, has been decided affirmatively, in favor of the union.

Votes in favor of this interpretation of the arbitration board, composed of Charles Stelzle, chairman; Albert Kreitler, representing the pressmen, and Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, representing the publishers, were cast by Mr. Stelzle and Mr. Kreitler, with Mr. Wiley dissenting. A statement issued by Mr. Wiley, explaining his dissent, reads:

"Stumps Bonus as Wage"

"The only question before the arbitration was the establishment of a minimum wage scale.

"The request of the pressmen's union is similar to that made to the typographical union and refused by the arbitrator in that case.

"The decision fails to state a bonus such as is paid a foreman above the wage scale, a part of the scale.

"The statement signed by Messrs. Stelzle and Kreitler stamps a bonus as a wage, destroying the plan of a fixed scale, because bonuses differ in every procession.

"The decision tends to diminish the control of owners or publishers over their processes and lessens their authority over their foreman, who, as members of the pressmen's union, possessing superior ability, have been placed in executive positions and given responsibility as representatives of owners and publishers."

The Union's Contention

The decision which grants foremen and assistants the same increase in wages as other members of the pressmen's union, is as follows:

"It is contended by the union that since the foremen and assistant foremen are members of the union it applies to them equally with all other journeymen especially in view of the fact that the union made the following paragraph the basis for discussion: 'The united request for an increase of $6 per week for all journeymen members over the present wages paid.'

"The publishers on the other hand insist that the pay of foremen and assistant foremen did not enter into the discussion and that it was not a subject for arbitration because the only matter under consideration was the minimum wages to be paid to journeymen and that what ever is paid in excession to this said minimum wage is purely a matter between publishers and foremen and assistant foremen.

"The union declares that the subject submitted for arbitration was not the minimum wage but an increase in wages for all journeymen members above the present wages paid.

A Preliminary Issue

"Furthermore, it is contended by the union that the question of this increase in the foremen's wages was a point at issue in the preliminary discussion before the case came in arbitration and that by mutual agreement this point was referred to a committee consisting of Mr. Pulcher and Mr. Simons, who together were to frame up the points to be arbitrated. It is asserted by Mr. Simons that it was agreed that the union was to incorporate in its demand a comprehensive statement which should include all points and mutually agreed upon during the preliminary discussion.

"This, it is declared by the union, was its understanding when it inserted the clause which stated that the increase was to be given to all journeymen members over the present wages paid to be received by the foremen and assistant foremen had not been settled in the preliminary controversy.

"The union also said that while no reference was made specifically to foremen and assistant foremen when the case was being arbitrated, it was understood that while the statement made by the union were upon the basis of a minimum or 'fixed' wage, foremen and assistant foremen would also share in any advance that might be given the other journeymen members of the union as they deserved at least a proportionate increase in their wages.

Cites a Precedent

"Reference was made by the publishers to the decision rendered by Frank Morrison in favor of Typographical Union No. 6 and the Publishers of New York, during which time the question as to whether or not the advance granted the journeymen should apply to foremen in the composing room. Mr. Morrison decided that the increase was to be granted only to the journeymen compositors and not to the foremen.

"However, the Web Pressmen's Union insists that its case is not parallel—that it was understood by them that the foremen were definitely included in the request for an increase of nine dollars per week and that this was not so in the case of Typographical Union No. 6.

"Apparently, therefore, there seems to be a misunderstanding between the Web Pressmen's Union and the Publishers' Association as to who was to be included in the demands made by the union—the union assuming that it included the foremen and assistant foremen and the publishers understanding that it applied only to pressmen in charge, and all other pressmen actually working on the presses.

Voluntary Increases

"However, the fact that practically every newspaper connected with the Publishers' Association of New York City gave the increase to its foremen and assistant foremen without any question seems to imply that the permanent view of the case was accepted by these publishers.

"It was stated that only two newspapers had declined to grant an increase in the wages of foremen and assistant foremen, although it was stated that in some instances the increase was given by other newspapers merely because it was believed by their publishers that the foremen and assistant foremen deserved at least a proportionate increase in their wages without regard to the union's demands.

"That the publishers have heretofore included the foremen in decisions which referred to members of the union, even though foremen were not mentioned specifically, is demonstrated in the arbitration decision rendered October 6, 1918, when the increase granted the Journeymen Stereotypers was also given to the foremen and assistant foremen without any question on the part of the publishers.

"While it is true that the arbitration committee did not have under specific consideration the increase of wages of foremen and assistant foremen, all the implications seem to justify the decision that as members of the Web Pressmen's Union, the foremen and the assistant foremen are entitled to the same increase in pay granted to all other journeymen members of the union—namely, $6 per week, and the arbitration committee so decides."

A HAY MOW OUTING

George Reynolds Asks Fellow Circulation Managers to Share One at Nantucket

New Bedford, Mass., Aug. 20.—The proposed August outing of the New England Association of Circulation Managers at Nantucket, Mass., has been called off, because, according to George H. Reynolds, of the New Bedford Standard, it is almost impossible to obtain hotel accommodations. Mr. Reynolds is, however, holding an outing there anyway.

"On August 20 I am going to Nantucket and stay over night, having an option on a first-class hay mow. Will you join me?" he wrote recently in a circular letter to members of the Association.

CIRCULATION NOTES

More than one hundred newsboys—carriers of the Elgin (Illinois) Daily News wrote the greats of their paper at an all day picnic at Wing Park on August 7. A parade through the business section of the city preceded the trip to park.

J. R. Brown, for ten years connected with the circulation department of the Los Angeles Examiner, and two years circulation manager of the Modesto Evening News, is now in charge of the circulation department of the Santa Rosa (Cal.) Republican.

The Hamilton (Ohio) Republican-News is giving away the Evansville Joy-Toy Monoplane to boys and girls who secure new subscriptions to that paper.

The Inter-State Circulation Managers' Association will hold its fall meeting at Scranton, Penn., September 10 and 11.

James L. Doolittle, of the circulation department of the Des Moines Register and Tribune, has resigned to become circulation manager of the Port Huron (Mich.) Times-Herald.

The Fall River (Mass.) Herald is continuing its popular outings for kiddies.

WHAT OUR READERS SAY

The Tax on Advertising

BUTLER PAPERS PRAISE
David City, Neb., Aug. 9, 1919.

To Editor and Publisher:

Following is an extract from a letter just sent Congressman Mansfield in response to a request for my opinion on the main system for second class mail, a poll of the press of the country, having been taken on the subject, being taken:

"In the country newspaper business 42 years, it is a humiliating and constant task. It appears to me the zone system affects the country and suburban publications unfairly.

"1. It discriminates against and penalizes advertising, the life of all newspaper business, also in itself a great creator of postal business of the first class and fourth class.

"2. It is a complex, expensive and vexatious system, much more so than the classifying into zones and in measuring and reporting advertising and weighing, especially, the publishing of postal rate in the least annoying and least expensive form of any which has been proposed by various papers.

"3. It was passed as a war measure and as a rider. The war is over. Rider legislation is usually forced judgment and hasty.

"4. If the Government needs the money, and probably it does, although reduction of letter postage from 3 cents to 2 cents does not indicate need, and if the postal service is to be made to pay a profit, an accurate cost system should be established and the margin of profit determined and secured by increased rates on all classes of matter in proportion to cost of each class. The cost of carrying Government franked mail should not be charged against second-class mail. The second-class rate should be a flat rate, as the first and third-class rates are. It should be the same rate for advertising as for reading matter. Advertising is news.

"5. National weeklies and magazines for metropolitan districts do not and cannot recognize so-called foreign advertising. They have developed it and country papers are getting none of it, generally speaking. If, during the time the new system was established, and are getting it on their merits as advertising media, not because of the zone system, which is a handicap on advertising and penalizes advertising. A greater volume of advertising necessitates a greater volume of reading, and all are profited."

That many country newspaper men, giving little or no thought and accepting opinion ready made for them, give approval of this zone system and the Government disparagement of advertising, is a most astounding handicap of advertising that is a feature of it, affected by contention that it favors the wealthy publications which oppose them to lose advertising to the country papers, appears to be a meaning and a pitiful example of credulity and selfishness.

Papers That Crossed on the R-34

In a letter dated August 7, John J. Spurgeon, editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, writing about newspapers carried by the dirigible R-34, said "It was the Public Ledger and not the New York Times that was delivered to King George, as the acknowledgment from that secretary to our correspondent in London proves."

The R-34 carried, as regular mail addressed to King George, a copy of the New York Times of Sunday, July 6. When the dirigible was delayed in leaving, another package for King George was made up and entrusted to Major Scott, commander of the airship. This package contained copies of the New York Times of July 9, the Mid-Week Pictorial of July 10, Current History Magazine for July and a part of the Sunday issue of July 6, which was the New York Times of July 13. Both the copy of the New York Times sent by mail and the copy entrusted to Major Scott were delivered to King George on July 15.

Lieut. Col. Cliffe Wigram, assistant secretary to King George, who received the message in the London correspondent of the New York Times, the next evening, under acknowledgment received by the king of "the New York Times of the 9th inst.," and the magazine, which was also delivered this afternoon, soon after 1 P. M., by the King," and asking "that you will be good enough to convey to the editor of the New York Times his appreciation of the kindness that thanks for them."

A copy of his letter was published in the New York Times, Tuesday, July 15. In that letter it was stated that the correspondence of days and hours shows that the New York Times was delivered in London seventy-one hours one-half hours before the Ledger reached him.

Upon the above news reports in the New York Times of July 14 and 15 are enclosed.

In making this simple statement of facts I have no wish to belittle the enterprise of the Ledger. It is one of America's great newspapers. I have always admiration for it and its progressive methods. It merits the wide recognition it has received.

Very truly yours,
LOUIS WILEY,
Business Manager New York Times.

Editor Leech Thanks Friends

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 17, 1919.

To Editor & Publisher:

I want to thank you for the space devoted to my recent illness and election to the office of lieutenant for contempt of court.

I appreciate your kindness. If I might convey through your columns my thanks to the editors throughout the country who have sent me words to point out editorially the grave danger of courts assuming powers never intended for them and in direct violation of the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press.

I have several hundreds of editorial clippings from papers throughout the Union, denouncing my imprisonment and calling for action to prevent. I might thank each editor personally or by letter, but that is obviously impossible, and a magazine such as your own furnishes the only medium of reaching them.

Thanking you again, I am

EDWARD LEECH,
Editor, The Memphis Press.

Statement From the New York Tribune

To Editor & Publisher:

August 12th, 1919.

The Tribune did not make the price of $1.20 per hundred until after the American News Company had agreed to deliver the Tribune at the regular price of $1.40 per hundred to any dealer unless that dealer also took the liberal papers. In other words, we were asked to slightly increase the price of Tribunes to the liberal papers, which we had undertaken at the specific request of the Federal authorities, in refusing to deliver Tribunes to a dealer who, at least partly for patriotic reasons and patriotic pressure from the public whom he served, refused to deal in Liberal papers.

It was only when we were unable to deliver the Tribune at any price, except under these circumstances, that we accepted the challenge, inaugurated the home delivery and made the price $1.20.

The Tribune wishes its record in this matter kept clear and asks, therefore, that you make the necessary correction.

Yours very truly,
NEW YORK TRIBUNE.
G. V. Rogers, General Manager.

"How" will be the central theme of the annual convention of the Associated Business Papers, Inc., which will be held in Chicago, September 18, 19 and 20. Every subject on the program will deal with the "How" part of the publishing problem.

LETTERS OF AN EDITOR TO HIS SON

About six months ago a young newspaperman undertook the management of a somewhat slow going country town daily. His father, an experienced editor, has written him many letters of practical advice. EDITOR & PUBLISHER has secured extracts from these actual letters for publication in several chapters, the third of which follows:

I WAS glad to have your letter today giving some of the details of your job. I am not a bit surprised to know of your difficulties, for I think I appreciated them better than you did a few weeks ago. But they are not insurmountable. It will mean the hardest kind of work for many months, but you are not afraid of work. You have common sense and are quick to learn, qualities that will make up for your lack of experience, and this latter you will get fast enough. As long as you believe in yourself and are willing to give the best you have in you, I have no misgivings as to the outcome.

I was not surprised to know of your discovery about the circulation lying. The only thing to do now is to make a clean breast of it to your advertisers, who probably won't be much surprised, for I doubt if they had been fooled at all.

Here is my suggestion as to your circulation problem. See the larger advertisers yourself, tell them just what you have found out, and declare yourself as being utterly opposed to the old policy. Lay your cards on the table by telling the exact truth about the circulation, and promise as rapid an increase as legitimate methods will bring. But make plain that even if the circulation is only 2,000 the ten cent rate is low, and that they are getting more than ample returns for their expenditure.

A Matter of Business, Not Sympathy

Show them how they can afford to increase their space, purely as a business proposition. In addition appeal to them to assist in giving the county a good newspaper; not as a matter of alms, however. They cannot afford to see the town left with only one newspaper, for then they would be at the mercy of that one paper. Of course you are not begging anything of them, always keep that in mind. If the paper is not worth anything to them as an advertising medium you do not want their money. I have no use for the whining, sympathy-seeking editor.

Your best bet in circulation-getting is a good newspaper, and let me repeat that local news is your best bet in making a good paper. As I see it you must do something that the opposition is not doing. You must make the public see that if it wants the news it must take your paper. You can spend money to no better advantage than on a good reporter, who just now will do you more good than the best solicitor you can hire. Let me give you a few suggestions, some of which you may find workable.

That was a bully good murder story you had the first of the week, but I did not see any follow-up on it. Never drop a big story cold, even if there is not much real news in the aftermath. I know I wanted something more, and probably other readers felt the same way I did. In the follow-up you might have referred to the scoop you had, your enterprise, etc. Blow your horn.

Some Concrete Suggestions

Get some news from the various war activities bodies. Get your Y. M. C. A. secretary interested in your paper by asking him to write for it. Give him a little department of his own once or twice a week.

Get more news of the court house and keep it altogether. Readers are always interested in litigation. Even the routine is worth printing, and it is always possible to get something more than routine.

Establish a sporting department, even if it is small. You are publishing considerable sporting news, but it is scattered all over the paper. Perhaps you can get a high school boy to take charge of it. Use his name at the head of the department. If in time you can build up a good department of sports you will have made something well worth while in getting circulation. In any event keep this news together, and you can ask for contributions as you do for society and church news.

Have you thought of the possibility of getting some agricultural news? Have you a county agent and a lodge of the Grange? Do you get the clipping sheet of the agricultural college? A department of this kind of news once a week would interest your farm readers.

Ask the city librarian to furnish you a weekly list of new books added. Get from him some figures on book-drawers and the kind of books most in demand. Perhaps he would review a book for you occasionally. Do the bookstores advertise?

Is there a man in town who is a sharp on local history? He might be jollied into writing for you a series of articles on people and things.

What kind of a board of trade have you? Is it doing anything for the town? If not, it is up to you to wake somebody up.

No doubt the town needs cleaning up and painting up. Urge a clean-up day and go after some advertising in connection with it.

You claim in your masthead to be the party organ of your county, but I find precious little political news. See your county and city chairmen and make them produce some news for you.

Near-at-Hand News

Don't place too high a standard for news. You will find many an occasion to play up a story that would be more or less inconsequential in the city, but of real importance for you. A minor automobile accident on your main street is worth more than a big tornado in the far west. Even if every man, woman and child in town saw the accident and knew all the details, publish them all. The people will be more interested in reading that sort of a story than one they know nothing about.

If there is any movement on for city improvements interview leading citizens on the subject.

You see there is scarcely any limit to the news possibilities, especially if you have an editor who is interested in making news. However, you evidently have one of the kind who just simply waits for things to happen. That sort of a man is not an editor at all. However, one of these days you will be your own editor, I hope. Don't be a routine man, no matter where you are or what kind of work you are engaged in.

NEW YORK POLITICAL WRITER DIES

James E. McBride, Well-Known Newspaper Man, Died Thursday at His New York Home—Managed Mayor Hyland's Campaign

James E. McBride, formerly president of the Municipal Civil Service Commission and well known in the newspaper world of New York for nearly twenty years, died Thursday of heart disease at his home, 947 West End avenue. He was 38 years old.

In the last Mayoralty election Mr. McBride virtually managed the campaign of John F. Hylan, and his reward was the appointment to the head of the Civil Service Commission.

He resigned to take an executive position with the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. McBride was born in Buffalo and entered newspaper work in that city as a political reporter on the Inquirer. His ability soon attracted attention and twenty years ago he came to this city as a reporter for the Evening World. Later he was Albany correspondent and reporter for the New York American. He leaves a widow and daughter.

The honorary pallbearers at the funeral in the Funeral Church on Sunday afternoon were: Mayor Hylan, Transit Commissioner Delaney, William Randolph Hearst, William Fox, Winfield R. Sheehan, Supreme Court Justice Wagner, L. J. O'Reilly, Victor Watson, James J. Montague, Arthur Brisbane, Charles S. Hand, Axel Warn, George H. Payne, W. A. Orr, Morris Deiches and Martin Green.

Injury to His Hand Causes Publisher's Death

A. F. Smith, 70 Years Old, Had Been Connected with Vandalia, Ill., Herald for 56 Years

A. F. Smith, 70 years old, editor and publisher of the Vandalia (Ill.) Fayette County Democrat, died in a hospital in St. Louis on August 16, following injuries to his hand in a job press in his office on July 25.

He was brought to St. Louis a week later, and an effort made to save the hand, but the infection gradually spread to the whole arm, and it was decided that even amputation of the whole arm would not save his life.

He had been sole proprietor of the Democrat since the death of his father, Charles G. Smith, many years ago, and had been connected with the paper more than 56 years. The paper was founded in 1863. He left a wife, a daughter and two grand-children.

ANDREW S. TEUXILLO, 57 years old and for 22 years an employe of the Galveston News printroom, is dead.

Obituary

TANCRED ZANGHERI, for several years past a foreign correspondent of the Chicago Daily News and a member of the staff of the Milan Secolo, lost his life recently when an airplane in which he and fourteen other persons, also killed, were passengers, fell near Verona, Italy, during a record speed flight. During the war he served as a captain in the Italian army and contributed many vivid dispatches to the Daily News.

WILLIAM H. STRONG, for many years identified with the old Chicago Inter-Ocean, died last week in St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, aged 66 years. He began newspaper work as a reporter for the Inter-Ocean, becoming a special feature writer, and finally representative of the paper in England and Spain. He bought an interest in the paper, selling it later. He was prominent in the work of the Episcopal Church and contributed many articles to religious periodicals.

MRS. JOHN L. SPALLMAN, wife of the Chicago Tribune's city hall reporter, died last week after an illness of seven years.

A. J. PIRTLE, former editor of the Severance (Kan.) News, died in Chicago recently. His son, Ralph, was killed in a train accident at Marshall, Mo., about the same time his father died.

WALLACE HERBERT BLAKE, who became an Episcopal clergyman after being engaged for several years in newspaper work and advertising, died at a tuberculosis sanitarium at Oak Forest, Ill. He attended Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., and was editor of the college paper. Later he worked on the Chicago Tribune and the Chicago American, and after engaging in the advertising business, entered the ministry and served several churches in the central and far west.

BENJAMIN SUSSEX HUNTOON, superintendent of the Kentucky Institute for the Education of the Blind and head of the American Printing House for the Blind, died at his home in Louisville, Ky., after a long illness. He was widely known for inventions which adapted the printing press to the production of books for the blind. He was 83 years old.

COLONEL NICHOLAS SMITH, father of the late Mrs. Nicola Greeley-Smith Ford, died suddenly Friday night at the home of another daughter, Mrs. Louis F. Geissler, at Fort Salongat, L. I. He was 82 years old.

WEST TEXAS TO ADVERTISE

Will Buy Space in 5,286 Country Weeklies, Reaching 15,000,000

FORT WORTH, TEX., Aug. 13.—The West Texas Chamber of Commerce has launched a movement looking to an extensive advertising campaign to place the resources of West Texas vividly before the entire country. The movement was inaugurated by Tarrant county and the Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce. Invitations were sent to the 86 Texas counties to the west and northwest of Tarrant county to join in the plan, and it was then taken up by the West Texas Chamber of Commerce.

It is planned to insert display advertisements in 5,286 country weeklies that will reach at least 15,000,000 people. The advertisements will cover 30 column inches and will, aside from placing the advantages of West Texas before the public, form a permanent directory of the progressive business men and firms of west and northwest Texas, particularly of the North Central Texas oil fields.

Russian Daily Raided

The Chicago offices of Daily Free Russia, a recently-established newspaper, were raided by operatives from the U. S. Attorney General's office this week. Damon Lincoln Orlowsky, the editor, was later called into conference by the authorities as to the policies of his paper.

Ada Patterson, star feature writer of the Hearst papers, has returned from a vacation spent in the Rockies.

Vigilance Bureau of Minneapolis Forum Plans to Supply Detailed Information on All Publications in Its Field

Detailing information concerning publications of all types soliciting advertising patronage in the Minneapolis field hereafter will be supplied to its subscribers by the Vigilance Bureau of the Minneapolis Advertising Forum, a unit of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

"It will not be the function of this service to make recommendations to advertisers as to their attitude toward any publication," reads a bulletin issued by the Bureau.

"The purpose will be, rather, to obtain from publishers a sworn statement of facts, which may in the Division's discretion, be verified or supplemented from other sources.

"Such facts will be issued to subscribers in detailed reports. With the facts thus available from an impartial source, advertising buyers can exercise a real discretion in making decisions on any medium.

"While some effectiveness has been secured through civic or trade bodies in curtailing questionable or worthless mediums, no practical survey or requirements have been made to place responsibility on the publisher or solicitor. This work is now to be assumed by the Bureau."

HOW HOSKINS SCORED TWO FAMOUS BEATS

New Managing Editor of Houston Post Got Control of Only Wires Out of Galveston and San Francisco at Time of the Big Disasters

L. A. Hoskins, whose appointment as managing editor of the Houston Post was announced in a recent issue of Ewing & Pressler, has returned to Houston and the Post after an absence of nearly twenty years. In the meantime he has worked through all the "runs" and desks, and had eight years' experience in the editorial maoagement of newspapers in California and the Pacific Northwest.

L. A. Hoskins

Mr. Hoskins really started his newspaper career on the Post. As a young man he learned to telegraph. He soon mastered the intricacies of the high-speed wire code and went with the Associated Press. Twenty years ago, at the close of the Spanish-American War, he traded "jobs" with another operator and returned to Houston, his boyhood home.

After working the wire for a year, and immediately following the Galveston flood, which came while he was on vacation and which offered opportunity for him to try his ability as reporter, he decided to break away from the telegraph. A change on the desk offered an almost immediate opportunity. His vacation "sub" continued on the wire and he assumed the duties of telegraph editor.

Scored Two Great News Beats

While covering hotels and railroads in 1901, opportunity came for a trip to California, and when the Los Angeles Examiner was started, in 1902, Mr. Hoskins was one of the staff. He remained with that paper for nearly ten years, working himself into the position of night editor. In 1911 he left the Examiner to assume the managing editorship of the Los Angeles Tribune. Eleven months later he merged the editorial management of the Tribune (morning) and the Express (afternoon) —both Earl publications and both printed in the same building—and for the next five years was the managing editor of both papers.

Leaving the Tribune and Express in 1917, Mr. Hoskins went to Tacoma, where he assumed editorial management of the Perkins papers, with the title of assistant publisher. This connection terminated when the Tacoma News (afternoon) and Ledger (morning) were sold by Mr. Perkins to E. H. Baker, of Cleveland, O., and the News was merged into the Tacoma Tribune.

From Tacoma, Mr. Hoskins went to Atlanta, Ga., where he became the day editor of the Georgian, the Hearst paper of the South. While thus employed Mr. Hoskins went to Houston to visit his parents and out of the visit grew the negotiations which made it possible for him to return to the Post and his old home town.

During his newspaper career Mr. Hoskins has been able to score in a large way. For instance, it was through his keen news sense and his ability to telegraph that it was possible for him to get the first news of the Galveston flood to the outside world. The hurricane that destroyed so much property and so many lives at Galveston also wrecked telegraph wires. Mr. Hoskins knew this and searched about until he found a wire that was open on which to send out the news.

How a "Scoop" Was Obtained

He did the same thing with the San Francisco earthquake and fire. His was the first story that went over the wires telling of the destruction of the city. His ability to telegraph had enabled him to bring the news into the Los Angeles Examiner office after the press wires had closed and the regular operators had gone home, and to enable that publication to get out an extra on the 'quake hours ahead of its rivals. Immediately after, he went to the telegraph office and, getting a direct connection with the New York Journal office, sent the story direct to them, composing it as he sent, and putting them on the streets hours ahead of competitors.

Asked how he secured the San Francisco 'quake scoop, Mr. Hoskins recently told a bit of unpublished history.

"Luck, pure luck and simplicity," he said. "I happened to be in the Examiner office, chatting on the wire with an old Texas friend, Tom Brophy, who was the repeater man at Ashfork, Ariz. All eastbound wires from California went through Tom's office. Suddenly all of his 'Frisco wires failed and he broke off the conversation. A minute later he was back on the wire and said the postal chief at San Francisco had only had time to tell him that they had been hit by a 'quake and that buildings were falling on all sides.

"That tip was enough. I jumped for the postal main office in Los Angeles. In almost the same instant I arrived there our sending operator at San Francisco, Warren Wootten, also arrived, having been thrown out of bed when the hotel he was in was shaken down. He was hurt slightly, unhurt, and had found the telegraph office for safety. I quizzed him and had about five minutes' wire talk with him when that and all other wires failed to Los Angeles. I had enough to make a story—and I got busy to get a printer crew and a stereotype crew on the job to get out an extra, and roused the managing editor.

"Then came the problem—more news right away out of San Francisco. I tried the railroads and the telephone offices. Nothing doing. I went to the Western Union operating room and to the switchboard, where testing was going on. I got busy on the railroad wire section of the switchboard—wires that are regularly allotted to railroads and little used by the commercial company. I began calling points oorth. Finally, after many trials on many wires, I got a response. It was an unfamiliar signal, and I asked what station it was. The reply was that it was the Santa Fe station at Berkely, just out of San Francisco, across the bay.

Quake Crossed the Wires

"Inquiry of the Los Angeles chief operator, Bob Vaughn, developed that the Western Union had no such wire or station. I learned from the man at Berkeley that he was sending to me on a Postal wire, while I was sending to him on a Western Union wire. The 'quake had 'crossed' the wires near Stockton. As it was, the wire belonged to no one. The Western Union couldn't use it, and the Postal couldn't use it, because neither had anything more than a terminal on it.

"But believe me, I could use it. I had found it, and I claimed it. I slipped an Examiner loop onto the Los Angeles end and told the Berkeley man there was $100 for him if he would get in touch with one men in Oakland and would keep that wire going full tilt until one of them appeared. He agreed, and for four days we—the Los Angeles Examiner—had the only wire out of the earthquake district. Naturally, we scored big beats every day."

Thousand Dollar Newspaper Advertising Campaign Brings Home "Tunnin"

Deal Beach, N. J., Aug. 20.—A one-thousand dollar newspaper advertising campaign is no great shakes of a campaign for automobiles, for instance, but when a product like "Tunnin" is being advertised, it is a considerable campaign, as Lewis S. Thompson of Red Bank, who spent the $1,000, will tell you.

"Tunnin" is not a new breakfast food but is baby-talk for "Cunnigo" and the name of a wire-haired fox terrier owned by Mr. Thompson's young daughter, Geraldine. He disappeared the other day and his owner's grief was so great that her father lost no time in investing the $1,000 in advertising the canine's disappearance in newspapers of New York, Brooklyn, Newark, Philadelphia, and in every resort along the New Jersey Coast from Seabright to Bay Head. Pictures of the animal were printed, with an announcement that a reward of $50 would be paid for its return.

A New Jersey Coast began looking for "Tunnin" and he was found strolling on the beach at Long Branch. When told by his mistress that it had cost $1,050 to get him back, he declared in barks, easily translated by her, "News paper advertising always pays."

MAINE PUBLISHERS ARRANGE ANNUAL PROGRAM

Meeting Will Be Held Early in October at Portland

PORTLAND, Maine, Aug. 20.—The next annual meeting of the Maine Press Association will be held in this city on Thursday and Friday, October 9 and 10, in the City Council rooms in City Hall. The business meeting for the election of officers, which will be held Thursday morning, will be for members only. All other sessions will be open to the printers and publishers of Maine, all of whom are invited to be present.

Don C. Seitz, business manager of the New York World, will deliver an address Friday forenoon on "The Newspaper and the Community." Mr. Seitz lived at Norway, Maine, for a number of years, where he obtained his early schooling and learned the printing trade in the office of the Norway Advertiser, a weekly publication.

AROOSTOOK PULP MILL SOLD

Will Resume Operations at Once After a Shutdown of Several Weeks

PRESQUE ISLE, Maine, Aug. 18.—The stock interest of E. P. Lindsay and others in the Aroostook Pulp & Paper Company's mill at Keegan, near Van Buren, has been purchased by A. R. Gould of Presque Isle and H. B. Stebbins of Boston. The mill has been closed some weeks.

A new company, which has been formed, will begin operations immediately. The plant was built two years ago and is thoroughly equipped. Its capacity is 60 tons, about one-fourth that of the mills of the Great Northern Paper Co., at Millinocket, and it will employ about 200.

N. Y. ENGINEERS GET RAISE

Newspaper Publishers and Union Employes Compromise on $36 Weekly

New York City newspapers and their union engineers have come to terms regarding wages hereafter, after negotiations during some months past between committees representing the Publishers' Association and the union. Boss engineers hereafter will receive $36 weekly and other engineers $34 weekly.

The engineers at first asked $39 for all newspaper engineers, having previously been paid a flat wage of $30 by most of the New York City newspapers. The committee submitted a counter offer which was accepted by the union and will be in force hereafter.

"Cover the Whole Earth!" Is This Newspaper Man's Unique Assignment

VANCOUVER, B. C., Aug. 20.—"Visit every country on earth and find out what the people want," is the unique assignment given Charles W. Wood, a New York newspaper man who has sailed from here with his wife to begin his investigations somewhere in Western Asia.

Mr. Wood, who comes from the Sunday editorial staff of the New York World, is being sent on this extraordinary mission by the Centenary Committee of the Methodist Church. He is not going merely to write-up the missions, but interpret the needs of each country he visits, so that approximately $170,000 the church has raised as a centenary fund for religious and social improvement work abroad may be expended to the best advantage.

Incidentally, he is a Socialist, a contributor to Socialist papers, a candidate for Municipal Judge on the Socialist ticket in New York City, and the writer of a group of essays soon to be published in a book called "Hurrah for Sin!"

"I may seem to be about as rank an outsider as the Methodists could have picked for my present assignment, but they seem satisfied, and so am I. I am not a churchman, but I believe, like Jesus, in helpful service and I see a chance to help my fellow men on this assignment," he said.

His immediate destination is Cheng Tu, in Western China, but he has no idea as yet how to get there.

"I don't know anything about China, except that it has about 400,000,000 people, and I have always taken it for granted that most of them ran laundries. I expect to spend the next two years learning things that I would'n let my geography teacher tell me," he said

Chamber of Commerce of U. S. Plans National Advertising Campaign

SEATTLE, Aug. 20.—National advertising denning the attitude of business toward labor, designed to check the growth of Bolshevik tendencies, will soon be launched by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. This decision was reached at a meeting of the executive board of the national chamber held in Seattle this week.

Frederick J. Koster, president of the California Barrel Company, was named chairman of a committee to make plans for waging the extensive publicity campaign. Mr. Koster left here for San Francisco to immediately start work on the advertising campaign and did not accompany the board, which has been making a tour of the country, on his return trip to the East.

Portland Better Business Week Was Big Success

Ad Club Conducted Campaign in Which William P. Green of A. A. C. of W. Gave Much Assistance

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 20.—Material assistance for the week's campaign for truthful advertising, that is being conducted by the Better Business Bureau of the Portland Ad Club, is being received from William P. Green, organization secretary of the national vigilance committee. Mr. Green is making a tour of the Pacific Coast, having already visited Spokane. After a week here he will go before San Francisco, Oakland and Los Angeles.

Mr. Green is throwing new light on the ethics of advertising to audiences of business men and employes of business houses whom he is addressing. He also is meeting the buying public, particularly the women, and giving them an insight into the motives and methods behind the great advancement that has already been made in the standard of newspaper advertising.

"Every merchant in the country who believes in honest advertising, as all reliable business men do, is personally damaged every time untruthful statements appear before the public from the hands of fake investment sharks," said Mr. Green soon after his arrival in Portland. "The people are influenced to lose confidence in advertising in general and made to lack faith in the honest statements of legitimate business men.

"Today business is built upon a wholehearted service to the public, and the vital force in business, namely, advertising, has come to be known as an investment in public confidence. The great function of advertising is not only to get business, but to build and retain business. Advertising wins public friendliness and confidence.

"While it may be safely estimated that 90 per cent of the total volume of advertising is truthful, the remaining 10 per cent, or less, of misrepresentations breeds a general distrust of advertising that is far reaching and damaging. Advertising was first seized upon by the quack and faker, and extravagant advertising was the rule, rather than the exception, forty years ago.

"However, since advertising has been used by reliable business it has become more truthful and believable as the volume of advertising has increased. Advertising and business men must and are taking steps to purge advertising of fraud, falsehood and deception of every sort, even half-truths and petty deceits."

CHICAGO MAN GOES WEST

Charles F. Armstrong Joins the Izzard Company of Portland and Seattle

Charles L. Armstrong, for some time past associate copy director for Mallory, Mitchell & Faust, Chicago, will leave that connection September 1 to associate himself with the Izzard Co. advertising agency, of Seattle and Portland, Ore., in which he has purchased an interest.

There he will have charge of merchandising and copy planning departments, The Izzard Co. has simultaneously established Chicago connections with Greig & Glover, Inc., 440 South Dearborn street, Chicago.

A. J. Izzard is president of the Izzard Co. and was lately a visitor in Chicago, at which time he established the connection. The Izzard Co. was developed six or seven years ago from the old White advertising agency, of Seattle, which was one of the pioneer organizations of its kind in the Pacific northwest.

Democratic weekly of a far West county seat paid owner $3,675.80 in year ending April 30, 1919, for his personal effort and income on the investment. Can be bought for $8,500; $5,500 cash necessary.

HAS LITERALLY GROWN UP IN NEWSPAPER OFFICE

SAVERY M. LEWIS, who owns and publishes the Ruston (La.) Leader, daily and weekly, is equipped on any part of his plant and run whatever job he cares to take hold of. Literally, he grew up in the business of making and producing a newspaper.

His father, Judge Thomas C. Lewis, owned the Farmerville (La.) Union Record when Savery was born in that town, February 12, 1869, and gave the son a job in the mechanical department when the latter was 15 years old. So he has been "devil," compositor, makeup, pressman, advertising manager, business manager, reporter, copy-reader, managing editor and publisher.

When Savery became of age he took rather a office in the Farmerville newspaper, left home and went to Ruston, La., to study law. He dropped that ambition, however, and became chief deputy clerk of Lincoln Parish. After a decade or so of political life he found the smell of printers' ink still in his nostrils, so he became interested in the Ruston Leader and became president of the company that published it.

The company's affairs took such a turn in 1902 that it had to go into liquidation, and Mr. Lewis became sole owner of the plant and of the newspaper, and took hold as editor and publisher. Two years later he began the publication of the Daily Leader, and has published both daily and weekly ever since. That is, he put Ruston on the map as the only city of its size in Louisiana with a daily newspaper.

TWO AMERICAS CAN BE WELDED BY NEWSPAPERS, SAYS EDITOR

Better Understanding Between Peoples of These Continents Is Needed, He Warns Publishers, Because Germany Is Preparing for a Great Trade War

IN '49 when America's youth was blazing new trails westward, across southwestern deserts and through tropical jungles, in their rush to the gold fields of California and new wealth, the fatest trail was marcouned a party of men at Cristobal, Panama, on July 4 of that year.

To properly celebrate that great day in world history they decided to publish an American newspaper as a lasting chronicle of their stay in that strange and new country.

New Star Appeared July 4, 1849

Their journey and their hopes were toward the setting sun, and their thoughts were no doubt that day, "Westward the Star of the Empire takes its way." So they called their little two-column, one-sheet, The Star. They were proud of the paper, and the fellow who ran the little one-man shop where it was printed liked it so well he decided to make it a weekly event in the community if Americans continued to pass that way.

The Star is still being issued regularly, daily now instead of weekly. Its present name is the Star-Herald, as the result of its consolidation with a later-day paper. It is now a 10-page paper with Associated Press telegraph news, and up and down the West Coast it is looked upon by many persons and institutions as the spokesman of American ideals.

The family of the late Joseph Gabriel Dupuy has been interested in the paper for half a century. Associated with them at the present time as one of the proprietors and chief editorial writer is S. P. Verner, a South Carolinian.

Went to Panama with Gen. Gorgas

Mr. Verner, who went to Panama ten years ago with General Gorgas on his mission on sanitation, is a deep student of Latin-American affairs. He is now bringing to a close a six months' visit to the United States, resting part of the time from his newspaper labors, which, during the war, included official representation of the Committee on Public Information, but devoting some time to arranging here to widening the scope of the Star-Herald in the news field and its American influence.

Incidentally, the Star-Herald is not worrying a great deal about the price of newsprint, as it sells for 5 cents the copy.

Before going to Panama, Mr. Verner spent 13 years in Central Africa and four years in Mexico and South America. Twenty years ago he was for a time a Washington correspondent. At various times and at many places he has acted as a special correspondent of the London Times and the New York Sun.

In discussing the affairs of South America with EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week, he said:

"The newspapers, magazines and advertising agencies of the United States can do three big things for the promotion of the commercial, social and political influence of the United States in Latin-America.

"The first is to increase the amount and to improve the quality of the news about Latin-American affairs. I have been amused to see how much space in our newspapers is taken up with unimportant local matters—petty police records, the vast mass of society, theatrical, sporting and other news—to the relative exclusion of important events in Latin-America, while even the other foreign news—from Europe, Asia, etc.—consists often of much petty gossip where events of large bearing on the present and future relations of the two Americas are conspicuous by their absence.

New Print Paper Source

"For example, how many American manufacturers with direct or indirect interest in airplanes know that a Central-American tree, the Balsa (or Ochroma Lagopus) has lately been discovered whose timber is the best known for aeroplane bodies?

"In this day when print-paper is so scarce, how many know that a process has been worked out in Venezuela for making paper from sugar-cane megass, of which enormous quantities are available in the West Indies and Latin-America?

"How many know that Japanese are welcome in Ecuador and are likely to get well-established on the West Coast of South America?

"How many know about the enormous resources of the two big German banks in South America, whose assets have been scarcely touched by the war and which are now ready to promote the tide of German immigration preparing to flood South America?

"Such items of news rarely get much wide publicity in the United States, yet they have a direct bearing on the business and political relations between the peoples of the two continents.

"The second is that the doings of citizens of the United States in Latin-America ought to be chronicled more fully, widely and sympathetically.

The Colombian Treaty

"A good illustration of the importance of this is afforded by the recent developments in the matter of the ratification of the pending Colombian treaty. It is said that some American interests in Colombia are menaced by proposed measures in that country, and the American people are called upon to decide whether a clause must be inserted in the treaty to endeavor to guarantee protection to those interests.

"It is a matter of large importance to the present and future interests of American business in South America that the action in this matter be well considered; that in the effort to protect these existing or projected interests in Colombia the negotiations should not prejudice much larger present and prospective interests both in Colombia and all over the southern continent.

"But how can the American people act intelligently in this matter unless they know who and what the interests are, and what the measures inimical to them are?

"The lack of previous information on this subject handicaps them immensely in wisely and promptly deciding this matter, yet it ought to be decided soon.

"This brings up the third need—that American merchants, manufacturers, and others seeking Latin-American trade advertise in the Latin-American newspapers.

"This is one of the very best possible ways to accomplish three big purposes—to get the good will of the Latin-American press, to inform Latin-Americans about what they can buy in the United States and where, and to stimulate the Latin-American editors and journalists to send news about their communities to the press associations and newspapers in the United States.

"The enormous potential business of Latin-America, as well as much of the actual current business with the United States there, may be lost or least severely handicapped unless the American people wake up on this subject, and these three elements in the awakening—more news, better news, and advertising in Latin-America are among the most important means to the end of mutual profit and of mutual good will.

South Americans Will Reciprocate

"On the other hand, if this stimulus be given, Latin-Americans will learn to reciprocate.

"They will advertise their lands, mines and products in American papers. They will buy American newspapers and periodicals more freely.

"They will seek to give to American papers a true picture of their local political and other conditions, for they will realize the value of accuracy when its influence on their immediate business is direct and clear, and they will begin to form personal ties with their correspondents and patrons in the United States which will be one of the best agencies for dissipating mistrust, removing ignorance, and creating a unity of spirit in both continents."

PENNSYLVANIA

A man died last week. He was very young when he went to Pennsylvania. He was poor, but before he died he gave away over three hundred millions of dollars—and every dollar he gave away he made in Pennsylvania.

He did not give all of his money away—but died one of the richest men in the United States.

He not only became a millionaire but he created many other millionaires—all of them in Pennsylvania.

No state can offer more or better opportunities for money making than can this great Keystone State.

Commercially Pennsylvania is a producer and with Pennsylvania's prosperity comes Pennsylvania's demand for goods of all kinds—and Pennsylvania's daily newspapers to carry your message to these people.

These daily newspapers co-operate in every way to make advertising pay and pay handsomely. Use them to get your share of the prosperity.

Daily newspaper advertising works alone to better advantage than does any other kind of advertising.

Daily newspapers, with their local circulation, their local news and their local advertising, do more toward popularizing merchandise than does any other kind of advertising.

These daily newspapers, in this highly profitable territory, tell the home news to these people, day by day, and can tell your story to a much greater advantage than you can get it told any other way.

This Is Real Supremacy In Automobile Advertising

Opinions Differ Here

Most national advertisers believe in Sunday advertising. A few believe in Sunday advertising exclusively. Some do not believe in Sunday advertising at all. Practically all advertisers believe in week-day advertising. Most advertisers believe in both.

Your own home town newspapers will show you that more advertising is done on week-days than on Sundays. That is because the greater number of advertisers believe that the proper time to secure buying attention is on one or more, or all, of the six business days of the week. And their experience proves this buying attention to be more effective when it is commanded at home in the evening, when individual and family needs are determined and discussed.

But Not Here

In Chicago there is no difference of opinion, so far as The Daily News is concerned, in the six-day field. More business men buy more Daily News advertising, both local and national, than they buy of any other Chicago newspaper on the six buying days of the week.

The Daily News leads in nearly every important department of advertising, display and classified.

It is the predominant week-day newspaper of Chicago, and the best advertising brains in America act on the fact.

Nor Here

The uncontested leadership of The Daily News in all departments of advertising on the six business days of the week makes it the natural week-day preference of the automobile advertiser. There is little or no difference of opinion on this, as is shown by the record of automobile lineage in Chicago for the month of July, 1919:

The Daily News FIRST	62,663
Post	47,703
Tribune	40,123
Journal	23,046
American	21,646
Herald and Examiner	12,343

Automobile advertisers realize that the American Family is the buying jury when the automobile is bought. Therefore they turn first to The Daily News because 77.7% of all the people in Chicago and suburbs read The Daily News every day.

Canadian Reciprocity

Canadians are perhaps just a wee bit clannish. They think pretty well of Canada, of themselves and of their fellow Canadians and Canadian institutions.

They read Canadian newspapers, buy their goods from Canadian merchants and are quick to recognize and respond to reciprocity on the part of manufacturers in the United States who go into Canada with this idea in mind.

Do not treat Canada as a by-product. Do not rely upon the by-product circulation of United States publications to popularize your merchandise in Canada.

Canadian people and Canadian business are worthy of more consideration than that.

Canadian daily newspapers reflect the spirit of Canadians better than do the foreign publications—and can serve you more adequately.

This list of representative daily newspapers of Canada can and will help you capture Canadian Commerce.

Use them and be convinced.

Germany Bars War Memoirs of Von Tirpitz

(By Press Dispatch)

BERLIN, August 26.

VON TIRPITZ'S memoirs will not be published—not just yet. They were in the hands of the booksellers weeks ago, but the revelations in the National Assembly at Weimar and in home and foreign newspapers caused the authorities to force withdrawal of the publication. The Government objected to certain portions of the contents.

Very little interest is taken in Germany in Ludendorff's revelations. The Pan-German papers are printing short extracts only.

This is the story the BELL SYNDICATE, INC., offers for FIRST AMERICAN PUBLICATION in the NEWSPAPERS of the United States.

To Americans, VON TIRPITZ was the ARCH VILLAIN, the MURDERER, who stood beside the Imperial throne and fatefully for Germany, forced the United States, step by step, into the war.

The Kaiser probably never will be brought to trial. It is almost certain that VON TIRPITZ will be tried. His story is in part a brief of his evidence that will be brought before his trial court.

He admits that the Submarine Campaign was lost because Germany failed to hold resolutely to the determination to use every means at her disposal. He declares that the Submarine Campaign should have been launched without an hour's notice to the neutral nations of the world. Hence this frank book is suppressed.

In INTIMATE LETTERS TO HIS WIFE he tells the TRUTH ABOUT GERMANY during the war. HE KNEW GERMANY WAS TOTTERING and he tells how the EMPIRE FELL.

AMERICAN PAPERS WEAR "7-LEAGUE BOOTS" "SPURS OF GOLD," WORLD TRIBUNAL PRIZE

Newspaper Men Will Reach New Heights of Importance Where Nations Meet to Barter

By William G. Shepherd.
Famous American War Correspondent.

Geneva, Switzerland.

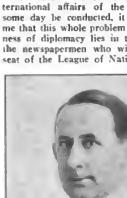
As I stood on the proposed site of the seat of the League of Nations, bordering the shores of Lake Geneva, one day recently, it occurred to me that a new branch of journalism had been born and that the world is soon to see a new kind of newspaper man.

There are houses and barns to be torn down, on this site, if it is to be chosen, farms to be wiped out and smoothed over; orchards to be cut down, and lanes of great trees to be leveled. I could, in imagination, see the great space, fronting one mile on the lake and extending back a distance of two miles, dotted with great office buildings, each building bulging with news of world-wide importance for the reporter who will know how to get it.

All News Will Be Big News Where Nations Meet

Out there, in the lake, as present plans go, the ocean-flying aeroplanes, couriers of the League of Nations, will alight after journeys from the farthest ends of the earth, bringing news that will jar or thrill entire corners of the world, if not the world itself. The new kind of reporter that I saw in my fancy must be able to dig out this news quickly, and tell it simply, so that people of all races can understand it.

Great wireless masts, perhaps the most powerful on earth, will rise above the buildings, whispering or hearing messages that go or come to or from everywhere. The newspaperman who is to cover the League of Nations in future days must know what these messages are about, if possible.



No news will be too small to notice, at the seat of the League of Nations. Indeed, there will be no small news there. Every item will have to do with the welfare or the woe of hundreds of thousands, if not millions of human beings.

Oldtime Diplomacy vs. Publicity

There will be many statesmen, of all races and nationalities, who will believe that everything done by the League of Nations ought to be kept a secret. Many of them will try to do bad things—unjust, selfish things. The newspaperman who fights his way through the secrecy of the League of Nations, in future days, must be a brave pioneer. He will find himself facing the supreme test of strength between old-time diplomacy and new-time publicity and open covenants.

The poor and weak newspapermen who try the League of Nations assignments will fail on this very issue. The men who come through strong will be the men who are backed by brave and strong editors and who are determined, at all costs, to get all the news and print it.

As I stood on this site where the international affairs of the world may some day be conducted, it occurred to me that this whole problem of the openness of diplomacy lies in the hands of the newspapermen who will cover the seat of the League of Nations.

William G. Shepherd

Greater Distinction and Usefulness

Here at Geneva, if the League of Nations is to be seated here, newspapermen of hitherto unknown power and influence will rise to heights of great importance and distinction and usefulness.

There will be some newspapermen here who will become known to the statesmen of the world, who will have more influence, in many lands, than many statesmen. Their power will grow out of their relentless energy and their unchangeable determination to uncover

F. A. McKenzie, of London Daily Mail, Here to Study Us, Tells What He Has Found

AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS wear "seven-league boots," F. A. McKenzie, well-known English journalist on the staff of the London Daily Mail, tells Editor & Publisher. For that matter, he finds practically every other kind of business in this country wearing the same speedy foot-casings.

So he is writing a series of articles about it, viewed from this side of the Atlantic with English eyes and from an English viewpoint, and when these articles are completed they are to be put in a book called "America's Seven-League Boots," which is expected to be the latest and most authoritative English word on what the United States is trying to do and is doing commercially.

Making a Start in the Steerage

Mr. McKenzie is hugely interested in American newspapers and knows a lot about them—more than he knew about any other American industries before he started on his present visit to this country. When he was a young man in London, eager for a journalistic career, and not as well supplied as now with English pounds or even shillings and sixpence, he decided that the best way to lay a firm foundation for a journalistic career in England was to start working on a newspaper in New York City.

This bizarre notion was extremely shocking to several London publishers to whom he confided it—not with the best of tact, perhaps—because, not having, personally, the price of his passage across the ocean, his plan was that some one of these publishers—the one who could see a good proposition when it was shown to him—should pay for his passage and be repaid later in articles on "Why Are Americans?" sent him by young McKenzie.

His earnestness and sincerity finally so enthused one London publisher that this man consented to pay his way across—to the steerage.

"When I arrived in New York City, I entered the first newspaper office I came to and demanded work of the managing editor," he said.

"'What do you know about New York?' he asked.

"That's my strong point," I replied. "I know nothing about it and so I can write, real, first-hand impressions."

"He gave me an assignment right away, and when I returned to London, four months later, I was an authority on everything from Tammany to shirt-waists."

Henry L. Pittock Estate Will Pay $1,280,000 in Taxes

Portland, Ore., Aug. 27.—The estate of the late Henry L. Pittock, publisher of the Oregonian, will pay a federal tax of $1,040,000 and a state tax of $240,000, according to the first semi-annual report filed by the executor, O. L. Price. The net value of the estate is shown to be $6,904,701.34. A total indebtedness of $990,076.99 is listed and a gross value of $7,894,778.33.

Since the appointment of Mr. Price as executor on February 6, 1919, the receipts of the estate have been $305,306.06 and the disbursements $293,786.57, leaving a balance of $11,519.49.

From associating with native-born American cub reporters, he had acquired, personally, the conviction—be mental strawberry-mark of all—that he was a journalistic wizard and, so equipped, he lost no time in sharing this information with the heads of the big London newspapers.

He did it so convincingly that it was not very long, as time speeds in the life of an American newspaperman—or even an English journalist—before the ten famous traveling staff correspondent of the London Daily Mail, journeying a matter of 50,000 miles or so a year in search of foreign color.

He came back to America when the armistice was signed, having served a group of Canadian newspapers as correspondent at the front with the Canadian forces—but he did not come in the steerage. He was now an official representative of the British Government and there was nothing on board too good for him. When he was a cub in New York, he ate and slept in places which, the least to say, are not known even nationally. During his present stay, he is a guest of the Salmagundi Club, which is spoken of with awe in remote places.

Favors American Training

Naturally, Mr. McKenzie believes that a good place for any aspiring London journalist to start work is on an American newspaper. Incidentally—and he does not hesitate to say so, though he will soon start on a tour of Middle Western and Pacific Coast cities, where such a notion makes anyone an undesirable alien—he thinks New York is the greatest city in the country.

"It has everything," he says, with no suggestion of sporting-page slang. "It is the essence of America."

Aside from that, the other big cities of the United States are all right and he will tell the world so—through the London Daily Mail.

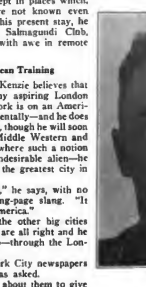
"How do New York City newspapers impress you?" he was asked.

"I know too much about them to give you an outsider's impressions. One contrast between New York and London is the greater use of humor here. We envy yon cartoonists like Briggs and writers like Don Marquis.

Suggests New Departures

"One wonders if New York newspapers have not developed to their utmost along their present lines, and if the time may not be approaching for striking new departures. If I am not much mistaken, the dailies have largely lost authority, particularly in their news departments. The weekly and monthly have taken their place as agents for molding public opinion to an extent unknown in England. The New York World is one of the papers that evidently recognize this danger, and it is endeavoring to meet it by undertaking special investigations of national importance.

"The degeneration of the New York city editor's department is due, I believe, to two things: the excessive use of agency stuff and the shocking underpayment of the reporter. 'Cubs,' and men who cannot by any stretch of imagination be called 'cubs,' are paid less in New York City than unskilled Italian laborers.



"What is the result? A constant stream of lads fresh from college passes through the city rooms. Here and there a man really makes good. A certain number remain on because of love of the life or sheer inability to do better. But the mass of good men drift away to other callings, where they can earn enough to keep body and soul together, to marry and have children.

Improving Efficiency

"From the lowest point of view, this is a bad state of affairs. I have been studying efficiency methods in America. In every great business apart from the newspaper, I find the managers today concentrating their efforts on selecting good men when they are young, training them and keeping them.

"Standard Oil has recently established a department for that purpose. Du Ponts spend over eighty thousand dollars a year on selection and keeping of their men. They know that bit-and-miss, come-and-go methods are bad economically, bad not only for the men, but also for the employers.

"In all my inquiries in America I have nowhere—outside education and the ministry—found educated workers so underpaid as in the lower ranks of the newspaper reporters. And if I do not mistake the signs of the times, there will be either reform or real trouble before long."

F. A. McKenzie.

"What do you think of the proposed exchange of newspapermen between America and England?"

Benefits of Travel

"Everything that makes the newspaperman travel is good. Everything that breaks down mutual ignorance of Americans and British about one another ought to be encouraged. But I doubt if it will be possible to arrange for many more Americans to be taken into those British offices where they would desire to go than are already there.

"There are ten London morning papers where the good American newspaperman would be glad to go; there are, yet, in the whole country-wide provincial papers, like the Manchester Guardian, the Scotsman, the Glasgow Herald and the Birmingham Post. It would probably not be wise to place more than two exchangemen in any one office. That means forty in all.

"I believe that the best method, however, is for the young newspaperman to go and fight his way for himself."

Friend of Dana Dies

Thomas A. Rossiter, who was an employee of the Sun for 46 years and for 30 years foreman of its composing room, died last week of paralysis at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Franklin A. Phelan. He began setting type for this newspaper in 1868, the first year of Charles A. Dana's editorship, and continued to work until 1914, when he retired on a pension.

WOULD INVITE FOREIGN EDITORS TO AMERICA

United States Would Benefit Through a Better Understanding of This Country, James M. Thomson, of New Orleans Item Says

James M. Thomson, publisher of the New Orleans Item, has written Editor & Publisher in reference to an editorial in his newspaper proposing that representative editors and publishers of other countries be invited to come to the United States and gain, at first hand, a better understanding of this country, its people and its institutions. The editorial reads:

"Americans have been abroad in great numbers during the European war. A few skilled journalists came to our own country during the war. Europe is beginning to have some understanding of America. It needs a better one. The United States would do itself and the world a good turn if this country would invite the representative editors and publishers of the world to come here and see it. Some expense would attach to bringing them here. But of all the countries of the world our own country is in the best position to extend hospitality.

"The press of the world has been filled with 'propaganda' for five years. Those who direct its destinies should be invited to come to America, travel over the country, see it at peace, ask what questions they desire, and meet our representative people.

Would Invite Canadians

"Our Candian brethren should be invited to come to the United States at the same time, and any of our visitors who desire should be entertained by the American press in Canada just as they are in the United States.

"The North American continent has come to play a vastly more important part in the affairs of the world. The journalists of Italy, France, Great Britain, Japan, China, and America, would probably be interested to come and look us over.

"The particular objects of such a party would be served if our visitors could be made to have a good time, if no one made them long speeches, or tried to sell them anything. The best and most lasting friendship between peoples grows out of disinterested acquaintance and the extension of hospitality of a type which seeks nothing but the keeping of friendly relations in repair. We do not believe that anyone who really knows the United States will ever come to dislike it. Our people have been indifferent in the past and have not cared that other nations should get acquainted with us through their natural agents of acquaintance, the directors of their press. Now that we have space, let's extend that acquaintance a bit."

"A Good Investment"

In commenting on this editorial, in his letter to Editor & Publisher, Mr. Thomson writes:

"I was in the first party of American newspaper and magazine men who were taken over to England by the British government last year, with the idea of showing us England and France in the war. I think that all of the members of our party and of subsequent parties feel that they got a great deal out of this.

"It is my thought that if the publishers of America could not put up the funds directly to bring over and entertain a large number of allied and neutral editors and publishers, some active committee could be formed in this country and the towns throughout the United States that these people would visit and that they could raise what funds are needed.

"I don't believe that our government would pay for such trips outright, but I have an idea that the federal railway administration might be induced to furnish transportation over the country to such visitors, if we ever get far enough along with a party of this kind.

"I sincerely believe the country could make no better investment than this. It would not greatly benefit the public interests of America in a selfish way, but I feel that it would be a kind of good thing, all around, to do. Of course, interest in the proposition would have to be aroused by the newspaper trade papers."

Louisville C-J. and Times Hostile, Labor Charges

Resolution Asking for Boycott Passed Over Protest of Resolution Committee and All Printing Trades

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 27.—The Louisville Times and the Courier-Journal have been placed on what amounts to an "unfair" list and an appeal to union men to boycott them has been made by the local Trades and Labor Assembly, over the protest of a Resolutions Committee of the Assembly to whom the matter had been referred for action, and with all the printing trades opposing it.

Resolutions declaring that the two newspapers printed articles and cartoons which were inimical to union labor were passed after J. O. Ames, chairman of the Resolutions Committee, had urged that it should be defeated because the Times and the Courier-Journal recognized in their employ five distinct labor organizations. The resolutions read:

"Whereas, The Louisville Times, an afternoon newspaper, published by the Courier-Journal and Times Company, allowed its editors and cartoonist to print and paint literature and cartoons in said paper, detrimental to organized labor, and

Cartoon Displeases

SENATE IS NOW AWAKE TO NEED FOR ACTION ON NEWS PRINT

Investigation of Prices Already Begun by Committee on Manufactures and Resolution, Providing for Forest Survey and Conservation, Is Offered by Senator Watson

By Robert T. Barry

Washington, August 27.

NATIONAL legislators at last seem to be awakening to the growing concern of newspaper publishers over the newsprint situation and the fact that something should be done to improve present conditions and provide for an adequate supply to meet growing needs.

One Senate investigation obtained through the initiative of Senator Reed of Missouri of the manufacture of newsprint, with special attention to prices and "any discriminatory, unjust or illegal practices," began on Monday, and another was asked in a resolution introduced by Senator Watson of Indiana, last Saturday, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make a survey of the available wood pulp timber supply in the Northwest, Central and Western sections of the United States, and take steps for forest conservation.

Appropriates $100,000 for Timber Survey

Senator Watson's resolution was sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for consideration. It appropriates $100,000 for the proposed survey, which could be conducted by the United States Forestry Service of the Department of Agriculture.

In offering the resolution, Senator Watson quoted from a report of the U. S. Forestry Service, printed in Editor & Publisher, August 7, which recommends, as a means of preventing newspapers in that country from becoming dependent on a foreign supply:

"Immediately, an adequate governmental survey of American resources in this field.

"Immediately, steps to bring about the practice of forestry and the conservation of forests in the pulp-producing regions, to the end that the annual inroads upon the forests will be lessened, and eventually, will be no more than equal to the annual growth. This part of the program would require Federal and State legislation.

"As soon as practicable, development of the pulp-making industry in the northwest and in Alaska."

Urgent Need for Action

The Forestry Service report quoted by Senator Watson, also said the importance of such a survey of the timber available for pulp could not be overstated "for the reason that it is absolutely necessary to know just what we have, as all methods of replacement, conservation and general questions in connection with the solution of this problem must be based upon the present available supply and the probable time it will last.

"There were consumed in the United States during the year 1918, 5,250,794 cords of pulp wood. If these cords were placed end to end they would reach entirely across the Continent of North America and nearly to the middle of the Pacific Ocean; one-third of this made from timber cut in the United States, enough to make one long cord of wood from Boston to Liverpool.

"The demand for pulp wood is increasing and the supply is diminishing. The requirements of wood are so many that the time has come to have an accurate survey made of this great natural resource, with recommendations for its conservation and replacement. If the invention of the printing press was the greatest factor for civilization, it is certainly high time that we awake to the situation we are facing."

At a meeting on Monday of the Manufactures Committee of the Senate, which is in charge of the inquiry obtained through Senator Reed, a subcommittee was appointed by Senator La Follette, to conduct the inquiry. Its scope, which the Senator assured the Senate would not duplicate the work of the Federal Trade Commission with respect to news print prices, was outlined in his resolution as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures or any sub-committee thereof is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the news print paper industry and to ascertain whether it is now or has been engaged in discriminatory, unjust or illegal practice, and whether the prices now being charged for news print paper, or similar products, are excessive and the causes for existing prices.

"The committee shall report to the Senate the result of its investigation together with such findings and recommendations as it may deem proper to make."

Prior to this resolution, as reported at the time in Editor & Publisher, the Department let it be known that it still was fighting the battle of the publishers in the matter of prices for inducing a Federal court to reopen the question of the prices fixed as of May 1 and July 1, 1918, at a hearing beginning October 6, by the judges of the United States Circuit Court for the Second Circuit, in New York City.

HOW MUCH SPACE FOR BASEBALL NEWS?

Estimates of Editors and Publishers Vary —Victor F. Lawson Suggests Four Columns Daily for Metropolitan Papers During Playing Season

"In view of need for newsprint conservation, what is a reasonable space allotment for baseball each day during the playing season? What space should be given between seasons?"

Editor & Publisher this week submitted these questions to some representative editors and publishers. Among the responses received np to press-time is a telegram from Victor F. Lawson, of the Chicago Daily News, in which he testifies to the strong appeal of baseball to the American people, and expresses the view that in major league cities, supporting two teams, newspapers would be justified in giving to baseball three to four columns of space daily during the playing season, with three-quarters to one column between seasons. As many metropolitan newspapers double this allotment day by day, it is plain that the adoption of Mr. Lawson's suggestion would bring about important savings of space.

Victor F. Lawson, Chicago Daily News

Baseball is the one sport in which all American lovers of sport take some degree or interest. Therefore it is entitled to more space than any of the other sports during the baseball season, and even for several weeks before the season opens. In a city like New York or Chicago, where there are two or more major league teams of immediate interest to newspaper readers, baseball requires more space than it does in a city with fewer local sources of baseball news. Roughly, a New York or Chicago newspaper may properly average from three to four columns of baseball news daily in the season, and from three-quarters of a column to one column daily out of season. This takes no account of space in Sunday papers.

Frank P. Glass, Birmingham News

There is no question that there is great necessity for newsprint conservation. It is plain that publishers must inaugurate as much restriction on space given to various features of their papers as they can possibly persuade their managing editors to agree to.

I find that we have been running three columns daily on professional ball, and one column on amateur ball; about eight columns on Sunday on professional, and four columns on amateur. We are going to try to ease off here to a fifty per cent basis, which I think can be safely done, though it cannot be done too rapidly and not as completely as should be the case until the end of the baseball season.

Robert E. Hughes, Louisville Courier-Journal and Times

The Courier-Journal believes a reasonable amount of space for baseball to be three and one-half to four columns during season, and two to three columns between seasons. The Louisville Times gives two and one-half columns during season and three-quarters to one column between seasons.

New Orleans Item

We are now devoting about three columns a day to baseball alone. This does not include other sports. In off seasons we devote about half this space to baseball.

NEWSPAPER MAKING

A Department of Practical Service for Publishers and Advertisers Conducted by Jason Rogers, Publisher of the New York Globe, and Author of "Fundamentals of Newspaper Building," "Newspaper Building" and "Building Newspaper Advertising"

We newspaper men who make and sell the most vital force in modern business and industry—the sort of advertising that actually sells things—do not half take advantage of our opportunities for greater usefulness and profit. Because of our inefficiencies and owing to the lack of intelligent and effective co-operative work on our part, we do not get the merits of our goods before prospective customers.

I realize that perhaps in sounding this note in the midst of the present deluge of advertising coming to us I may seem a bit out of season, as it were, but according to my theory of a manufacturer's line provides the very best and most effective "dealer influence" yet devised. Such advertising is not only cheaper than that of the general medium, but it can be used much more effectively as a leverage to secure distribution.

Newspaper advertising can be used to-day for results to-morrow. The purchasing power of the country has become accustomed to read the news of the local shops as reflected in their newspaper advertising with as much interest as the news and feature matter contained in their daily papers.

Few newspaper men devote the necessary time to the study of the the superiority of one competing newspaper over another, often stirring up a cloud of dust which discourages the prospect doing business with either or any of them.

The efforts of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association stand as conclusive proof of the point I raise. It is but a shadow of what it would be if backed by the whole-hearted support of the newspapers of the country, and organized to secure the best and ablest talent obtainable to set up the case of newspaper advertising.

Back in 1912, when I had over 800 daily newspapers simultaneously carry on any big worth-while campaign of trade paper advertising or solicitation, and is stifled by restrictions placed upon it by members of the old guard in the American Newspaper Publishers Association that never intended to do anything.

The daily newspapers cover the United States with a thoroughness unapproached by any other medium. They reach the people every day. Figures show that the total combined daily circulation of the 2,100 English language evening and morning newspapers is over 28,000,000, reaching every worth-while person in the country who has money with which to buy advertised articles.

The foolish pretense of some of the solicitors representing the general media that they circulate among those with most money to spend is exploded, for any business man of most ordinary intelligence knows that every one who trades with him buys and reads newspapers, including those who also buy magazines and other periodicals.

Class appeal is a foolish thing to doing business now is the accepted time to prevent any falling off that may be ahead of us. Now is the time to powerfully demonstrate the superiority of newspaper advertising to all other kinds in such a way that the conviction will stick.

THE SHADED CIRCLES IN THE MAP ABOVE SHOW THE POPULATION CENTERS OF THE UNITED STATES, ALL OF WHICH ARE COVERED COMPLETELY BY INTENSIFIED TWICE-A-DAY NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION. THE WHITE CIRCLES SHOW THE IMPORTANT AUXILIARY MARKETS OF THESE POPULATION CENTERS, WITHIN THESE CIRCLES ARE LOCATED BETWEEN 75 AND 85 PER CENT OF THE WEALTH AND PURCHASING POWER OF THE NATION AND WHICH CAN BE DOMINATED BY THE ADVERTISER ONLY BY THE USE OF THE DAILY NEWSPAPERS, AS IS EXPLAINED BY MR. ROGERS IN THE ACCOMPANYING ARTICLE.

Newspaper advertising is the only sort of advertising which can be directly linked to the names of dealers handling a manufacturer's goods, town by town, section by section, in exact accord with distribution or desire for trade stimulation, without waste or lost motion.

Newspaper advertising over the names of dealers or agents handling other side of the equation. They thus fail to fully discover their loss of wonderful opportunities for exploiting the sale of the marvelous force they create and control. Almost all that newspaper men have time to do or think about is the getting out of their publication and the selling of such advertising space as they can.

Instead of our newspapers all getting together, locally and nationally, and contributing substantial support for the strongest possible demonstration of the almost magical productivity of the advertising space they have for sale, too many of them devote their energies trying to prove printing first page advertising talks and gathering local data for compilation and transmission to prospective advertisers, which I later turned into the United Newspapers, we were headed in the right direction. When we made the United Newspapers the backbone of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association we made a fatal mistake, for all the bite was taken away from us.

The Bureau of Advertising is ineffective largely because it only represents a small part of the newspapers of the United States and Canada, does not take in enough money in dues to urge from any standpoint, and more particularly because it is easily demonstrated that publications appealing only to the most fastidious are practically valueless as advertising media. People of that class do not respond to advertising. Some local dealers waste money in local publications of that sort, but they do so more largely from sentiment than for profit.

Investigation proves that daily newspaper advertising costs less that one-third as much per line per thousand as general medium space. Daily newspaper advertising can be made to pull with 100 per cent. efficiency while general medium advertising is waste opened my eyes as to the weakness of past appeals by the newspapers for general advertising. It started me thinking in terms of concentration, intensification and efficiency. I dug into various statistical data and produced many very interesting figures, some of which are reproduced on the opposite page.

I found that 57,000,000 of the 105,000,000 people living in the United States live in the Eastern, Middle, and Central states shown in the tabulation, and that 20,000,000 of the total daily circulation of 28,000,000 was in the same territory.

I found that in this great, prosperous belt of country the people have $7,585,000,000 of the total of $4,215,000,000 savings bank deposits in the country.

I found that in this section $18,934,000,000 of the country's $24,246,000,000 of manufactured products are made.

I found that the people in this section raised $15,174,000,000 of the $17,763,000,000 for the first four Liberty Loans.

Here is the great big beating heart ful in exact proportion to the lack of 100 per cent. distribution of the manufacturer in every city and town in the country.

All the talk of the salesmen of space in the general media that their space is worth more per line per thousand on account of the longer life of their medium is much more than upset by the handicap of the long months of delay between the preparation of their copy and its appearance and the utter inability of the advertiser to include the names of dealers carrying the goods for sale in every city.

Some years ago it was possible for salesmen to stock up dealers with a line of goods on the strength of showing them a series of pages to be published in the general media. To-day things are different, for dealers have learned at their cost that it is one thing to stock up and another to sell the goods. Manufacturers are learning that the dealer prefers local newspaper advertising with his name attached to it, for the dealer's experience is that this is the best kind of advertising to move the goods from his shelves.

In spite of these facts we, the manufacturers of the most resulitful sort of advertising, sit calmly by and permit those exploiting other types of media, through better and more effective co-operation, to get away with millions of dollars of business which would produce much larger returns for the advertiser in our columns.

Likewise we permit others under pretense of providing "dealer helps" to waste other fortunes in expensive printed matter and junk which does not produce the degree of interest that a sound line of copy over the dealer's name in his local newspaper would produce.

Some weeks ago, in studying the matter of newspaper advertising in a national way, I hit upon the preparation of a page ad, which would show how completely the daily newspapers covered the country. The map is printed on opposite page. I found that the use of 310 newspapers, with 13,650,000 circulation, costing $22.29 per line on a 5,000-line contract, would cover all the principal business centres of the country.

The preparation of that page ad, opened my eyes as to the weakness of past appeals by the newspapers for general advertising. It started me thinking in terms of concentration, intensification and efficiency. I dug into various statistical data and produced many very interesting figures, some of which are reproduced on the opposite page.

I found that 57,000,000 of the 105,000,000 people living in the United

ENGLISH PAPERS AID GOVERNMENT IN SOLVING MANY PROBLEMS

London Times Scores Triumph By Its Series of Articles on an Ingenious Scheme for the Administration of Ireland by All-Irish Parliament.

By Herbert Ridout
London Editor, Editor & Publisher

London, Aug. 27.

WHETHER government by newspaper would be an improvement upon the Mother of Parliaments it is difficult to say, but certain it is that British newspapers have been during the past few years helpful allies to the powers that be in the government of the country.

Now the London Times has scored a distinct triumph by devoting much space to a series of articles on an ingenious scheme for the government of Ireland and it would appear from their very friendly reception that there is a real possibility of the Times suggestion of an All-Ireland Parliament becoming the basis of a solution to the problem of that country.

London Times Is Preparing Irish Number

This is said without any reference, of course, to the political value or otherwise of the proposal, but as indicating that the influence of a well-conducted and responsible journal is benign and wholly for communal good.

The Times, in developing its Irish scheme, will publish a special Irish number in the early autumn. It will be presented with the object of stimulating general interest in Irish industries, commerce, and resource, as well as deal with the economic position of the country.

An Advertising Success

One of the most striking successes of modern newspaper advertising has been the application by the Surplus Government Property Disposal Board of extensive space to selling the stores accumulated for continuance of the war.

When the armistice was signed in November last, a demand went up that it should be rendered impossible for private enterprise to acquire any surplus war stores or goods no longer required for profiteering at throw-away prices.

It was urged that as these goods were the property of the country, they should be sold at market value for the relief of the country's finances. The Government was appalled at the idea of becoming salesman and inquired how it was done. The answer was "Advertise public auctions at which the goods should be sold."

A few experiments were made with double-column advertisement offering motor cars and motorcycles, and the extraordinary prices realized showed that the plan was not merely feasible but profitable.

Today every newspaper of any importance in the country is carrying advertisements of auctions of surplus Government war stores. The advertising is being applied to every conceivable class of goods, including motors, cars, lorries, airships and air propellers (being offered for private sale as hatstands), portable airship sheds, aeroplanes, munition factories, and plants, furniture, bedding, linen, equipment, cycles, horses, saddlery, army tents and huts, copper wire, hundreds of thousands of yards of various textiles, and innumerable other lines. At all the resulting sales the goods realize phenomenal prices—a fact which is in itself a vindication of the extensive newspaper advertising in use.

Cartoons a Growing Feature

Our newspapers are going in more strongly for cartoons than ever before. They are not, perhaps, so aggressive in this respect as American publishers, but the tendency is in that direction. The dozen of newspaper cartoonists is, of course, "F. C. G." of the Westminster Gazette (Sir Francis Carruthers Gould); outside of this the cartoons have been confined to the humorous and satirical weeklies. Then W. K. Haselden came on the scene in the Daily Mirror with his cartoons on habits and manners, and later the Evening News introduced "Poy," with his delicious characters of John Citizen, "Dora," Dilly and Dally, the Mandarins, Dux and Drakes and Low, the cartoonist of the Sydney Bulletin (Australia) is due here early in the winter.

New Building in Fleet Street

Fleet street is a wonderful place these days. Always an avenue of newspaper offices, today it is impossible to find an empty corner of available office room. Not only are country newspapers constantly coming to town to be identified with the Street of Ink—a title of the christening of Mr. H. Simonis, of the Daily News and Leader, which has almost ousted Philip Gibbs' nomenclature of the Street of Adventure—but American business men and newspaper and advertising men have crowded into the thoroughfare to be near the fountains of advertisement and publicity.

There is much activity among American visitors in the locality, who believe that the British manufacturer, as soon as he recovers something like normal productivity, will be willing to invade the American market. But, as I warned

Moorhead Joins Critchfield

R. E. Moorhead has been added to the service and soliciting staff of Critchfield & Co., Chicago. other types of officialdom; Louis Raemakers broke fresh ground with his biting allegories in coarse but vivid charcoal studies. Then the Evening News made a new discovery and a departure in cartoons of news interest by Tom Webster—comic skits of the personalities in the big news events of the day.

Now the Daily Express has introduced the frankly comic in Mutt and Jeff, Bud Fisher seeming to have been bitten with the idea that the readers of the Express have no other interest but those of betting, which is a limitation to a wonderful creation that many of Fisher's admirers here regret. Some of the Sunday papers give cartoons, but they are ineffective

POST-DISPATCH'S BONUS

Twenty Per Cent for Employees Not Under Union Contracts

St. Louis, Aug. 25.—A bonus of 20 per cent on salaries from Jan. 1 to Aug. 22 was distributed today by the Pulitzer Publishing Co. to editorial and other employes of the St. Louis Post Dispatch, except mechanical workers under union contracts, as an emergency measure to meet "the extraordinary increase in the present cost of living."

It was announced that another bonus of 20 per cent, dating from August 22, would be paid at the end of the present year.

N. Y. BANS SIGNS ON HIGHWAYS

Commissioner of Highways Cites Law Forbidding Them

Utica, N. Y., Aug. 27.—In his campaign against advertising signs along State Highways, Frederick Stuart Greene has instructed the division engineers to enforce the law prohibiting their erection. Daily Chautauqua signs and advertisements of county fairs will be allowed to remain. Business firm signs with advertisements below danger warnings are also barred; such signs will be erected by the department.

Commissioner Greene stated that "it is unnecessary for any commercial firm to erect danger signs. The highway department will attend to that. No matter whether the sign is of wood, pasteboard or metal, the law instructs us to remove and destroy them. The advertising of products or wares along the highways of the State is a detriment to the beautiful scenery and has been ordered stopped."

TO TEST AIRPLANE DELIVERY

Jackson Citizen-Patriot to Carry Papers to Distant Towns as Experiment

To demonstrate the feasibility of airplane delivery of newspapers to towns more or less remote from Jackson, Mich., the Citizen-Patriot begins to-day a special air mail service. The claim is made that this is the first attempt of the kind, on a regular schedule, to be made by any Michigan newspaper.

The test will continue for one week, and different towns will be reached each day. R. S. Craft, the circulation manager, is confident that the innovation will prove practicable.

TAKE OVER COLLIER'S

George D. Buckley is President of the New Organization

Reorganization of P. F. Collier & Son, Inc., by the Crowell Publishing Company, into whose hands the management of the famous publishing house has passed, occurred this week when the P. F. Collier & Son Company took over the assets and good will of the old company.

The officers of the new company are: President, George D. Buckley; vice-presidents, Thomas H. Beck, G. J. Kennedy, F. H. Rice; secretary, Fred Lewis; treasurer, A. E. Winger.

A. B. C. Reports

Chicago, August 27.—The Audit Bureau of Circulations has issued reports on the following newspapers: Altoona (Pa.) Mirror, Jamestown (N. Y.) Evening Journal, Jamestown (N. Y.) Morning Post.

BRITISH AND FRENCH FIRMS PLAN BIG ADVERTISING IN U. S.

Are Eager to Invade American Markets with Products New and Old, According to G. H. Larke and Robert H. Cornell of New York World

IF ANYONE were asked to supply the missing and tail-end word in the inquiry "Good Morning! Have You Used Pears' ———?" appearing in an American newspaper advertisement a few months hence, he might reply that it was piffingly obvious—but he might be wrong. The missing word might be "Dentifrice."

This is not an ad for Pears'—it is used as an illustration of what British manufacturers—and French manufacturers, too—are planning to do soon, in the way of invading the American market with new as well as old wares—all of them that are salable here—and of creating a demand for them by constant and widespread advertising.

Will Advertise Many Products Here

If present plans are carried out—and there is a strong likelihood that they will be—English and French products that are practically unheard of in this country will be known familiarly in time to buy them as Christmas presents.

This is the news brought from abroad by G. H. Larke, assistant business manager, and Robert H. Cornell, of the national advertising department of the New York World, who have just returned from a month's sojourn in London and Paris. They went to establishing the best possible advertising connections for the World in those two cities—and they did it.

Incidentally, the outlook is so good for a liberal use of advertising space in American newspapers this fall and winter by English manufacturers that the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association is writing the American Chamber of Commerce in London this week to learn how the two can operate to this end to the best advantage.

Wants Newspaper Data

Also, incidentally, the American Chamber of Commerce in London is a live institution and is reported to be eager just now to obtain all possible data from American newspapers on the marketing and distribution here of English products.

English and French manufacturers are determined to invade America with their products and with liberal advertising of the same at a very early date, but what is worrying them most while they are planning these campaigns is the depreciated value of English and French money, as against that in this country. England and France have their own troubles, so far as labor problems are concerned, also, according to the New York World emissaries. Mr. Larke and Mr. Cornell. Said Mr. Larke:

Nervous Uncertainty

"Our stay in England and France was very short because of the necessity of seizing our only opportunity for return before the troop movement is ended. Analysis of the situation abroad is made much more difficult, because it seemed to me, the viewpoint of men in London and Paris, whose judgment ordinarily would be considered authoritative, was so affected by a nervous uncertainty—approximating alarm at times—that their perspective seemed out of focus.

"English business, internationally at least, seemed to be still suffering from war paralysis. We arrived at the opening of the police, bakers, subway and London tube strikes with the colliers' and Liverpool dock troubles still holding over. We were frankly told it might be the beginning of "direct action" or revolution. This danger continued during half of our stay in England.

"There was grave and general dissatisfaction with Lloyd George's failure to announce even the beginning of post-war reconstruction and his failure also to reduce administrative war time costs.

"Labor does not seem to want employment, and when employed, it is complained, does not want to work but to watch the clock. The best haberdasher in New Bond street could not furnish me a single 15½ collar. Why? There was linen, he said, but no labor. Yet Trafalgar Square, the Strand and the Embankment were thronged by idlers, and they were not foreign tourists.

"I refused to believe that the traditional poise of the Britons would permit such a thing as "direct action"—either peaceful or violent—to be accomplished, and I was glad to find such Americans as Paul Derrick and Ralph Whitcomb backed up my belief, even though the British were very apprehensive.

"Mr. Whitcomb, by the way, is a strong, alert young American, who used to work on Frank P. McLennan's paper at Topeka. He passed

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND NOW HAVE 134 DAILY NEWSPAPERS

Sydney Telegraph and Melbourne Age Have Passed the 150,000 Mark in Circulation—Populations of Leading Cities Growing Rapidly

AN interesting communication from J. M. A. Ilott, director of J. Ilott, Ltd., Advertising Agents, Wellington, New Zealand, has just been received by EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Mr. Ilott, at the date of writing, had just received a copy of EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Victory International Number, and offers congratulations "on this magnificent production."

Commenting on the special article in that number on "Newspaper Work in Far Pacific Lands," by J. Martin Miller, Mr. Ilott offers some further facts as to Australia and New Zealand newspapers. The article mentioned stated that the weeklies in the four towns of New Zealand belong to the daily papers. Mr. Ilott states that no daily in Wellington publishes a weekly.

There are two Sunday papers in Sydney, the Sun and the Times, while West Australia also boasts of two. There are two evening dailies published in Christchurch, the Star and Sun. Truth has ceased publication. Sydney has two morning and two evening papers. The circulation of one of these morning papers—the Daily Telegraph—according to Mr. Ilott, is 165,000 copies daily. The circulation of the Melbourne Age is given as 152,000.

The total number of dailies in Australia at present 73; of New Zealand, 61. A daily paper for the island of Suva is published in Wellington.

As an example of advertising rates in New Zealand dailies, Mr. Ilott says that one inch for three months daily in the New Zealand Herald, circulation 40,000, costs $46; one inch for one month in the Auckland Star is $30.

The cities of the two commonwealths appear to be gaining rapidly in population. Melbourne now has about 700,000; Auckland, 134,000; Christchurch, 63,000; Wellington, 107,000.

Editor Has Private Island Where Boss Can't Reach Him

SEATTLE, Aug. 27.—Richard Buchanan is probably the only city editor in the country who owns an island. He has just returned to his desk on The Seattle Times after a two-weeks' vacation there.

When working a chief of the city desk of Tacoma Ledger, "Buck" bought a small island in the Sound. That was years ago, but every summer since then he spends his vacation on his own little isle, where there's no chance for the Times to reach him by telephone or telegraph.

WEDDED IN KAISER'S CHAPEL

Newspaper Woman Becomes Bride of Captain Schade at Coblenz

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 24.—To a Massachusetts newspaper woman has fallen the distinction of being a principal in the first all-American wedding ceremony ever performed in the State Chapel of the Kaiser's Palace at Coblenz.

The young woman was Miss Blanche Fenton, formerly of the staff of the Republican and a contributor to New York magazines. She has returned home as the wife of Capt. William H. Schade, of the Fourteenth Field Artillery. Mrs. Schade is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Fenton, of Gloucester, Mass., and went overseas last year as a canteen worker. She is a graduate of Mount Holyoke College. Capt. Schade's home is in Denver, Colo.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Aug. 27.—Plans to spend about $10,000 in advertising resources of Oklahoma in newspapers were perfected at a meeting here by officers of the Oklahoma Association of Commercial Executives, which are secretaries of the different Chambers of Commerce in the State.

In normal times about one in every fifteen Frenchmen is connected in some way with the wine and liquor trade.

Many Newspaper Men with Prince of Wales on Tour

Special Comforts Provided for Them on Royal Train—Six Famous British War Correspondents Are in Party

The visit to Canada of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales is being widely covered, not only by Canadian newspapers which are devoting a great deal of space to the royal visitor, but by the American and British press as well.

A large galaxy of correspondents, and innumerable movie men covered the initial stages of the Prince's tour of the Dominion, and many will be accommodated on the Royal train which will take the Prince clear through the Dominion to the Coast.

Six British correspondents came over on H. M. S. Dauntless, which escorted the new British battleship Renown, on which the Prince came. They are: Percival Phillips, of the London Express; Gerald Campbell, of the London Times; H. Warner Allen, of the London Morning Post; W. T. Massey, of the Daily Telegraph; Douglas Newton, of the Chronicle, and Mr. Coates, of Reuter's Agency.

All of these correspondents were on various fronts during the war. Mr. Massey gave the world the first news of the fall of Jerusalem.

The American staff correspondents who were at St. John, N. B., to report the Prince's arrival were: George R. Holmes, International News Service; C. M. Bayer, of the New York World; A. W. Thomson, of the New York Sun; Q. L. Martin, of the New York Herald; Herbert Corey, of the Associated Newspapers, and Miss Ruth Bodwell, of the Boston Post.

Practically all the big Canadian dailies have staff men on the trip. The press arrangements have been in charge of John Bassett, representing the Canadian Press.

At the Prince's request, the correspondents were presented to him at Quebec, and he thus frankly interviewed in their work. He told them that he was looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to his visit to the United States, and he expressed the hope that the Americans could cover the entire trip with him.

The Royal train, which was formed at Quebec, is the last word in luxurious conveyances. It is a new all-steel train of nine coaches, pulled by a giant engine, and is the heaviest train that was ever pushed across continent by the Canadian Pacific.

One of these coaches has been given over to the six British correspondents, three Americans and the representative of the Canadian Press.

PULP WOOD IN LABRADOR

Timber Cruisers Using Airplanes Report Important Discovery

MONTREAL, Aug. 27.—Timber cruisers using aeroplanes have discovered great forest areas containing millions of cords of pulp wood in the Hinter land of Labrador. According to them, all members of a Boston expedition which explored Labrador in three aeroplanes, they found 2,000,000 acres of timber lands. The party took more than 3,000 pictures, which has given them a very good idea of the extent and density of the timbered areas.

The planes cruised for more than one hundred miles inland. As Labrador is well watered with rivers and lakes it should not be difficult to float the pulp wood down to the coast where it could be manufactured or shipped. it is said.

BRIDGEPORT WRITERS IN "EQUITY" UNION

Negotiations Expected Between New Organization and Post Publishing Company, Which Operates Three Newspapers

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 27.—The Bridgeport Newswriters' Equity Association has been formed, and application has been made to the American Federation of Labor for affiliation. Reporters and editors are eligible to membership. The association has no connection with the Bridgeport Press Club, though the organizers are men active in the club.

James H. Shay, until recently city hall reporter for the Standard-Telegram, is president, and Howard I. Comstock, city hall reporter for the Evening Herald, is secretary.

Split in Two Camps

Organization of the association has split the newspapermen of the city into two camps, a strong element of opposition to the union idea having developed.

The three papers of the Post Publishing Company—the Post, the Sunday Post, and the Standard-Telegram—employ a majority of the men who are employed as newspaper editors and reporters in Bridgeport, and these have had standing assurance with the management that none would be discharged without two weeks' notice.

Four Men Walk Out

When the union was organized, George Waldo, Jr., editor of these papers, proposed that, in equal fairness to the management, any reporter who planned to join the organization should notify him two weeks before leaving. Four reporters employed on the Standard-Telegram declined to do this and resigned.

"I have had no dealings with the Newswriters' Equity Association and have no way of knowing what their purpose in organizing is," said Mr. Waldo. "I do not believe they have gone far enough with their organization to know just what they will do. I suppose that they will submit a formal statement of this later, and until that time I can say nothing definite on behalf of our papers."

Herald Supports Union

The Herald, the Sunday Herald, and the Times are other newspapers in Bridgeport. The Herald is only five months old. It supports the "B. N. E. A." in an editorial which says:

"It is a sound move. The Equity is here to stay. In keeping with the rules of the American Federation of Labor, known all over the nation, the news writers will plan their course carefully and sensibly and for the best interests of all."

The men who resigned from the Standard-Telegram were Vincent Sexton, James L. McGovern, William McDonald and Ira French.

Pressmen and helpers on the Bridgeport Evening Post struck at 10 a. m. August 15, asking an increase of $6 per week. The strike was settled during noon-hour and the men returned to get out the paper. Morning Telegram pressmen recently won $4.50 weekly increase without a strike.

Advertise "Syracuse Day"

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 27.—The publicity committee of "Syracuse Day," the opening day, September 8, of the State Fair, have mapped out a plan of widespread newspaper advertising which they believe will make that day the biggest one in the history of the fair.

SHE HAS FILLED HER FATHER'S PLACE AS NEWSPAPER'S HEAD FOR 16 YEARS

MISS MARY E. JENKINS.

"A NEWSPAPER should be an institution to command belief, loyalty and respect in all its expressions." That was the ideal of Arthur Jenkins, founder and publisher of the Syracuse Herald. It is the ideal today of his daughter, Miss Mary E. Jenkins, who has been president of the Herald Company since the death of her father in 1903.

Mary E. Jenkins, who has so faithfully and ably carried forward to happy fruition the plans and policies of the newspaper's founder, was born at Syracuse, May 5, 1879, and educated in the public schools. She was an only child, and her father had in mind, during her school days the possibility of developing her into a newspaper woman, fitted to serve as his active associate in the publication of the Herald. He believed that newspaper work afforded a splendid field for women—and he adhered to this belief in the days when the fact had not yet been very strongly demonstrated.

When Miss Jenkins became president of the Herald Company, she considered it merely as a temporary arrangement. That was sixteen years ago, yet she still holds the position.

"What I have learned and what I have to learn concerning the business and its policies, as years pass, make the call of the office imperative," Miss Jenkins writes to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "Keeping acquainted with all departments and taking part in conferences on management and policy amply occupy my mornings each day."

The Herald's present home, which was opened in April, 1918, is the special pride of Miss Jenkins. In planning it she sought to insure the comfort and well-being of workers in all departments so far as is possible through modern construction. The maximum of natural light is provided in every part of the plant. Floor space was planned not only to prevent crowding now but to assure ample room for the future growth of the organization. In the planning of the little comforts and conveniences which mean so much to workers, the ingenuity of Miss Jenkins found full play. She intended that the Herald building, as well as the newspaper itself, should stand as a worthy monument to the genius and public spirit of Arthur Jenkins.

"Not business but instinct has kept me finally in the newspaper environment, learning daily that it is indeed an ever-widening field for women" says Miss Jenkins.

CYRIL G. PERRY, circulation manager of the Pittsburg Press, stopped over in New York this week on his way to Boston, where he will spend his annual vacation.

W. J. PATTISON, publisher of the Scranton Republican, who has been spending a two-weeks' vacation in the Maine woods, was a visitor in New York this week.

Omaha Bee Reporters Lose Their Strike

Early Defection from Ranks Causes General Rush for Old Jobs—Three Are Refused Re-employment

OMAHA, Aug. 26.—The strike of the reporters of the Omaha Bee was of short duration, though 14 of the staff met at 5 o'clock in the evening and decided not to return to work in the morning, but three of them appeared and asked for jobs before 11 o'clock the next morning. Others appeared by noon.

When those still out picketing the news "runs" to keep so-called "scabs" from gathering news found the old standbys coming in for news for the Bee, they made a rush for the Bee office to get their old jobs back before it was too late. Three of the strikers were refused jobs when they returned. The rest were all taken back.

Victor Rosewater, editor and publisher of the Bee, promised them certain individual increases in due time, but refused to meet their flat demand for a 35 per cent increase, and refused absolutely to negotiate with them collectively.

FRISCO WRITERS TO ORGANIZE

More Than 200 Attend Meeting Addressed by Labor Leaders

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 25.—About two hundred and twenty-five San Francisco and Oakland newspaper reporters met here early this week and took preliminary steps to organize a union.

The meeting was opened by an Oakland reporter, and the principal addresses were made by Daniel Murphy, a pressman and president of the State Federation of Labor, and William Bonsor, president of the San Francisco Labor Council. They spoke at length on the benefits of organizing an association of newspapermen. It was stated during the discussion that followed that it was the intention to affiliate with the International Typographical Union.

One hundred and eighteen signed the roll, and fourteen others, unable to be present, sent word that they intended to do so. A few have since withdrawn, it is said, and others seem to be seen whether the union will be perfected.

Most of the signers are from the evening papers.

NO UNION AT PORTLAND

Efforts to Organize News Writers Have Met with Failure

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 27.—Attempts to organize a news writers' union in Portland so far have met with failure and there is little indication that they will succeed. Several meetings have been called recently under the auspices of the Central Labor Council, but it is reported that only a few scattered members of the news organizations attended.

The typographical union has been active in the effort to promote organization among the news men with the prospect that should such an union be formed it would affiliate with the compositors.

Wants $2,000 for an Idea

Harry Waterman, 917 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, is sending to publishers a circular letter offering to furnish them the details of a plan to "double the present circulation of your paper within two months." He stipulates that if the plan is used, even in a modified way, the publisher is to pay him "at least $2,000."

POLITICAL CENSORSHIP DISTORTS NEWS FROM EGYPT AND TURKEY

Dr. W. T. Ellis, Back from Near East, Warns Editors Against Dangerous Propaganda Having Its Source in Official Quarters—Says We Must Tell "Unwelcome Truth"

"IT was the most fruitful foreign trip I have ever made," said Dr. William T. Ellis, of Swarthmore, Pa., just back from seven and a half months in the Near East for The New York Herald, in an interview for Editor & Publisher. "I had the good luck to get several big exclusive stories; and even being help up in Cairo's best hotel for nearly a month wasn't an unmixed evil, for it gave me time to lick into shape a book on the Egyptian situation, using my dispatches as a foundation.
